(c) Within 15 days after the filing of such certificate with the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia a notice shall be mailed to each stockholder of record in each of such corporations by the merged or consolidated corporation, setting forth the time when and the place where such certificate was filed; and if within 30 days after the mailing of such notice any stockholder or any of the companies affected thereby shall give notice in writing to the merged or consolidated corporation that he dissents from such contract, it shall be the duty of the merged or consolidated corporation within 60 days after the filing of such certificate to institute a proceeding for the appraisement of the shares of all of such dissenting stockholders. If any stockholder shall omit to give such notice of dissent within the period herein limited, he shall be deemed and taken to have assented to such contract. The said proceedings for appraisement may be begun by filing with the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a petition setting out the names and addresses of record of each of the dissenting stockholders, with the number of shares, the name of the company in which they were held, and the par value thereof, and any other pertinent facts, and praying for proper process against said dissenting parties and the appointment of three persons to appraise the value of all such stock.

The court shall thereupon direct such process to issue, by order of publication or otherwise, and upon its return duly executed shall appoint three such appraisers and designate the time and place for their first meeting. The court may fill any vacancy in the board of appraisers occurring by the refusal or neglect to serve or otherwise. The appraisers shall meet at a time and place designated, and after being sworn honestly and faithfully to discharge their duties they shall appraise the stock of each dissenting stockholder at its fair value without any regard to any appreciation or depreciation thereof as a consequence of such merger and consolidation, and said award when confirmed by the court shall be final and conclusive on all parties. The charges and expenses of the appraisers shall be paid by the merged or consolidated corporation. If anyone entitled shall refuse to accept the amount awarded him, or if for any reason it shall be impossible to make payment of the amount of the award to such person entitled to receive the same without unreasonable delay, the court may direct the same to be deposited in court. When the said company shall have paid or deposited in court the amount fixed by the appraisers as the value of the shares of the dissenting stockholder or stockholders, such stockholder or stockholders shall cease to have any interest in the said appraised stock or in the property or franchises represented thereby, and the merged or consolidated corporation shall receive back from the proper corporation whose estate, rights, property, and franchises it has acquired that portion of the consideration for such merger and consolidation or the proceeds thereof which otherwise would have been distributed to such dissenting stockholder.

If such payment or deposit is not made within 30 days after the confirmation of the appraisal, the amount of the award, with interest from the date of confirmation, shall be a judgment against the said merged or consolidated corporation and may be entered, docketed, and collected as other judgments in said court are by law entered, docketed, and collected. If the said company shall omit to institute the proceedings hereinbefore required within the time hereby limited, any stockholder giving such notice may institute such proceedings by a proper petition on his own behalf, or at the election of such stockholder the estate, rights, property, and franchises of the corporation in which he was a stockholder shall revest in such corporation, and the consideration received therefor shall be repaid to the said merged or consolidated corporation.

(d) Such merged or consolidated corporation is hereby authorized, subject to the approval of the Public Utilities Commission, to issue such stocks and bonds or other evidences of indebtedness and to execute such mortgages, deeds of trust, trust agreements, or other securities as may be necessary for the purposes.

(e) Such merged or consolidated corporation is hereby authorized to finance needed additions and improvements to its property and equipment or to retire outstanding bonds or other indebtedness by the issuance and sale or exchange therefor of additional stocks and bonds or other evidences of indebtedness under the same limitations as are provided by existing law for the issuance of additional bonds: Provided, That the certificate of the Public Utilities Commission showing authority for such issue shall first be obtained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 10, line 16, after the words "per cent," to strike out "of the fair value of the property of each company used and useful for the public service within the District of Columbia as ascertained by the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia under the provisions of section 8 of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913, entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes,' a tax of 50 per cent per annum of such excess," and insert "and not exceeding 7 per cent of the fair value of the property of each company used and useful for the public service within the District of Columbia as ascertained by the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia under the provisions of section 8 of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913, entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes,' a tax of 50 per cent; and upon operating income in each year in excess of 7 per cent upon said fair value, a tax of 75 per cent," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That so much of section 5 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, and such other provisions of law as impose a tax of 4 per cent upon the gross receipts of street railway corporations operating within the District of Columbia be, and the same are to that extent hereby, repealed, effective June 30, 1922, and beginning July 1, 1922, each such corporation operating within the District of Columbia shall pay annually to the District of Columbia in lieu of all other taxes on personal property and franchises a tax based upon its net operating income as follows: Upon operating income in each year in excess of 6 per cent and not exceeding 7 per cent of the fair value of the property of each company used and useful for the public service within the District of Columbia as ascertained by the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia under the provisions of section 8 of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," a tax of 50 per cent; and upon operating income in each year in excess of 7 per cent upon said fair value, a tax of 75 per cent. The said tax shall be based upon the operations of each calendar year, except for the calendar year 1922, in which it shall be based upon the operations of the last six months of that calendar year.

The term "operating income" as used herein bears the meaning now attached to its in the uniform system of accounts for electric railways as prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, but its component elements, accounts Nos. 201, 202, 213, and 214, shall include only revenues and expenses properly assignable to street railway operations within the District of Columbia by the said Public Utilities Commission, and from account No. 215 there shall be excluded the tax on operating income herein provided for.

On or before March 1 of each year each such company through its president or other chief executive officer shall make affidavit to the board of personal tax appraisers of the District of Columbia as to the amount of its operating income for the preceding calendar year ascertained in the manner herein provided. All taxes levied under the provisions of this act shall be assessed and collectible as are other personal taxes and when paid to the collector of taxes shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as are other taxes collected within the District of Columbia; and each of such companies, their respective presidents or other chief executive officers, shall be subject to the same penalties for failure to make the affidavits above provided for within the time prescribed and for making false affidavits in relation thereto and for nonpayment of said taxes when due as are now provided for similar offenses, respectively, by the personal tax law of the District of Columbia for the collection of such taxes. The real estate of such public-service corporations shall be taxed as other real estate in the District of Columbia is taxed, provided their tracks, conduits, cables, and underground and overhead structures and appurtenances shall not be taxed as real estate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3326) to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Survey, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask that that bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over upon objection.

STATISTICS OF FOREIGN COMMERCE.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 14, after the words "Secretary of Commerce," to strike out "All" and insert "75 per cent of the," so as to make the section read:

That the control and with it the expense of operation of the office known as the Bureau of Customs Statistics under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Treasury, now located in the customhouse, city of New York, State of New York, including all offices, clerks, and other employees of that bureau, official records, papers, mechanical and office equipment, furniture, and supplies now in use, be, and the same hereby is, transferred from the Department of the Treasury to the Department of Commerce. The Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized, if by him deemed advisable, to consolidate the said Bureau of Customs Statistics with the Division of Statistics of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce into one office, located in either Washington or New York, or partly in either place, in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce; that the statistical bureau hereby authorized to be located in New York under the jurisdiction and control of the Department of Commerce continue to occupy the premises in the New York customhouse which are now occupied by the Bureau of Customs Statistics, and that additional space as needed be assigned in the same building for its use by the Secretary of the Treasury upon request of the Secretary of Commerce. Seventy-five per cent of the unexpended appropriations or allotments from appropriations available for the maintenance and expense of operation of the said Bureau of Customs Statistics are, from the time when this act takes effect, deducted from the appropriation of the Department of the Treasury for collecting revenue from customs and transferred to the appropriation for the Department of Commerce, to be available from the time of such transfer for expenditure in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, for personal services, rental, or purchase of mechanical, tabulating, duplicating, and other office machinery, devices, furniture, and supplies, including their exchange or repair; subsistence, traveling and transportation expenses of employees for official purposes; telegraph, telephone, and all other contingent expenses not specifically included in the foregoing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 5, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Department of Commerce will furnish monthly to the collectors at the several ports a tabulation in detail showing the quantities and values of the merchandise imported and exported from their respective districts, and will furnish the Treasury Department upon request such special reports as may be necessary from time to time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 12, to change the number of the section from "2" to "3."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN STEWART, DECEASED.

The bill (S. 1282) for the relief of the estate of John Stewart, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William L. Browning, administrator of the estate of John Stewart, deceased, late civil engineer, for extra compensation for services rendered by him to the Government in connection with the Potomac Flats case, $2,000, which amount is hereby appropriated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1345) to amend an act entitled "Interstate commerce act," approved February 28, 1920, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks to have that bill passed over.

The bill (S. 1346) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, including the safety appliance acts and the act providing for the valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission, approved March 1, 1913, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair also requests that that bill be passed over.

PENSIONS OF RETIRED POLICEMEN AND FIREMEN, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 3169) to equalize pensions of retired policemen and firemen of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with an amendment to strike out all of section 1 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That on and after the passage of this act all persons upon the pension rolls of the police and fire departments of the District of Columbia who were granted relief in accordance with laws enacted prior to December 5, 1919, shall receive such relief as is allowable under existing law, and all persons now or hereafter receiving relief from the policemen and firemen's relief fund shall also be entitled to all pension benefits resulting from any increase in pay that has or may hereafter be granted by Congress: Provided, That no arrears of pension shall be granted for any period prior to an application for an increase in pension under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That any widow entitled to relief from the policemen and firemen's relief fund may hereafter receive not more than $60 per month.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the passage of this act all persons upon the pension rolls of the police and fire departments of the District of Columbia who were granted relief in accordance with laws enacted prior to December 5, 1919, shall receive such relief as is allowable under existing law, and all persons now or hereafter receiving relief from the policemen and firemen's relief fund shall also be entitled to all pension benefits resulting from any increase in pay that has or may hereafter be granted by Congress: Provided, That no arrears of pension shall be granted for any period prior to an application for an increase in pension under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That any widow entitled to relief from the policemen and firemen's relief fund may hereafter receive not more than $60 per month.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts to the extent that they are inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2921) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that bill had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2371) to further amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effective provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], or some other member of the committee, advise us as to just what that bill is?

Mr. NEW. I think it had better go over until the chairman of the committee is present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over on objection.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

The bill (S. 3255) to amend section 5136, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to corporate powers of associations, so as to provide succession thereof until dissolved, and to apply said section as so amended to all national banking associations was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] asked me, if he was not here, to request that that bill may be indefinitely postponed, as I understand from him that a House bill similar to it has already been enacted into law. I ask, therefore, that it may be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On motion of the Senator from Washington, without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

UNIVERSITY OF ARIZONA.

The bill (S. 2140) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the University of Arizona, State of Arizona, of Tucson, Ariz., for a certain described tract of land was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 2, after the words "United States," the committee proposes to insert "or its assigns."

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 9, after the words "United States," the committee proposes to insert "without further action on the part of the United States upon a finding of such failure by the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, there is an amendment on page 1.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has already been under consideration, and the amendment on page 1 was agreed to on April 22.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have here a letter from the attorney general of Arizona which gives some data, of which I think the Senate should be advised, respecting the particular title. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Opinion of the attorney general (No. 124).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OF ARIZONA, STATE CAPITOL,
Phoenix, May 3, 1922.

Subject: University of Arizona—Title to real estate.
Statutes and laws: R. S. A., 1913, Civil Code, paragraph 4475.

INQUIRY.

In granting lands by the United States for the benefit of the University of Arizona, should the title vest in the "University of Arizona" or in the "State of Arizona for the use and benefit of the University of Arizona"?

OPINION.

Paragraph 4475 of the Revised Statutes of Arizona, 1913, Civil Code, makes the "Board of Regents of the University of Arizona" a body corporate, with power to hold title to real property, and said paragraph reads as follows:

"The regents of the university and their successors in office shall constitute a body corporate with the name and style of the 'Board of Regents of the University of Arizona,' and by that name they and their successors shall be known in law; have perpetual succession; may sue and be sued; may purchase, receive, and hold property, real and personal, for the benefit of the State of Arizona and the use of said university; or of contracting and being contracted with; of making and using a common seal and altering the same at pleasure."

It is, therefore, the opinion of this office that the patent proposed to be issued should be made to the "Board of Regents of the University of Arizona."

W. J. GALBRAITH,
Attorney General.
F. W. PERKINS,
Assistant Attorney General.
GEORGE R. HILL,
Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. ASHURST. In accordance with the letter, I move, on page 1, line 5, before the word "University," to insert the words "board of regents of the."

The amendment was agreed to.

As amended, the bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent as hereinafter limited to the board of regents of the University of Arizona, State of Arizona, of Tucson, Ariz., for the following described tract of land, to wit: The southeast quarter of section 29, in township 9 south, range 23 west of the Gila and Salt River principal meridian in Arizona, said tract of land to be occupied and used solely for educational and investigational purposes: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States or its assigns all oil, coal, or other mineral deposits found in the land, and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same: Provided further, That this grant of land shall be subject to all prior valid existing rights under the land laws of the United States, and that if the grantee shall fail to use the land for educational or investigational purposes or shall devote the same to other uses the title thereto shall revert to the United States without further action on the part of the United States upon a finding of such failure by the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ASHURST, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the board of regents of the University of Arizona, State of Arizona, of Tucson, Ariz., for a certain described tract of land."

WILLIAM HENSLEY.

The bill (S. 1723) for the relief of William Hensley, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to William Hensley, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500, in full payment for injuries sustained by him while in the discharge of his duties at the navy yard, Washington, resulting in the loss of three fingers of his right hand, loss of his left eye, and other injuries incurred by him in the line of duty.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 449) for the relief of the Cornwell Co., Saginaw, Mich., was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kansas to give the reason why this refund is necessary? I should like a little explanation about it. It involves the amount of $8,000.

Mr. CAPPER. I think this bill probably had better be passed over, on account of the absence of the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

CORTEZ OIL CO.

The bill (H. R. 6525) for the relief of the Cortez Oil Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID B. LANDIS, DECEASED, AND JACOB F. SHEAFFER, DECEASED.

The bill (S. 1599) for the relief of the estate of David B. Landis, deceased, and the estate of Jacob F. Sheaffer, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this seems to be a bill disposing of quite a large sum of money. Is there any Senator present who knows anything about it?

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, that bill has been in charge of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], who is not here to-day; and I suggest that it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

The bill (S. 3472) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920 (41 Stat. L. p. 614), be amended by substituting for the second paragraph of said section the following:

"Every annuitant retired under the provisions of this section, unless the disability for which retired is permanent in character, shall, at the expiration of one year from the date of such retirement and annually thereafter until reaching the retirement age as defined in section 1 hereof, be examined under direction of the Commissioner of Pensions by a medical officer of the United States, or a duly qualified physician or surgeon or board of physicians or surgeons designated by the Commissioner of Pensions for that purpose, in order to ascertain the nature and degree of the annuitant's disability, if any; if an annuitant recovers and is restored to his or her former earning capacity or an earning capacity which would permit him or her to be appointed to some appropriate position available before reaching the retirement age, payment of the annuity shall be continued until the annuitant is placed in such position, but not in any case exceeding 60 days from the date of the medical examination showing such recovery; if the annuitant fails to appear for examination as required under this section, payment of the annuity shall be suspended until continuance of the disability has been satisfactorily established. The Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized to order or direct at any time such medical or other examination as he shall deem necessary to determine the facts relative to the nature and degree of disability of any employee retired on an annuity under this section."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BARGE "HAVANA."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES KELLY.

The bill (H. R. 7984) for the relief of James Kelly was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMBASSADOR TO HAITI.

The resolution (S. Res. 249) requesting the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate the power of the President to appoint an ambassador to Haiti without the advice and consent of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let that go over.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, that resolution should be stricken off the calendar. All that it amounts to is this: A resolution was introduced directing the Judiciary Committee to make a report. We made the report, and that is the end of it. The resolution should be stricken off the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be stricken from the calendar, as it requires no action on the part of the Senate.

CAPT. WILLIAM REES RUSH.

The bill (S. 3356) to commission Capt. William Rees Rush as a rear admiral on the retired list of the Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to commission Capt. William Rees Rush, United States Navy, retired, in the rank of rear admiral on the retired list, and that he shall receive the pay authorized by law for a rear admiral on the retired list: Provided, That the said William Rees Rush shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WRITS OF ERROR.

The bill (S. 2610) in reference to writs of error, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the writ of error in cases civil and criminal is abolished. All relief which heretofore could be obtained by writ of error shall hereafter be obtainable by appeal.

SEC. 2. That an appeal may be taken by serving upon the adverse party or his attorney of record and by filing in the office of the clerk with whom the judgment or order appealed from is entered a written notice to the effect that the appellant appeals from the judgment or order or from a specified part thereof. No petition of appeal or allowance of an appeal shall be required: Provided, however, That before such appeal shall become effective the appellant shall furnish the same security as is now provided by section 1000 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in case of writs of error.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLEM VAN DOORN.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 169) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to receive for instruction at the United States Naval Academy, at Annapolis, Mr. Willem van Doorn, a subject of the Netherlands, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and hereby is, authorized to permit Mr. Willem van Doorn, a subject of the Netherlands, to receive instruction at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that the said Willem van Doorn shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the course in the various departments of instruction, and that the said Willem van Doorn shall not be admitted to the academy until he shall have passed the mental and physical examinations prescribed for candidates from the United States, and that he shall be immediately withdrawn if deficient in studies or conduct and so recommended by the academic board.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNDERTAKING AND EMBALMING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 2083) to regulate the practice of undertaking and embalming in the District of Columbia, and to safeguard the public health, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments; on page 1, line 6, before the word "experience," to insert the words "a practical"; on page 3, line 1, to strike out "or" and insert "and"; on page 4, line 14, at the beginning of the line, to insert the words "once, at least" and a comma; on page 5, line 17, after the word "year" and the comma, to strike out the following: "so much thereof as the undertakers' and embalmers' board deems proper shall be divided among the members of said board in such proportions as the members of said board unanimously agree upon; and in the event of a failure of the members of said board to agree on the method of distribution, then in such proportion as the commissioners of said District determine," and to insert:

The members of said board shall be paid such reasonable compensation as the commissioners of said District may determine.

On page 6, line 18, after the word "has," to insert the word "actually."

On page 13, line 3, after the word "persons," to insert the word "legally"; and on line 10, before the word "physician," to insert the word "licensed," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, in and for the District of Columbia, an undertakers' and embalmers' examining board, consisting of five members, appointed by the commissioners of said District. Each of said members shall have had a practical experience of at least five years as undertaker and embalmer, and shall be actively engaged in the practice of undertaking and embalming in the District of Columbia, and so registered at the time of his appointment and during the entire term of his service. Each member shall be appointed for a term of three years, but may hold office after the expiration of that term until his successor has qualified: Provided, That the appointments first made and all appointments to fill unexpired terms shall be so arranged that the terms of not more than two members shall expire in any one calendar year. No appointee shall enter upon the discharge of his duties until he has taken an oath fairly and impartially to perform the same. Said commissioners may remove, after full hearing, any member of said board for neglect of duty or other just cause.

SEC. 2. That in order to provide for the issue of licenses to the several members of the undertakers' and embalmers' examining board of the District of Columbia, first appointed, the commissioners of the said District be, and are hereby, authorized to appoint a board consisting of the health officer of the District of Columbia and one physician legally qualified to practice medicine in the District of Columbia, and one undertaker and embalmer duly qualified to practice undertaking and embalming in the District of Columbia, to examine and pass upon the qualifications of the persons first nominated by the commissioners for membership on the undertakers' and embalmers' examining board; and said board shall be paid for their services from the funds of the undertakers' and embalmers' examining board such amounts as the said commissioners direct. No person shall act as a member of the said undertakers' and embalmers' examining board unless and until he has been examined as in this section provided and the fact that he is qualified to serve as a member of said board has been duly certified to said commissioners by the board appointed to examine him, unless he has been duly licensed by said undertakers' and embalmers' examining board.

SEC. 3. That annually the undertakers' and embalmers' examining board of the District of Columbia shall organize by the election of a president, a secretary, and a treasurer, each of whom shall hold office for one year and until his successor has been elected and qualified: Provided, That in case of vacancies occurring by death, resignation, or removal, or when any officer has held over beyond the term for which he was elected the election shall be for the unexpired term. The treasurer shall give such bond for the performance of his duties as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia require, and shall render to said commissioners accounts of his receipts and disbursements from time to time as said commissioners direct. Said board shall keep records of its proceedings, including the issue, renewal, and revocation of licenses, and such records shall be prima facie evidence of all matters contained therein in all courts in the District of Columbia. Said board shall, in the month of July of each year, make to said commissioners a written report of all such proceedings and of its receipts and disbursements for the preceding fiscal year ending June 30. The undertakers' and embalmers' examining board shall have a common seal and may alter the same at pleasure. Said board shall make all such rules subject to approval or revocation by the commissioners of said District as it deems necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of this act, including rules for determining in accordance with this act the qualifications of applicants for licenses and may amend such rules from time to time as it deems needful, but no rules of said board nor any amendment thereto shall take effect until the expiration of 10 days after its approval by the commissioners of said District, nor until the expiration of 10 days immediately following the publication thereof, once at least, in a daily newspaper published in the District of Columbia. The undertakers' and embalmers' examining board shall hold examinations for applicants for licenses as undertakers and embalmers and for the discharge of such other business as may come before it once in each year during the month of September and at such other times as the members of said board deem necessary.

SEC. 4. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to permit the undertakers' and embalmers' examining board of said District to utilize in the discharge of its official duties bodies in the custody of officers and employees of the District government for burial or cremation at public expense: Provided, however, That in the use of such bodies said board shall not mutilate them in such a way as to interfere with their subsequent use for the purposes of an act entitled "An act for the promotion of anatomical science and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia," approved April 29, 1902.

SEC. 5. That each applicant for a license to practice undertaking and embalming in the District of Columbia, and each applicant for the renewal of such a license, shall pay to the treasurer of the undertakers' and embalmers' examining board of said District, at the time of making application, such fee as is hereinafter provided; and each such fee shall thereupon become the property of said board for its official use. All expenses of said board shall be paid from the funds collected as aforesaid. If any balance remains on hand on the 30th day of June of any year, the members of said board shall be paid such reasonable compensation as the commissioners of said District may determine.

SEC. 6. That every person desiring to practice undertaking and embalming, or to style himself or to be styled an undertaker or embalmer in the District of Columbia, shall apply to the undertakers' and embalmers' examining board of said District for a license so to do and shall pay to the treasurer of said board $25. The application shall be accomplished with the certificate of two reputable persons not related to the applicant; that the applicant is not less than 21 years of age, of good moral character and free from habits liable to interfere with the performance of the duties which he desires to assume; that he has had a common-school education or the equivalent thereof; and that he has been lawfully practicing as an undertaker and embalmer for not less than two years in the jurisdiction wherein he has resided, or has been under the instruction for not less than two years in the aggregate of an undertaker or embalmer duly licensed and registered as such by the laws of such jurisdiction, and that in either event the applicant has actually embalmed arterially, cared for, and prepared for burial or shipment not less than 10 human bodies, said board shall examine said applicant theoretically and practically in anatomy, sanitation, disinfection, embalming, caring for, and preparing for burial or for shipment dead human bodies, and in the laws and regulations relating to communicable diseases and the duties of undertakers and embalmers in the District of Columbia, and if said undertakers' and embalmers' examining board is thereafter of the opinion that the applicant is in every way a suitable person to be licensed as an undertaker and embalmer, a license shall be issued to him in the name of said board, signed by the president and secretary thereof, which license, after having been duly registered in a book to be kept for that purpose in the health department of said District, shall entitle the person so licensed to practice as an undertaker and embalmer, and to style himself and to be styled an undertaker and embalmer in said District for a period of three years from the date thereof.

SEC. 7. That within the 30 days immediately preceding the expiration of any license issued or renewed under the provisions of this act the holder thereof, if he desires to continue to practice undertaking and embalming and to style himself and to be styled an undertaker and embalmer in the District of Columbia, shall apply to the undertakers' and embalmers' examining board of said District for the renewal of his license, paying to the treasurer of said board a fee of $5; and thereupon said applicant shall be entitled to receive from said board a renewal of his license authorizing him, after it has been registered with the health department of said District, to continue to practice undertaking and embalming and to style himself and to be styled an undertaker and embalmer in said District for a period of three years from the date of said renewal: Provided, That the time for making application for the renewal of his license may be extended in specific cases by the undertakers' and embalmers' examining board upon good cause shown for such action, but no such extension shall be granted unless the applicant satisfies said board that he still retains the qualifications necessary for the granting of an original license.

SEC. 8. That the undertakers' and embalmers' examining board of the District of Columbia shall make, so far as may be practicable, arrangements with analogous boards of the several States and Territories whereby due credit for license or registration as an undertaker and embalmer in such States or Territories will be allowed in the District of Columbia to persons so licensed or registered who desire to be licensed under the provisions of this act, and whereby persons licensed under the provisions of this act will obtain corresponding credit for their District of Columbia licenses when they apply for license or registration as undertakers and embalmers in said States or Territories; but no arrangement shall be made under the provisions of this section that is liable to lower the standards for licensing in the District of Columbia, and no arrangement shall be valid until it has been approved by the commissioners of said District. Persons applying for licenses under the provisions of this section shall pay to the treasurer of said undertakers' and embalmers' examining board such amounts as may be fixed by arrangements herein authorized in lieu of the fee elsewhere in this act provided for.

SEC. 9. That the license of any person as an undertaker and embalmer in the District of Columbia may be suspended for a given term or revoked if such person be found to have obtained such license by fraud; or if such person be found to be addicted to such habits as to render it expedient that in the interests of the public his license should be suspended or revoked; or if such person be found to be of an immoral character, or if he be convicted in a court of competent jurisdiction of two or more willful violations of the laws and regulations relating to communicable diseases, and to the duties of undertakers and embalmers in the District of Columbia. Upon presentation to the commissioners of said District of evidence satisfying them that the license of any person is subject to suspension or revocation under the provisions of this section, said commissioners shall cause a petition to be presented to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, sitting as an equity court, praying that such license be suspended or revoked; and said court is hereby authorized to hear and determine any case so presented and to make such orders and decrees revoking or suspending such license as said court deems proper. The filing costs of such proceeding shall be advanced by the undertakers' and embalmers' examining board out of the funds coming into its hands by its exercise of the rights and functions herein conferred upon it.

SEC. 10. That no person shall assist in the District of Columbia in procuring, or attempting to procure, by fraud, a license for himself or for any other person as an undertaker and embalmer in said District. No person shall forge or counterfeit in said District any license authorized by this act to be issued or any reissue of any such license.

SEC. 11. That every person who at the time this act takes effect is actually engaged in the practice of undertaking and embalming in the District of Columbia, who is then regularly licensed to do business as an undertaker and registered as such in the health department of said District, and who desires to continue in such business, may, within 60 days next after the organizaion of the undertakers' and embalmers' examining board, file with said board a written application for license to practice and do business as an undertaker and embalmer, under the provisions of this act, verified by the health officer and the collector of taxes, stating therein the fact and length of time of his having been so engaged in business, his name, age, and place of business, paying at the time of filing said application a fee of $5; and thereupon said board shall issue to said applicant, as speedily as practicable, a license to do business as an undertaker and embalmer in the District of Columbia, and said license so issued shall entitle the holder thereof to practice and do business as an undertaker and embalmer for the three years ensuing after the date thereof, after said license has been registered in a book provided for that purpose in the health department of said District: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any person so engaged, licensed, and registered from obtaining a license through examination: Provided further, That no license issued without examination under the foregoing provisions shall at any time entitle the holder thereof to serve as a member of the undertakers' and embalmers' examining board.

SEC. 12. That in the District of Columbia, from and immediately following the passage of this act, no person who is not licensed as an undertaker and embalmer, or specifically exempted from the provisions thereof, shall perform any of the duties of an undertaker and embalmer as hereinafter specified, or attempt to embalm any dead body or inject into the blood vessels or into any cavity of any such body any fluid for the purpose of disinfecting said body or of preserving or of preparing the same for burial or for shipment; nor shall any person not so licensed or exempt attempt to care for or prepare for burial or shipment any dead human body; nor shall any person not so licensed style himself an undertaker or embalmer, nor if he has authority and power to prevent, permit himself to be so styled.

SEC. 13. That every undertaker and embalmer shall at all times keep his undertaking establishment, and all vehicles, equipment, and paraphernalia used in connection with his business, in a clean and wholesome condition, and as soon as possible after having used his equipment or paraphernalia in connection with any body dead as a result of a communicable disease shall thoroughly disinfect the same.

SEC. 14. That any person who violates any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $200 or by imprisonment in the workhouse of the District of Columbia for a term not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 15. That the duties of an undertaker and embalmer as referred to in this act shall be, and the same are hereby, defined to be the embalming and preparing for burial, shipment, or other disposition of dead human bodies, or of any part or parts of such bodies, within the District of Columbia. From and after 60 days next following the organization of the undertakers' and embalmers' examining board of said District no permit for the removal, interment, disinterment, or transportation of any dead body, or of any part or parts thereof, in said District, shall be issued or granted to any person not regularly licensed as an undertaker and embalmer under the provisions hereof: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to prevent or interfere with any persons legally disposing of the body of any member of his or her family; or with any officer or employee of the United States or of the District of Columbia in the discharge of his official duties; or with any person acting under the provisions of an act for the promotion of anatomical science and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia, approved April 29, 1902; or with any licensed physician or dentist in the study, teaching, or practice of his profession.

SEC. 16. That all acts and parts of acts contrary to this act or inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANACOSTIA PARK.

The bill (S. 3448) to validate an agreement between the Secretary of War, acting on behalf of the United States, and the Washington Gas Light Co., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Whereas Congress has provided for the work of reclaiming and improving the land along the Anacostia River, in the District of Columbia, and made and declared it a part of the park system of the District of Columbia, to be known as Anacostia Park, and it has become necessary in the prosecution of the said work to settle certain questions in dispute between the United States and the Washington Gas Light Co. as to the ownership of land and to quiet title thereto: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the agreement made between the Secretary of War, acting on behalf of the United States, and the Washington Gas Light Co., a corporation, for the purpose of effecting an adjustment and settlement of all the matters at issue between the United States and the said company respecting the title and ownership of certain parcels and lots of land adjacent to the Anacostia River, the terms of which agreement are embodied in a formal instrument on file in the War Department, bearing date of September 8, 1821, and signed by J. M. Wainwright, Assistant Secretary of War, and H. S. Reeside, president of the said Washington Gas Light Co., is hereby approved, and the consent of Congress is hereby given to the carrying out of said agreement in full accordance with the tenor and terms thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

SPECIAL POLICEMEN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 3483) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint as special policemen such District employees as they may deem necessary for the protection of property of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to appoint as special policemen, without additional compensation, such employees of the District of Columbia as they may deem necessary and proper for duty in connection with District property, and to prevent violations of and to enforce laws and regulations within the District of Columbia.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this bill seems to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint as special policeman such District employees as they may deem necessary. I do not see the Senator in charge of the bill in the Chamber. Who is to pass upon the question whether it is necessary or not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia, I suppose.

Mr. FLETCHER. If I may make a suggestion, it will be seen that these men are to be appointed without additional compensation. It relates to such employees, who are in control of city property, as the commissioners may want to vest with police powers. I do not know anything about it, but I presume that is what it amounts to. It does not seem to call for any extra compensation or any additional number of policemen.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. FLETCHER. It appears to me to be a reasonable bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

C. M. RIEVES.

The bill (S. 3154) for the relief of C. M. Reives was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments; on line 3, to strike out the words "the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to relinquish," and to insert the words "there is hereby relinquished"; on line 4 to strike out "Reives" and to insert in lieu thereof "Rieves," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby relinquished to C. M. Rieves, of Marion, Ark., all right, title, and interest of the United States in the unsurveyed part of the east one-half of section 11, lying south of the unsurveyed north half of the northeast quarter of said section, in township 8 north of range 8 east of the fifth principal meridian in the State of Arkansas.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of C. M. Rieves."

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Chrisman on March 22, 1919, for lots 4 and 5 of section 29, lot 1, and the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 32, and lots 2, 3, and 4 and the south half of the northeast quarter and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 33, township 26 north, range 113 west, sixth principal meridian.

Homestead entry, Alliance, Nebr., No. 018311, made by Theodore A. Crapsey on January 21, 1918, for lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, section 3, township 29 north, range 42 west, sixth principal meridian.

SEC. 2. That the entry hereinafter named be, and the same is hereby, validated, and the Secretary of the Interior authorized to issue patent thereon upon submission of satisfactory proof of compliance with the law under which such entry was allowed:

Desert-land entry, Phoenix, Ariz., No. 031411, made by Isabelle S. Forest on January 10, 1920, for the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, section 23, township 14 north, range 4 east, Gila and Salt River meridian: Provided, That the payment of $1.25 per acre required under the provisions of the desert-land law shall be in lieu of the like amount at which this land was appraised when opened to entry.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow the following application to make entry:

Homestead application, Phoenix, Ariz., No. 039571, filed by Frank D. Thomas for the north half of the southeast quarter, section 9, township 1 south, range 2 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, subject to the reclamation law, and to allow said entryman, in complying with the requirements of the homestead laws credit for his residence upon, improvement, and cultivation of said land prior to the date of this act.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept proof of residence of Mary E. Battles, formerly Mary E. Burdett, upon the homestead entry of her husband Albert L. Battles, in lieu of residence upon her homestead entry, Portland, Oreg., No. 05473, made August 7, 1918, for the northwest quarter of section 11, township 7 south, range 2 east, Willamette meridian, in conformity with the selection filed by her husband under the provisions of the act of April 6, 1914 (38 Stat. L. p. 312).

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD MURPHY.

The bill (S. 3248) to provide for the issuing of a patent to Richard Murphy for a certain tract of land in what is known as the Big Pasture of Oklahoma, and upon which he has made full payment of purchase price, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRELD. That is a bill introduced by me. I would like to have it passed over, pending the consideration of an amendment to be offered to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CREDIT FOR MILITARY SERVICE IN HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The bill (H. R. 70) to allow credit for husbands' military service in case of homestead entries by widows, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the case of the death of any person who would be entitled to a homestead under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 25, 1919 (40 Stat. L., p. 1161), entitled "An act to extend the provisions of the homestead laws touching credit for period of enlistment to the soldiers, nurses, and officers of the Army and the seamen, marines, nurses, and officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States, who have served or will have served with the Mexican border operations or during the war between the United States and Germany and her allies," his widow, if unmarried and otherwise qualified, may make entry of public lands under the provisions of the homestead laws of the United States and shall be entitled to all the benefits enumerated in said act subject to the provisions and requirements as to settlement, residence, and improvement therein contained: Provided, That in the event of the death of such homestead entrywomen prior to perfection of title, leaving only a minor child or children, patent shall issue to the said minor child or children upon proof of death, and of the minority of the child or children, without further showing or compliance with law.

PUBLIC LAND ENTRIES.

The bill (H. R. 10443) to repeal sections 2453 and 2454, and to amend sections 2450, 2451, and 2456, Revised Statutes of the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 2453 and 2454, Revised Statutes of the United States, be repealed and sections 2450, 2451, and 2456 be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2450. That the Commissioner of the General Land Office is authorized to decide upon principles of equity and justice, as recognized in courts of equity, and in accordance with regulations to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, consistently with such principles, all cases of suspended entries of public lands and of suspended preemption land claims, and to adjudge in what cases patents shall issue upon the same.

"SEC. 2451. That every such adjudication shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior and shall operate only to divest the United States of the title to the land embraced thereby, without prejudice to the rights of conflicting claimants.

"SEC. 2456. That where patents have been already issued on entries which are approved by the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon the canceling of the outstanding patents, is authorized to issue a new patent, on such approval, to the person who made the entry, his heirs or assigns."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS AT MEDFORD, OREG.

The bill (H. R. 5684) to authorize the purchase by the city of Medford, Oreg., of certain lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and revested in the United States by the act approved June 9, 1916, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and is hereby, authorized to issue a patent to the city of Medford, Oreg., for the following-described lands, being a part of the lands revested in the United States by the act of Congress enacted June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. p. 218), to wit: The southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 25 in township 36 south, range 2 east, and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 13, in township 36 south, range 1 east, of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon; on condition that the said city first shall pay to the United States the sum of $2.50 per acre for all of said lands and in addition thereto the appraised price of the timber on all such lands as may be classified as timberlands: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found in the lands so granted and all necessary use of the lands for extracting the same, and that there shall be reserved to the United States, as to the said southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 25 in township 36 south, range 2 east, or to its permittees or licensees, the right to enter thereon and take and use the same for power purposes, in accordance with the terms and conditions of section 24 of the Federal water power act of June 10, 1920.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe all necessary regulations to carry into effect the foregoing provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM S. N. CALHOUN AND ZAIDEE BOATNER CALHOUN.

The bill (H. R. 7862) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent certain lands to William S. N. Calhoun and Zaidee Boatner Calhoun, residents of Catahoula Parish, La., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the payment of $1.25 per acre, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell and patent to William S. N. Calhoun and Zaidee Boatner Calhoun, residents of Catahoula Parish, La., the fractional west half of the east half of section 20, township 7 north, range 5 east, Louisiana meridian, containing 35.04 acres, more or less, land which they and their grantors have occupied under claim and color of title, and of which they have had actual possession, beneficial use, and enjoyment, believing themselves to be owners in good faith for more than 30 years: Provided, That application for the purchase of the described tract of land be filed at the United States land office at Baton Rouge, La., within 90 days after the passage and approval of this act, and that no adverse claim thereto be officially of record as pending when the application is allowed and the sale consummated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISRAEL BUTTS.

The bill (H. R. 8358) for the relief of Israel Butts was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Northern Pacific Railway Co., upon its filing with the Secretary of the Interior a proper relinquishment disclaiming in favor of the United States all title and interest in or to the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter, section 11, township 53 north, range 23 west, fourth principal meridian, in the Duluth, Minn., land district, under its indemnity selection, list numbered 551, embracing said tract, shall be entitled to select and receive a patent for other vacant, unreserved, nonmineral public lands of an equal area situate within any State into which the company's grant extends; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to permit, after the filing of such relinquishment by said railway company, the homestead entry of Israel Butts to remain intact as though said entry had been properly allowed, accept the proof offered, and duly issue patent thereon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF TIMBER.

The bill (H. R. 9495) for the protection of timber owned by the United States from fire, disease, or the ravages of beetles or other insects, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to protect and preserve, from fire, disease, or the ravages of beetles or other insects, timber owned by the United States upon the public lands, national parks, national monuments, Indian reservations, or other lands under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior owned by the United States, either directly or in cooperation with other departments of the Federal Government, with States, or with owners of timber; and appropriations are hereby authorized to be made for such purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SISKIYOU NATIONAL FOREST.

The bill (H. R. 10461) to add certain lands to the Siskiyou National Forest, in Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the north half of the northeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and lot 1 of section 31, township 39 south, range 6 west, of the Willamette meridian, are hereby added to and made a part of the Siskiyou National Forest in Oregon.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell the merchantable timber on the land added to the Siskiyou National Forest by section 1 hereof in accordance with the regulations governing the sale of public timber in the national forests, and the entire proceeds of any sale of the timber on such land shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States in a special fund designated as "The Oregon and California land-grant fund," referred to in section 10 of the act of Congress approved June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. p. 218), and be disposed of in the manner therein designated, the land added forming part of the area which revested in the United States under the provisions of the said act.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FENCING OF RESERVOIR SITES.

The bill (S. 3123) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act providing for the location and purchase of public lands for reservoir sites," approved January 13, 1897, as amended, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 1, to strike out lines 7, 8, and 9, and on page 2, to strike out lines 1 and 2, and to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, under such rules, regulations, and conditions as he may prescribe, upon application by such person, company, or corporation, may grant permission to fence such reservoirs in order to protect live stock, to conserve water, and to preserve its quality and conditions: Provided, That such reservoir shall be open to the free use of any person desiring to water animals of any kind; but any fence erected under the authority hereof shall be immediately removed on the order of the Secretary.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act providing for the location and purchase of public lands for reservoir sites," approved January 13, 1897, as amended, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence:

The Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, under such rules, regulations, and conditions as he may prescribe, upon application by such person, company, or corporation, may grant permission to fence such reservoirs in order to protect live stock, to conserve water, and to preserve its quality and conditions: Provided, That such reservoir shall be open to the free use of any person desiring to water animals of any kind; but any fence erected under the authority hereof shall be immediately removed on the order of the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK M. STEWART.

The bill (H. R. 6323) for the relief of Frank M. Stewart was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That homestead application 04809, Independence series, made by Frank M. Stewart for the southwest quarter of section 14, township 32 south, range 37 east, Mount Diablo meridian, California, be, and the same is hereby, validated, notwithstanding the fact that before making the said application he had perfected a former entry for 160 acres in Oregon: Provided, That the application thus validated and patent issuing thereon shall be subject to and contain a reservation to the United States of all the oil, gas, and other minerals in the lands so entered and patented and with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL FOREST LANDS.

The bill (H. R. 8119) for the relief of certain persons, their heirs, or assigns, who heretofore relinquished lands inside national forests to the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where any person or persons in good faith relinquished to the United States lands in a national forest as a basis for a lieu selection under the act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat. L. pp. 11, 36), and failed to get their lieu selections of record prior to the passage of the act of March 3, 1905 (33 Stat. L. p. 1264), or whose lieu selections, though duly filed, are finally rejected, the Secretary of the Interior, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, upon application of such person or persons, their heirs, or assigns, is authorized to accept title to such of the base lands as are desirable for national-forest purposes, which lands shall thereupon become parts of the nearest national forest, and, in exchange therefor, may issue patent for not to exceed an equal value of national-forest land, unoccupied, surveyed, and nonmineral in character, or the Secretary of Agriculture may authorize the grantor to cut and remove an equal value of timber within the national forests of the same State. Where an exchange can not be agreed upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized to relinquish and quitclaim to such person or persons, their heirs or assigns, all title to such lands which the respective relinquishments of such person or persons may have vested in the United States: Provided, That such person or persons, their heirs or assigns, shall, within five years after the date of this act, make satisfactory proof of the relinquishment of such lands to the United States by submitting to the Commissioner of the General Land Office an abstract of title to such lands showing relinquishment of the same to the United States, which abstract or abstracts shall be retained in the files of the General Land Office.

SEC. 2. That if it shall appear that any of the lands relinquished to the United States for the purpose stated in the preceding section have been disposed of or appropriated to a public use, other than the general purposes for which the forest reserve within the bounds of which they are situate was created, such lands shall not be relinquished and quitclaimed as provided therein, unless the head of the department having jurisdiction over the lands shall consent to such relinquishment; and if he shall fail to so consent, or if any of the lands so relinquished have been otherwise disposed of by the United States, other surveyed, nonmineral, unoccupied, unreserved public lands of approximately equal area and value may be selected and patented in lieu of the lands so appropriated or disposed of in the manner and subject to the terms and conditions prescribed by said act of June 4, 1897, and the regulations issued thereunder: Provided, That applications to make such lieu selections must be filed in the General Land Office within three years after the date of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCES KELLY.

The bill (H. R. 9275) for the relief of Frances Kelly was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, page 2, line 4, after the words "Indian Reservation," to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized in his discretion to issue patent to Frances Kelly for 160 acres of nonmineral unreserved public lands of the United States within the State of Idaho, in lieu of lands described as follows: The west half of the east half of the east half of the northwest quarter and the west half of the east half of the northwest quarter of section 32, township 35 north, range 2 east, Boise meridian, for which patent was issued her upon her final homestead certificate, but which it subsequently appeared was partly included in the land patented under Indian allotments Nos. 1133 and 1134, in the Nez Perces Indian Reservation: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior shall have alternative authority to cancel the trust patents issued for said Nez Perce Indian allotments Nos. 1133 and 1134, and to issue in lieu thereof new trust patents, subject to the conditions contained in the original trust patents as extended, eliminating only the west 10 acres of each of said allotments in conflict with the homestead patent to Mrs. Kelly; to determine damages and compensate the heirs for such loss in an amount not to exceed in all $1,000. To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to:

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN LASSEN COUNTY, CALIF.

The bill (H. R. 10554) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to Lassen County, Calif., for certain lands, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to issue patent to Lassen County, Calif., for the following tract of public land, to wit: The northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 4, township 37 north, range 11 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, Susanville land district, in the State of California, upon payment therefor to the Secretary of the Interior for the Government of the United States the full sum of $1.25 per acre, which patent shall be issued upon the express condition that Lassen County shall use said tract of land for county uses and purposes only: Provided, That whenever said lands cease to be used by said county for county uses and purposes only, or are attempted to be sold or conveyed, then, in that event, title to said lands and the whole thereof shall revert to the United States: Provided further, That such patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of all gas, oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found in such land, and the right to the use of the land for extracting the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOISE BARRACKS MILITARY RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 3332) to provide for a grant to the city of Boise, in the State of Idaho, of the use of a certain part of the Boise Barracks Military Reservation, under certain conditions, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission to the city of Boise, in the county of Ada, State of Idaho, to occupy and use a certain parcel of land constituting a part of the Boise Barracks Military Reservation, the property of the United States, situated in the said county of Ada, in the State of Idaho, described as follows: Beginning at the most westerly corner of the United States Military Reservation, thence north 69 degrees 35 minutes east 1,319.64 feet to the center of the Capitol Water Co. ditch; thence up said ditch south 26 degrees 29 minutes west 57.32 feet; thence south 69 degrees 41 minutes west 530.56 feet; thence south 35 degrees 42 minutes west 862.2 feet; thence south 70 degrees 3 minutes west 35.81 feet; thence north 20 degrees west 518.89 feet to the place of beginning, excepting therefrom any rights of said Capitol Water Co.; such occupative grant to be as and for a public park, and upon the agreement of said city of Boise to repair, maintain, and protect above-described part of the reservation and the public property thereon during the continuance of its occupancy at its own expense: Provided, That the said permission shall be subject to such conditions, restrictions, rules, and regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may terminate the said permission to use said grounds whenever and at such time as he may deem it expedient to do so.

SEC. 2. That any and all repairs, improvements, changes, and alterations in the grounds, buildings, and other appurtenances to above-described part of the reservation, made by the municipal authorities at Boise, shall be made only according to detailed plans submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War in each case prior to the commencement of any work under such plans, and all such repairs, improvements, changes, or alterations made by said city of Boise shall be made without expense to the United States, and in the event of the withdrawal of said permission, such improvements as the Secretary of War may deem valuable to the military service shall become the property of the United States without cost to the Government; and such structures as may have been placed upon above-described part of the reservation by said city of Boise, which are directed to be removed therefrom by the Secretary of War, shall be removed forthwith and the grounds placed in a condition entirely satisfactory to him, at the expense of the city, and no claim of any character whatever incident to the occupation by said city of such part of the reservation shall ever be made by it against the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC PARK AT CANON CITY, COLO.

The bill (H. R. 7053) to grant certain lands to the city of Canon City, Colo., for a public park, was considered as in the Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, in line 3 after the word "That" to insert "upon the payment of $1.25 per acre," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the payment of $1.25 per acre, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the city of Canon City, in the State of Colorado, the south half of the southwest quarter, the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section five; the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section six; the north half of the northeast quarter of section seven; the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter, and the north half of section eight, township seventeen south, range seventy west, sixth principal meridian; to have and to hold said lands for use as a public park: Provided, That the grant hereby made is, and the patent issued thereunder shall be, subject to all legal rights heretofore acquired by any person or persons in or to the above-described premises or any part thereof, and now existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States: Provided further, That there shall be reserved to the United States all coal, oil, or other mineral deposits that may be found in the lands so granted and all necessary use of the lands for extracting the same: And provided further, That the lands hereby authorized to be conveyed, as hereinbefore set forth, and all portions thereof shall be held and used by or for the said grantee for the purpose herein specified, and if the lands shall cease to be so used for a period of three years at any one time, they shall revert to the United States, and this condition shall be expressed in the patent to be issued under the terms of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Pool Shipping Co. (Ltd.), owner of the British steamship Clearpool, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said steamship and the United States Coast Guard cutter Apache, in Chesapeake Bay, on the 13th day of November, 1914, may be sued for by the said Pool Shipping Co. (Ltd.) in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the Pool Shipping Co. (Ltd.), or against the Pool Shipping Co. (Ltd.) in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3565) relating to the collection of taxes in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is under the impression that the matter covered by that bill has been taken care of in another measure, and will therefore ask that the bill be passed over.

LANDS AT CAMP KNOX, KY.

The bill (S. 3461) to amend the act of February 28, 1920, so as to authorize the acquisition of additional land and the disposition of certain lands already acquired at Camp Knox, Ky., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act approved February 28, 1920, entitled "An act to amend the Army appropriation act for 1920, and for purchase of land and to provide for construction work at certain military posts, and for other purposes," which prohibited the purchase of lands for Camp Knox, Ky., west of the Illinois Central Railroad tracks and north of the Tip Top-Grahampton Road, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize the acquisition of the necessary easements for the power transmission line leading from Louisville to the camp site both within and without said prohibited area, and also the acquisition within said prohibited area of a right of way for the Dixie Highway, and the sum of $40,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated therefor.

SEC. 2. That the further sum of $150,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated in addition to the appropriation authorized to be expended by the act of February 28, 1920, to complete the acquisition of title to lands now under condemnation within the limits of the present Camp Knox Military Reservation.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to sell at public or private sale, upon such terms as he may deem expedient, all Government-owned land lying west of the Illinois Central Railroad which was acquired as part of the Camp Knox Military Reservation prior to the act of February 28, 1920, prohibiting the further acquisition of land west of the Illinois Central Railroad and to execute and deliver in the name of the United States and in its behalf any and all deeds or other instrument necessary to effectuate such sales, and to sell or otherwise dispose of all Government improvements erected thereon.

That all moneys received as the proceeds of such sale, after deducting the necessary expenses in connection therewith, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the relief of the Indians of the Gila River and Papago Reservations in Arizona, to be used in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior for the employment of labor in road work and other reservation activities, the encouragement of native industries, and other purposes which will contribute to the welfare and support of said Indians: Provided, That any expenditures hereunder shall be reimbursed to the United States under such rules and regulations as the said Secretary may prescribe.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISRAEL FOLSOM, DECEASED.

The bill (S. 3308) for the relief of the heirs of Israel Folsom, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "deceased," to insert "on account of services rendered by said Israel Folsom on behalf of the Choctaw Nation in connection with the net proceeds claims of said nation," and on the same page, line 9, after the word "due," to insert "with the right of appeal of either party to the Supreme Court of the United States within three months after the rendition of said judgment," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to hear and adjudicate the claims against the Choctaw Nation of the heirs of Israel Folsom, deceased, on account of services rendered by said Israel Folsom on behalf of the Choctaw Nation in connection with the net proceeds claims of said nation, and to render judgment therein in such amount, if any, as may appear to be equitably due, with the right of appeal of either party to the Supreme Court of the United States within three months after the rendition of said judgment. Said amount, if any, in favor of the heirs of Israel Folsom shall be paid out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Choctaw Nation.

Notice of said suit shall be served on the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, and the Attorney General of the United States shall appear and defend said suit on behalf of said nation.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute the following:

That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to hear and adjudicate the claims against the Choctaw Nation of the heirs of Israel Folsom and Peter Folsom, both deceased, on account of services rendered by said Israel Folsom and said Peter Folsom on behalf of the Choctaw Nation in connection with the net proceeds claims of said nation and to render judgment therein in such amount, if any, as may appear to be equitably due. Said amount, if any, in favor of the heirs of Israel Folsom and of Peter Folsom, respectively, shall be paid out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Choctaw Nation.

Notice of said suit shall be served on the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, and the Attorney General of the United States shall appear and defend said suit on behalf of said nation. That either party in the above-mentioned case may, within three months of the rendition of any judgment by the Court of Claims in said case, appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, just a word of explanation. After this bill was reported favorably, with these minor amendments, by the Committee on Indian Affairs, it was found that Peter Folsom was a necessary party, and about all that this amendment does is to include his name. Otherwise, the amendment complies with the recommendations of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the heirs of Israel Folsom, deceased, and for the relief of the heirs of Peter Folsom, deceased."

PAIUTE INDIAN LANDS, NEVADA.

The bill (S. 3384) authorizing an appropriation to meet proportionate expenses of providing a drainage system for Paiute Indian lands in the State of Nevada within the Newlands reclamation project of the Reclamation Service, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the words "four thousand," to strike out "eight hundred and eighty-seven" and insert "and forty-seven"; in line 10, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$2,100"; and on page 2, line 3, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$49,603.05" and insert "$41,077.05," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, by agreement or otherwise, to bring 4,047 acres of Paiute Indian lands in the State of Nevada within the provisions and benefits of a drainage district, organized pursuant to the laws of said State, for the purpose of draining the lands within the Newlands irrigation project; and there is hereby appropriated the sum of $2,100 for the purpose of paying the first installment assessable against said Indian lands: Provided, That the total amount of the charges assessed against said Indian lands shall not exceed $41,077.05, and shall be payable in 20 annual installments: Provided further, That the Indian lands so drained by said district shall not be amenable to any lien which is subject to foreclosure created by the laws of said State for failure to pay charges when due: And provided further, That the money herein appropriated shall be reimbursed in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think some one ought to explain the purpose of this bill. I have not had time to follow through every bill here, but this appertains to reclamation. I want to ask if it is an appropriation and if the amount comes out of the tribal funds of the Indians?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill as amended.

Mr. McNARY. I think I shall ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over, on the request of the Senator from Oregon.

The bill (S. 3630) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 5 of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. General Staff Corps: The General Staff Corps shall consist of the Chief of Staff, the War Department general staff, and the general staff with troops. The War Department general staff shall consist of the Chief of Staff and four assistants to the Chief of Staff selected by the President from the general officers of the line, and 88 other officers of grades not below that of captain. The general staff with troops shall consist of such number of officers not below the grade of captain as may be necessary to perform the general staff duties of the headquarters of territorial departments, armies, Army corps, divisions, and brigades, and as military attachés abroad. In time of peace the detail of an officer as a member of the General Staff Corps shall be for a period of four years, unless sooner relieved, and such details shall be limited to officers whose names are borne on the list of General Staff Corps eligibles: Provided, That notwithstanding other provisions of this act touching eligibility for appointment and service of members of the General Staff Corps, any general officer of the line may be appointed Chief of Staff and when so appointed shall be eligible to serve as such for a period of four years unless sooner relieved. The initial eligible list shall be prepared by a board consisting of the General of the Armies, the commandant of the General Staff College, the commandant of the General Service Schools, and two other general officers of the line, selected by the Secretary of War, who are not then members of the General Staff Corps. This board shall select and report the names of all officers of the Regular Army, National Guard, and Officers' Reserve Corps of the following classes who are recommended by them as qualified by education, military experience, and character for general staff duty:

"(a) Those officers graduated from the Army Staff College or the Army War College prior to July 1, 1917, who, upon graduation, were specifically recommended for duty as commander or chief of staff of a division or higher tactical unit, or for detail in the General Staff Corps;

"(b) Those officers who, since April 6, 1917, have commanded a division or higher tactical unit, or have demonstrated by actual service in the World War that they are qualified for General Staff duty."

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we have passed a House bill which accomplishes this purpose in a different way, and that this bill had better go over.

Mr. WARREN. I did not understand the Senator's request.

Mr. FLETCHER. My understanding is that we have passed a bill which accomplishes this purpose in a different way.

Mr. WARREN. I do not think that is the case, and, if we have done so, it will do no harm to let this bill go through.

Mr. FLETCHER. My impression is that we have covered the same ground in another bill.

Mr. NEW. I think not.

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall not object if the Senator from Wyoming wants to have the bill passed.

Mr. WARREN. I prefer that it shall go through.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR PROJECTS.

The bill (H. R. 10766) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the bill can not be passed to-day; the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] wants it to go over until Monday; but before it is passed over I should like to have the Senate consider two or three certain minor amendments. The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] expects to be away on Monday, when we will probably call the bill up for consideration. He has an amendment or two to offer and I have one or two minor amendments. I would like to have those amendments considered and then have the bill passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). Without objection, that course will be pursued. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CALDER. I submit the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, after line 9, insert:

Westchester Creek, N. Y., in accordance with report submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 8, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection to the amendment. It is recommended by the engineers, but the report came in after the bill had been passed by the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. I now submit another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Add a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, and if he deems it fair and equitable to do so, annul a contract entered into on the 22d day of May, 1916, between the United States and the Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co., for the removal of Coenties Reef, East River, N. Y., and relieve the said company from further obligation thereunder as between the company and the United States.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I shall make no objection to the amendment, but I desire to say now that when the bill goes to conference the proper authorities of the State of New York will be notified of the nature of the amendment so that the matter may come up in conference and be taken care of there.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, may I make a brief statement in reply to what the chairman of the Committee on Commerce has said? I appreciate fully the view of the Senator. I may say that I believe the amendment is agreeable to the authorities of the State of New York. I know it is agreeable to the War Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted on page 9, line 2, after the word "allotments."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 9, line 2, after the word "allotments," it is proposed to insert the words "heretofore or hereafter made."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In line 5, on the same page, after the word "sloughs," I move to insert the words "or former channels."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. At the beginning of line 13 I move to strike out "$100,000" and to insert "$50,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 9, at the end of line 13, after the word "to," I move to insert the words "any one."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In line 14, on the same page, after the word "landing," I move to strike out the word "places" and to insert the word "place."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has an amendment which he desires to offer to the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to offer two amendments under the head of "Surveys," which do not change the real substance of the bill at all.

On page 20, after line 9, I move to insert the words:

Caloosahatchee River, Fla.

That will include the Caloosahatchee River in the survey.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Following the amendment just agreed to, I move to insert the words:

St. Lucie Inlet, Fla.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. For the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], I offer an amendment, the report on which came down from the engineers after the bill had passed the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington on behalf of the Senator from New Jersey will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, between lines 14 and 15, it is proposed to insert the following:

Absecon Inlet, N. J., in accordance with the report submitted by House Document No. 375, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I now ask that the bill may be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ACCOUNTS OF UNITED STATES TREASURER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3780) authorizing a credit in certain accounts of the Treasurer of the United States. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury and the General Accounting Office to credit in the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States certain items of unavailable funds, in the sum of $15,956, now carried in the accounts of the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston, Mass., and in the general account of the Treasurer of the United States as unavailable funds and representing a shortage found upon the discontinuance on October 25, 1920, of the subtreasury at Boston, Mass., in the amount of money belonging to the United States while in the custody of the assistant treasurer, the loss having occurred through no fault or negligence on his part, as set forth in Senate Document No. 400, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, and proposes for the purpose named to appropriate $15,956.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS LEAVITT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3754) for the relief of Louis Leavitt. It proposes to appropriate $620,623.33 to pay Louis Leavitt in reimbursement of certain moneys paid by him to the United States and for certain expenses incurred under circumstances set forth in the communication of the President of the United States to the Speaker of the House of Representatives dated the 6th day of May, 1922, and in the accompanying report of the Director of the Budget, House Document No. 313, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CROP INSURANCE.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 219) creating a joint commission to investigate the subject of crop insurance was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, subsequent to the time when I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 219 I offered a substitute for it which is now on the calendar. I therefore ask that this joint resolution may be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GEORGE R. CAMPBELL AND OTHERS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 513) for the relief of George R. Campbell, Milton B. Germond, and Walter D. Long. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to George R. Campbell, Milton R. Germond, and Walter D. Long, their heirs or assigns, $5,034.75, being the amount due them for services performed as United States deputy surveyors, in accordance with the report of the Secretary of the Treasury contained in House Document No. 683, Sixty-second Congress, second session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VIVIAN HOOD.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 862) for the relief of Vivian Hood. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Vivian Hood $2,500, in full compensation against the Government for injuries sustained as a result of being struck by a fragment of shell May 14, 1920, while witnessing a demonstration party from the Chemical Warfare Service at the State Fair Grounds, Des Moines, Iowa.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KINEO TRUST CO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8073) for the relief of the Kineo Trust Co. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Kineo Trust Co, of Dover, Me., a banking corporation existing by law, or its assigns, $5,000, with interest at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum from September 15, 1919, to September 15, 1920, the amount of the principal and interest due it as owner of a United States Treasury certificate of indebtedness of series T-10, No. 6768, dated September 15, 1919, and maturing March 15, 1920, of which the Kineo Trust Co. has established loss from its possession; but the Kineo Trust Co. shall furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury a bond in the penal sum of double the principal amount of the lost United States Treasury certificate and the interest accrued on such obligation, with such securety or surety as the Secretary of the Treasury may require to indemnify the United States against any loss from any claim that may subsequently be made upon such lost United States Treasury certificate of indebtedness.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FITZCHARLES DRY GOODS CO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8143) for the relief of Fitzcharles Dry Goods Co. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Fiztcharles Dry Goods Co., of Trenton, N. J., $137, on account of damage to property by a Government-owned motor cycle.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN ESCAMBIA COUNTY, FLA.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7967) granting certain lands to Escambia County, Fla., for a public park, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment in section 1, on page 2, line 5, after the name "Florida," to insert "upon the payment of $1.25 per acre," so as to make the section read:

That the public lands within the areas hereinafter described be, and the same are hereby, granted and conveyed to Escambia County, Fla., in trust, for the purposes of a public park, reserving, however, to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits within said lands and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, to wit: The north half northeast quarter section 34, township 3 south, range 32 west; south half southwest quarter section 26, township 3 south, range 32 west; lot 3, section 26, township 3 south, range 32 west; lot 1, section 27, township 3 south, range 32 west, comprising 253⅞ acres, all Tallahassee meridian, within Escambia County, State of Florida, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre; but nothing herein contained shall in any wise affect any claim of title heretofore acquired or asserted to any of the lands herein described.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN LINCOLN NATIONAL FOREST, N. MEX.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3702) providing for the acquirement by the United States of privately owned lands situated within certain townships in the Lincoln National Forest, in the State of New Mexico, by exchanging therefor lands on the public domain, also within such State, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, after the word "lands," to strike out "or any interest therein"; on page 2, line 1, after the word "lands" to strike out "or interest"; in line 15, after the word "empowered," to insert "in his discretion"; and at the beginning of line 18, to strike out "or interest therein," so as to make the section read:

That whenever the owner or owners of any privately owned lands, situated within township 18 south, range 11 east, or townships 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19 south, range 12 east, New Mexico principal meridian, within the county of Otero and State of New Mexico, and within the present boundaries of the Lincoln National Forest, shall submit to the Secretary of Agriculture a proposal for the exchange of said lands for lands upon the public domain situated in the county of Otero and State of New Mexico, and such Secretary shall be of opinion that the acquirement of the same by the United States for national forest purposes would be beneficial thereto, he is hereby authorized and empowered to transmit to the Secretary of the Interior such offer so made to him, together with such recommendations as he may see proper to make in connection therewith, together with a description of the property included in such offer and an estimate of the commercial or other value thereof, intrinsically or otherwise; and if he shall recommend the acquirement of the same by the United States under the provisions hereof, then, and in such event, the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered in his discretion to enter into and conclude negotiations with such owner or owners thereof and in exchange for such designated privately owned lands, and upon conveyance by the owner or owners thereof to the United States by a good and sufficient deed, to cause to be patented to such owner or owners such acreage of nonmineral, nonirrigable grazing lands not suitable for agricultural purposes except for raising grass, situated within the said county of Otero, State of New Mexico, of equal total value, as near as he may be able to determine, to the lands so conveyed to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 1, after the word "lands," to strike out "or interest therein," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That any lands conveyed to the United States under the provisions of this act shall, upon acceptance of the conveyance thereof, become and be a part of such Lincoln National Forest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MUSCLE SHOALS PROJECT.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 227) rejecting bids for the acquisition of Muscle Shoals was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the joint resolution may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Oregon.

VALIDATION OF PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

The bill (H. R. 10419) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that seems to be a duplicate of a bill which was passed this morning.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that this bill appears already to have been passed.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM], who reported the bill, is present.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that I hesitate to ask for the indefinite postponement of the bill because it may contain matter not in the other bill which has been passed.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, the measure has been very thoroughly considered. It applies to certain entries of public lands——

Mr. WARREN. I understand that; but we passed a bill this morning, of which this bill is apparently a duplicate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest that the bill go over.

Mr. WARREN. I think it had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WARREN subsequently said: Mr. President, a moment ago I objected to the consideration of House bill 10419 on the ground that we had already passed a similar measure. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] has checked up the bill for me, and we find that House bill 10419 contains all of the matter in the other bill—which was a Senate bill—and other matters as well; so I move to reconsider the votes whereby the Senate passed Senate bill 3235, Order of Business 642.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the motion of the Senator from Wyoming is to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 3235 was passed.

Mr. WARREN. That is my motion. I make it for the purpose of taking up now the bill that we passed over a moment ago, House bill 10419, Order of Business 819.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the vote will be considered as having been reconsidered. The Chair now lays before the Senate House bill 10419.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10419) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 3, after line 20, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 19, to insert:

Desert-land entry, Sterling, Colo., No. 010728, made by James H. Parker on February 2, 1910, for the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 12, township 11 north, range 46 west, sixth principal meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 5, to insert:

Preemption declaratory statement, Durango, Colo., No. 052069, filed by John A. Hawk on July 3, 1915, for the northeast quarter of section 11, township 39 north, range 18 west, New Mexico principal meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 5, to insert:

Small holding claim, Las Cruces, N. Mex., No. 5122, serial 019992, of Paul A. Marcellino, embracing tract 1 in sections 15 and 16, township 3 south, range 1 west, New Mexico principal meridian, containing 5.02 acres.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 12, to insert:

Forest lieu selection, Missoula, Mont., No. 01858, filed by H. P. Kennett, attorney in fact, embracing lot 9, section 14, township 8 north, range 21 west, Montana principal meridian, containing 17.06 acres.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 5, line 19, after the word "the," to strike out "entry" and insert "entries"; in line 20, after the word "same," to strike out "is" and insert "are"; in line 21, after the word "issue," to strike out "patent" and insert "patents"; and in line 23, after the word "such," to strike out "entry was" and insert "entries were," so as to read:

That the entries hereinafter named be, and the same are hereby, validated, and the Secretary of the Interior authorized to issue patents thereon upon submission of satisfactory proof of compliance with the law under which such entries were allowed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 7, to insert:

Additional homestead entry No. 029539, made by Erich von Buddenbrock, on November 1, 1918, under the act of December 29, 1916 (39 Stat. L. p. 862), for the south half of the northeast quarter, east half of the southeast quarter, southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 10, southwest quarter of the northwest quarter and west half of the southwest quarter of section 11, township 31 south, range 60 west, sixth principal meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I now move the indefinite postponement of the bill which we reconsidered, Senate bill 3235.

The motion to postpone indefinitely was agreed to.

LOUIS A. HOGUE.

The bill (S. 3799) for the relief of Louis A. Hogue was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Louis A. Hogue, of Crittenden, Va., owner and master of the auxiliary sloop Ivy, on behalf of himself and the crew thereof and as bailee of the cargo laden on board said sloop at the time of the occurrences hereinafter mentioned, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said auxiliary sloop Ivy and the United States steam tug S. T. Co. No. 2, in Norfolk Harbor, on the 8th day of April, 1919, may be sued for by the said Louis A. Hogue in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of Louis A. Hogue on behalf of himself and the crew thereof and as bailee of the cargo then laden on board said auxiliary sloop Ivy or against Louis A. Hogue, suing on behalf of himself and the crew thereof and as bailee of the cargo then laden on board said auxiliary sloop Ivy, in favor of the United States upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases of admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend said United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OWNERS OF STEAMSHIP "CONSTANTINOS PATERAS."

The bill (S. 3800) for the relief of C. Pateras & Sons and C. Lemos, owners of the Greek steamship Constantinos Pateras, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim asserted by C. Pateras & Sons and C. Lemos, owners of the Greek steamship Constantinos Pateras, for damages alleged to have been suffered in a collision which occurred in Hampton Roads on the 17th day of October, 1920, between the Constantinos Pateras and the United States naval vessel Falcon, by reason of said collision, may be submitted to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, the district in which said collision occurred, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of damages sustained by reason of said collision, either for or against the United States, upon the same principles and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same right of appeal: Provided, That such suit shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this Act: Provided further, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by the order of said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States.

SEC. 2. That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the said C. Pateras & Sons and C. Lemos, as owners of said steamship Constantinos Pateras, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid to those entitled thereto, or their proctors of record, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 9, 1920, entitled "An act authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty, etc.

HEIRS OF ALMON R. PROCTOR.

The bill (S. 1715) for the relief of the heirs of Almon R. Proctor was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the heirs of Almon R. Proctor $2,100, to compensate them for the death of their father on June 26, 1912, due to malarial poisoning contracted while in the discharge of his duty as sanitary inspector on the Panama Canal in the employ of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMBROSE I. MORIARTY.

The bill (S. 2750) to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Regular Army of Second Lieut. Ambrose I. Moriarity was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment on line 6, before the word "on," to strike out "major" and insert "captain," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and hereby is, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Ambrose I. Moriarty, second lieutenant on the retired list of the Regular Army, a captain on the retired list of the Regular Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Regular Army of Second Lieut. Ambrose I. Moriarty."

BILLS AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 385) to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act, approved August 11, 1916, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, as I recall that bill was adversely reported by the Committee on Agriculture some time ago.

Mr. WARREN. It is so stated on the face of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been reported adversely.

Mr. McNARY. In the absence of the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], I ask that the bill may go over at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3146) to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that had better go over also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 330) authorizing a special committee to report to the Senate the results of its investigation concerning the financial interest of Senators in matters affected by the pending tariff bill was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Had we not better let that go over? The Senator from Idaho is not here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT.

The bill (S. 3408) to amend section 126 of the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, as amended, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 126 of the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, as contained in section 3 of an act entitled "An act permitting any person who has served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment and to wear the same under certain conditions," approved February 28, 1919, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 126. Hereafter an enlisted man discharged from the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, except by way of punishment for an offense, shall receive 5 cents per mile for the distance from the place of his discharge to the place of his acceptance for enlistment, enrollment, or muster into the service: Provided, That for sea travel involved in travel between place of discharge and place of acceptance for enrollment, enlistment, or muster into the service only transportation in kind and subsistence en route shall be allowed: Provided further, That enlisted men under the age of 18 discharged on the application of either of their parents or legal guardian shall be furnished with transportation in kind from the place of discharge to the railroad station at or nearest to the place of acceptance for enlistment, or to their home if the distance thereto is no greater than from the place of discharge to the place of acceptance for enlistment; but if the difference be greater they may be furnished transportation in kind for a distance equal to that from the place of discharge to the place of acceptance for enlistment."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

The bill (H. R. 11212) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service with amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, is hereby amended as follows:

That any employee 55 years of age or over to whom the act of May 22, 1920, applies, who shall have served for a total period of not less than 15 years and who, before reaching the retirement age as fixed in section 1 of said act shall become involuntarily separated from the service, unless removed for cause on charges of misconduct or delinquency preferred against him, shall be granted an annuity certificate in the manner provided in section 7 of said act which will entitle said employee, upon reaching retirement age, to an annuity as provided in section 2 thereof equal to the annuity he would have received upon such separation from the service had he been of full retirement age: Provided, That the deductions made under the provisions of section 8 of said act of May 22, 1920, from such employee's salary, pay, or compensation prior to separation from the service shall remain in the "civil-service retirement and disability fund" subject to the provisions of section 11 of said act governing the return of deductions in the case of a deceased annuitant or employee.

SEC. 2. That any employee coming within the provisions of section 1 of this act shall have the right to apply for an immediate annuity in lieu of deferred annuity at the age of retirement; and if otherwise entitled, such immediate annuity shall be granted under the following conditions:

If the employee is eligible for retirement upon reaching the age of 70 years, his immediate annuity is to be found by multiplying the annuity which he would receive were he then 70 years of age by the decimal 0.951945 raised to a power the exponent of which is the number of years his age at such separation from the service is less than 70 years.

For mechanics, city and rural letter carriers, and post-office clerks, who are eligible for retirement at 65 years of age, the immediate annuity is found by deducting 47/900 of the annuity he would receive were he then 65 years of age for each year his age at such separation is less than 65 years.

For railway postal clerks, who are eligible for retirement at 62 years of age, the immediate annuity is to be found by deducting 47/630 of the annuity he would receive were he then 62 years of age for each year his age at separation is less than 62 years.

For the purpose of computing annuities as provided in this section fractional parts of a year in respect to the age of the applicant shall be disregarded.

SEC. 3. That in case such former employee be reemployed by the Government in a position affected by the provisions of the act of May 22, 1920, the annuity certificate issued under the provisions of this act shall be canceled and all rights and benefits under this act shall terminate from and after the date of such reemployment.

SEC. 4. That this act shall include former employees coming within the provisions of the act of May 22, 1920, who have been separated from the service subsequent to August 20, 1920, under the conditions defined in section 1 hereof: Provided, That in the case of an employee who has withdrawn from the "civil-service retirement and disability fund" his deductions under the provisions of section 11 of the act of May 22, 1920, such employee shall be required to return the amount so withdrawn with interest compounded at the rate of 4 per cent per annum before he shall be entitled to the benefits of this act.

SEC. 5. That any employee otherwise entitled to the benefits of the act of May 22, 1920, who, prior to the passage of this act, has been continued in the service without the approval of the Civil Service Commission as provided in section 6 thereof, or, who has been reemployed in the civil service subsequent to retirement, shall be entitled to credit for such subsequent service and to receive salary, pay, or compensation therefor at the regular rates, but shall not be entitled to annuity covering the same time; and this act shall operate as a direction to the Commissioner of Pensions to remove suspension of annuity in all such cases, and shall be warrant for the proper fiscal officer of the Government to make payment or adjustment of salary, pay, or compensation earned by such employee.

SEC. 6. That nothing contained in this act shall modify the provisions of section 5 of the act of May 22, 1920.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee. On page 4, line 1, I move to strike out "55" and insert "50."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 1, it is proposed to strike out "55" and insert "50."

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer this amendment because of conditions existing in many places throughout the country to-day. I have in mind two instances in my own State where a man was employed in the New York Navy Yard. He entered the yard as an apprentice at 16 years of age. A few months ago he was discharged at 53 years of age. He had been employed continuously for 35 years. The reason for his discharge was because of the fact that we have stopped building capital ships.

The Brooklyn Navy Yard formerly employed, in the days before the war, something like 6,000 men. That number of men has been reduced to about 3,000, and, of course, the Navy Department was compelled to discharge a very great many efficient men. It seems to me that in cases of this kind, where men have been employed, as I have indicated, for 35 years, and are just ruthlessly thrown out, they have a right to consideration in legislation of this character. It is just and equitable, and I hope the chairman of the committee will permit the amendment to be agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I appreciate what the Senator from New York says in regard to this matter; but I am opposed to this amendment, and I hope it will not prevail.

The bill as it passed the House made the age 60 years instead of 55. It was amended by the Senate committee so that the bill should apply to everyone in the employ of the Government who had served 15 years and who had reached the age of 55 years. I am satisfied that the amendment of the Senator from New York would not prevail in the House, even if we should adopt it here. The best we could hope to do in that respect would be to have the House agree to have the bill apply to employees who had been dismissed from the service without cause on their part after serving 15 years, and who had reached the age of 55 years; so I do not believe it advisable to put the limit at 50 years.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I sympathize a good deal with what the Senator from South Dakota has said. Fifty-five years ordinarily would be a fair age for retirement. The committee was very reasonable in the consideration of this subject; but, because of the reduction of the size of our Navy, the fact that we are not going to build these large capital ships necessarily has resulted in a large number of splendid men being dismissed from the naval service without any fault of their own.

I therefore request that despite the opposition of the Senator from South Dakota the Senate will agree to my proposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LEONIDAS SAWYER.

The bill (H. R. 4145) for the relief of Leonidas Sawyer was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

F. R. MESSENGER.

The bill (H. R. 7662) for the relief of F. R. Messenger was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS AGAINST UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT.

The bill (H. R. 7912) to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the word "Government," to insert "the word 'employee' shall include enlisted men in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps"; and on page 2, line 1, after the word "after," to strike out "the passage of this act" and insert "April 6, 1917," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That when used in this act the terms "department and establishment" and "department or establishment" mean any executive department or other independent establishment of the Government; the word "employee" shall include enlisted men in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

SEC. 2. That authority is hereby conferred upon the head of each department and establishment acting on behalf of the Government of the United States to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine any claim accruing after April 6, 1917, on account of damages to or loss of privately owned property where the amount of the claim does not exceed $1,000, caused by the negligence of any officer or employee of the Government acting within the scope of his employment. Such amount as may be found to be due to any claimant shall be certified to Congress as a legal claim for payment out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor, together with a brief statement of the character of each claim, the amount claimed, and the amount allowed: Provided, That no claim shall be considered by a department or other independent establishment unless presented to it within one year from the date of the accrual of said claim.

SEC. 3. That acceptance by any claimant of the amount determined under the provisions of this act shall be deemed to be in full settlement of such claim against the Government of the United States.

SEC. 4. That any and all acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ARMY OFFICER IN CHARGE OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

The bill (S. 3862) fixing the rank of the officer of the United States Army in charge of public buildings and grounds was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the total number of colonels of the line of the United States Army is hereby decreased by one, upon occurrence of the next vacancy: Provided, That the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds shall, during the term of his office, have the rank, pay, and allowance of a colonel of engineers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HUBERT REYNOLDS.

The bill (H. R. 2003) for the relief of Hubert Reynolds was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MICHIGAN BOULEVARD BUILDING CO.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, if it is not out of order, I should like to ask the Senate to revert to House bill 5918, on page 15 of the calendar. It was not possible for me to be in the Chamber at the time it was reached. It is a bill for the relief of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to returning to House bill 5918? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5918) for the relief of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment.

Mr. McCORMICK. The bill was reported by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] from the Committee on Claims, and the story is very brief. During the war the space in the Federal Building in Chicago occupied by the War Department proved inadequate, of course. The department sought additional space conveniently located, and advised the claimant that it desired space in the Michigan Boulevard Building, so-called. The representatives of the department furthermore stated that if the space were not placed at their disposal they would commandeer the space.

An agreement was reached on the basis of a lease for a term of years. The commandant of that district was transferred. Another commandant upon summary notice moved the headquarters, bag and baggage, from the space in the Michigan Boulevard Building for reasons alleged, upon which I will not dwell, and left the owners of that building with that space on their hands, they having made considerable outlay for the changes and arrangements necessary to accommodate the War Department.

If Senators desire, I am very ready to read the whole account of the transaction, but I think it will satisfy Senators to know that the bill having passed the House was scrupulously examined in the Committee on Claims, and without any solicitation on my part, or any argument on my part, before the committee it was reported by the Senator from Missouri from that committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, what is the total amount of money carried in the bill?

Mr. McCORMICK. About $31,000.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What was the length of the lease the Government entered into? How many years did it cover?

Mr. McCORMICK. On November 4, 1917, the department presented a draft of a lease——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not think it necessary to read all the correspondence. I understand that the claim is for the actual damage suffered by reason of the violation of the terms of the lease.

Mr. McCORMICK. Precisely.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want a little further explanation about why the Senate raised the amount from $18,931.69, as carried in the bill as it passed the House, to $31,931.69, nearly double the amount allowed by the House.

Mr. McCORMICK. Because the amount allowed in the bill as it passed the House in the judgment of the Senate committee was not full compensation for the loss of the claimants on account of the lease.

Mr. CAPPER. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Florida to this paragraph in the report of the committee, which explains the very point he has raised:

The House committee evidently acted under a misapprehension in deducting $18,000 from this amount, on the theory that the rental upon the space which was unrented (approximately 4,500 square feet on the third floor, and 3,000 square feet in the basement floor) should be credited to the Government in the amount of $18,000. (For the time November 1, 1917, to April 30, 1918, 18 months.)

As a matter of fact the rental upon this space was $1,000 a month and was actually occupied by the Government up to November 1, 1918.

The committee's information is that the House committee has recognized that it made an error and preferred to have it corrected in the Senate rather than to jeopardize the passing of the bill in the House after it was discovered.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator from Kansas has answered the question more briefly and better than I could.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the committee.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 6, strike out "$18,931.69" and insert in lieu thereof "$31,931.69," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, do pay to the Michigan Boulevard Building Co., a corporation of Chicago, of the State of Illinois, the sum of $31,931.69 in full satisfaction of all claims of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co. growing out of or pertaining to the occupancy of office space in the building of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co., at the southwest corner of Washington Street and Michigan Avenue, in the city of Chicago, by the War Department for central department headquarters during the period from December 15, 1917, to November 30, 1918, both inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

W. W. M'GRATH.

The bill (H. R. 2722) for the relief of W. W. McGrath, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on line 6, to strike out "$459.50" and insert in lieu thereof "$180.50," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $180.50 to W. W. McGrath, in full of all claims he may have against the Government for damages done to his automobile by a United States Army truck on October 21, 1918.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LIZZIE ASKELI.

The bill (H. R. 3034) for the relief of Lizzie Askeli, was considered as in the Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on line 4, to strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the sum of $2,500 to Lizzie Askeli, widow of Charles Askeli, and that the said sum is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ELWOOD GRISSINGER.

The bill (S. 3738) authorizing the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render final judgment in the claim of Elwood Grissinger, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments. On page 1, line 6, to strike out "the" and insert "any," on line 6; to strike out "manufacture, use and," line 7, to strike out "the manufacture, use, and," and insert "any unauthorized," on line 9, after the word "elsewhere," to insert "for any use outside the United States and exclusive of any use by the United States"; on page 2, line 1, to strike out "also," and insert "of"; on line 11, to strike out "the said manufacture, use, or," and insert "any unauthorized," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Court of Claims be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to hear, determine, and render final judgment in the claim of Elwood Grissinger for compensation for any unauthorized sale by the United States, and any unauthorized sale by others for the United States, either in the United States or elsewhere, for any use outside the United States and exclusive of any use by the United States of certain long-distance telephone repeaters, and of a system for the use of any repeaters on transmission lines, as disclosed and described in certain letters patent granted to said Grissinger by the United States, and also as disclosed and described in patents granted to him by certain foreign countries, and competent jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court in this matter, and the acceptance by the said Grissinger of the said judgment of the Court of Claims shall operate as a release to the United States from any further claim by him for compensation from the United States for any unauthorized sale of said patents or devices manufactured under it: Provided, That either the United States or the said Grissinger may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States upon any question which may, under existing law, be appealed from the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OFFICERS' RESERVE CORPS.

The bill (S. 3890) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 5 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920, hereinafter referred to as the national defense act of June 4, 1920, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"After the completion of the initial General Staff Corps eligible list, the name of no officer shall be added thereto unless upon graduation from the General Staff School he is specifically recommended as qualified for General Staff duty, and hereafter no officer of the General Staff Corps, except the Chief of Staff, shall be assigned as a member of the War Department General Staff unless he is a graduate of the General Staff College or his name is borne on the initial eligible list: Provided, That the name of any National Guard or reserve officer who has demonstrated by actual service with the War Department General Staff during a period of not less than six months, as hereinafter provided for, that he is qualified for General Staff duty, may, upon the recommendation of a board consisting of the general officers of the War Department General Staff, assistants to the Chief of Staff, be added to said eligible list at any time. The Secretary of War shall publish annually the list of officers eligible for General Staff duty, and such eligibility shall be noted in the annual Army Register. If at any time the number of officers available and eligible for detail to the General Staff is not sufficient to fill all vacancies therein, majors or captains may be detailed as acting General Staff officers under such regulations as the President may prescribe: Provided, That in order to insure intelligent cooperation between the General Staff and the several noncombatant branches, officers of such branches may be detailed as additional members of the General Staff Corps under such special regulations as to eligibility and redetail as may be prescribed by the President, but not more than two officers from each such branch shall be detailed as members of the War Department General Staff."

SEC. 2. That section 37 of said act, as contained in section 32 of the national defense act of June 4, 1920, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 37. Officers' Reserve Corps: For the purpose of providing a reserve of officers available for military service when needed there shall be organized an Officers' Reserve Corps consisting of general officers of sections corresponding to the various branches of the Regular Army, and of such additional sections as the President may direct. The grades in each section and the number in each grade shall be as the President may prescribe. Reserve officers shall be appointed and commissioned by the President alone, except general officers, who shall be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Appointment in every case shall be for a period of five years, but an appointment in force at the outbreak of war or made in time of war shall continue in force until six months after its termination. Any reserve officer may be discharged at any time in the discretion of the President. A reserve officer appointed during the existence of a state of war shall be entitled to discharge within six months after its termination if he makes application therefor. In time of peace a reserve officer must at the time of his appointment be a citizen of the United States or of the Philippine Islands, between the ages of 21 and 60 years. Any person who has been an officer of the Army at any time between April 6, 1917, and June 30, 1919, or an officer of the Regular Army at any time may be appointed as a reserve officer in the highest grade which he held in the Army or any lower grade. Any person commissioned in the National Guard and recognized as a National Guard officer by the Secretary of War may upon his own application be appointed as a reserve officer in the grade held by him in the National Guard. No other person shall in time of peace be originally appointed as a reserve officer of Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, Coast Artillery, or Air Service in a grade above that of second lieutenant. In time of peace appointments in the Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, Coast Artillery, and Air Service shall be limited to former officers of the Army, officers of the National Guard recognized as such by the Secretary of War, graduates of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, as provided in section 47b hereof, warrant officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, National Guard, and Enlisted Reserve Corps, and persons who served in the Army at some time between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918. Promotions and transfers shall be made under such rules as may be prescribed by the President, and shall be based so far as practicable upon recommendations made in the established chain of command. So far as practicable reserve officers shall be assigned to units in the locality of their places of residence. Nothing in this act shall operate to deprive a reserve officer of the reserve commission he now holds. Any reserve officer may hold a commission in the National Guard without thereby vacating his reserve commission."

SEC. 3. That the second paragraph of section 67 of said act be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"The appropriation provided for in this section shall be apportioned among the several States and Territories under just and equitable procedure to be prescribed by the Secretary of War and in direct ratio to the number of enlisted men in active service in the National Guard existing in such States and Territories at the date of apportionment of said appropriation, and to the District of Columbia, under such regulations as the President may prescribe: Provided, That the sum so apportioned among the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia shall be available under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War for the actual and necessary expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army when traveling on duty in connection with the National Guard; for the transportation of supplies furnished to the National Guard for the permanent equipment thereof; for office rent and necessary office expenses of officers of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard; for the expenses of the Militia Bureau, including clerical services; for expenses of enlisted men of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard, including an allowance for quarters and subsistence provided in section 11 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, medicine, and medical attendance; and such expenses shall constitute a charge against the whole sum annually appropriated for the support of the National Guard and shall be paid therefrom and not from the allotment duly apportioned to any particular State, Territory, or the District of Columbia; for the hire of clerks in the offices of United States property and disbursing officers, as approved by the Secretary of War; for the promotion of rifle practice, including the acquisition, construction, maintenance, and equipment of shooting galleries and suitable target ranges; for the hiring of horses and draft animals for use of mounted troops, batteries, and wagons; for forage for the same; and for such other incidental expenses in connection with lawfully authorized encampments, maneuvers, and field instruction as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, and for such other expenses pertaining to the National Guard as are now or may hereafter be authorized by law."

SEC. 4. That section 81 of said act, as contained in section 44 of the national defense act of June 4, 1920, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 81. Militia Bureau of the War Department: The Militia Division of the War Department shall hereafter be known as the Militia Bureau of the War Department. After January 1, 1921, the Chief of the Militia Bureau shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, by selection from lists of present and former National Guard officers, recommended by the governors of the several States and Territories as suitable for such appointment, who hold commissions in the Officers' Reserve Corps, and have had 10 or more years' commissioned service in the National Guard, at least five of which shall have been in the line, and who have attained at least the grade of major. He shall hold office for four years, unless sooner removed for cause, and shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major general of the Regular Army during his tenure of office, but shall not be entitled to retirement or retired pay. While serving as chief his reserve commission shall continue in force and shall not be terminated except for cause assigned. Until the chief is appointed, as provided in this section, the President may assign an officer of the Regular Army, not below the grade of colonel, to perform the duties of chief. For duty in the Militia Bureau and for the instruction of the National Guard the President shall assign such number of officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army as he may deem necessary. He may also assign for duty in the Militia Bureau three officers who hold or have held commissions in the National Guard and who at the time of assignment are reserve officers, and any such officer while so assigned shall receive out of the whole fund appropriated for the support of the National Guard the pay and allowances provided in the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, for officers of the National Guard when authorized by law to receive Federal pay. The President may also assign, with their consent, and within the limits of the appropriations previously made for this specific purpose, not exceeding 500 officers of the National Guard, who hold reserve commissions, to duty with the Regular Army in addition to those attending service schools, and while so assigned they shall receive the pay and allowances authorized in the preceding sentence, to be paid out of the whole fund appropriated for the support of the militia."

SEC. 5. That section 99 of said act be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 99. National Guard officers and men at service schools, etc.: Under such regulations as the President may prescribe, the Secretary of War may, upon the recommendation of the governor of any State or Territory or the commanding general of the National Guard of the District of Columbia, authorize a limited number of selected officers or enlisted men of the National Guard to attend and pursue a regular course of study at any military service school of the United States, except the United States Military Academy, or to be attached to an organization of the same arm, corps, or department to which such officer or enlisted man shall belong, for routine practical instruction at or near an Army post during a period of field training or other outdoor exercises; and any such officer shall receive out of any National Guard allotment of funds available for the purpose, the pay and allowances provided in the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, for officers of the National Guard when authorized by law to receive Federal pay and the travel allowances provided in section 12 thereof, and any such enlisted man shall receive therefrom, except as otherwise provided in section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, the same pay and allowances, including allowances for quarters, subsistence, and travel to which an enlisted man of the Regular Army of like grade would be entitled for attending such school, college, or practical course of instruction under orders from proper military authority, while in actual attendance at such school, college, or practical course of instruction, and for the necessary period of travel from and to his home station."

SEC. 6. That section 110 of said act, as amended by section 48 of the national defense act of June 4, 1920, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 110. Pay for National Guard enlisted men: Each enlisted man belonging to an organization of the National Guard, other than enlisted men of the sixth and seventh grades, shall receive compensation at the rate of one-thirtieth of the initial monthly pay of his grade in the Regular Army for each drill ordered for his organization where he is officially present and in which he participates for not less than one and one-half hours, not exceeding eight in any one calendar month and not exceeding 60 drills in one year: Provided, That no enlisted man shall receive any pay under the provisions of this section for any month in which he shall have attended less than 60 per cent of the drills or other exercises prescribed for his organization: Provided further, That the proviso contained in section 92 of this act shall not operate to prevent the payment of enlisted men actually present at any duly ordered drill or other exercises: And provided further, That periods of any actual military duty equivalent to the drills herein prescribed (except those periods of service for which members of the National Guard may become lawfully entitled to the same pay as officers and enlisted men of the corresponding grades in the Regular Army) may be accepted as service in lieu of such drills when so provided by the Secretary of War.

"All amounts appropriated for the purpose of this and the last preceding section shall be disbursed and accounted for by the officers and agents of the Finance Department of the Army, and all disbursements under the foregoing provisions of this section shall be made as soon as practicable after the 31st of March, the 30th day of June, the 30th day of September, and the 31st day of December of each year upon pay rolls prepared and authenticated in the manner to be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That stoppages may be made against the compensation payable to any officer or enlisted man hereunder to cover the cost of public property lost or destroyed by and chargeable to such officer or enlisted man.

"Except as otherwise specifically provided herein no money appropriated under the provisions of this or the last preceding section shall be paid to any person not on the active list, nor to any person over 64 years of age, nor to any person who shall fail to qualify as to fitness for military service under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, nor to any State, Territory, or District, or officer or enlisted man in the National Guard thereof unless and until such State, Territory, or District provides by law that staff officers, including officers of the Finance, Inspection, Quartermaster, and Medical Departments hereafter appointed shall have had previous military experience and shall hold their positions until they shall have reached the age of 64 years, unless retired prior to that time by reason of resignation, disability, or for cause to be determined by a court-martial legally convened for that purpose, and that vacancies among said officers shall be filled by appointment from the officers of the militia of such State, Territory, or District."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMMA KIENER.

The bill (S. 470) for the relief of Emma Kiener was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 11 to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,500," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the relief of Emma Kiener, of Salt Lake City, Utah, widow of Christian Kiener, deceased, for damages suffered through the destruction by soldiers stationed at Fort Douglas, Utah, of certain buildings erected on a homestead location, made in good faith, near Fort Douglas, Utah, by said Christian Kiener, the sum of $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANKLIN A. SWENSON.

The bill (S. 2262) for the relief of Franklin A. Swenson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6 to strike out "$350" and insert in lieu thereof "$300," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Franklin A. Swenson, of Salt Lake City, Utah, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300, to reimburse the said Franklin A. Swenson and others to condemn to the use of the United States certain lands for a post-office site in Salt Lake City, Utah, which action was abandoned by the United States after the value of said lands had been ascertained in such action.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF FUEL.

The bill (S. 3940) to declare an emergency respecting the production, distribution, and price of coal and other fuel, to create an additional agency of the United States with respect thereto, to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission in esablishing priorities and embargoes in the transportation of coal and other fuel in interstate commerce in order to prevent the exaction of unreasonably high prices for these commodities, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Should not that bill be indefinitely postponed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair remembers very distinctly that at his place on the floor he moved that the bill be indefinitely postponed. If the record does not so show, it ought now to show that the bill is indefinitely postponed. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PAN-AMERICAN PETROLEUM & TRANSPORT CO.

The bill (H. R. 9866) authorizing the Pan-American Petroleum & Transport Co. to sue the United States to recover damages resulting from collision was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business in the city and county of Los Angeles, in the State of California, owner of the oil tank steamer Edward L. Doheny, Junior, for damages caused by collision between said vessel and the torpedo-boat destroyer Henley, a naval vessel belonging to the United States, in the North Atlantic Ocean in the neighborhood of Fenwick Shoal Light Vessel, on or about the 14th day of July, 1918, may be sued for and submitted to the United States District Court in and for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court in admiralty and acting under the rules in admiralty, governing said court, in an action in which said Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. is hereby authorized to commence against the United States for the recovery of said damages. Said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said action and enter its judgment or decree therein for the amount of such damages, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of said Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., or against the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and according to the measure of liability prevailing in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same right of appeal: Provided, That such notice of said action shall be given upon or after the commencement of said action to the Attorney General of the United States, as may be provided by order of said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General upon receipt of such notice to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear for and defend the United States in such action: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. D. MONTGOMERY.

The bill (H. R. 1965) for the relief of Mrs. D. Montgomery was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mrs. D. Montgomery, of Carrollton, Tex., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200.90 to cover expenses incurred for hospital service rendered to Mrs. D. Montgomery and child as a result of injuries sustained by the forced landing of an airplane owned by the United States Government and operated by an officer of the United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT RUSSELL.

The bill (H. R. 5791) for the relief of Robert Russell was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Robert Russell, a citizen and resident of St. Cloud, Minn., who, without fault on his part, was, on the 16th day of February, A. D. 1920, severely injured by reason of the icy condition of the steps leading to the Federal building, or post-office building, at St. Cloud, Minn., the sum of $218; and the sum of $218 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF CROP INSURANCE.

The resolution (S. Res. 341) providing for an investigation of the subject of crop insurance was considered by unanimous consent.

The resolution had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with amendments, on page 2, in line 3, to strike out the word "farm" and insert the word "farmer"; in line 8 to strike out the words "to employ actuarial and other experts"; and in line 11 to strike out the words "The expenses of the committee, including necessary traveling expenses, shall be paid from the contingent fund," and to insert in lieu thereof "to be paid from the contingent expenses," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That a committee, to be composed of three Senators appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to investigate the subject of crop insurance, particularly with reference to (1) the kinds and costs of insurance now obtainable; (2) the adequacy of the protection afforded by such insurance; (3) the desirability of and practical methods for extending the scope of such insurance; and (4) the availability and sufficiency of statistics necessary to properly and safely issue additional crop insurance. Within six months after the adoption of this resolution the committee shall report to Congress the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, if any, upon the most practical and efficient methods whereby the farmer can obtain, at a reasonable cost, adequate and safe crop insurance.

Such committee is authorized to hold hearings at such times and places as it may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ stenographers to report such hearings at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, to be paid from the contingent expenses of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

NATURALIZATION AND CITIZENSHIP OF MARRIED WOMEN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12022) relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the right of any woman to become a naturalized citizen of the United States shall not be denied or abridged because of her sex or because she is a married woman.

SEC. 2. That any woman who marries a citizen of the United States after the passage of this act, or any woman whose husband is naturalized after the passage of this act, shall not become a citizen of the United States by reason of such marriage or naturalization; but, if eligible to citizenship, she may be naturalized upon full and complete compliance with all requirements of the naturalization laws, with the following exceptions:

(a) No declaration of intention shall be required;

(b) In lieu of the five-year period of residence within the United States and the one-year period of residence within the State or Territory where the naturalization court is held, she shall have resided continuously in the United States, Hawaii, Alaska, or Porto Rico for at least one year immediately preceding the filing of the petition.

SEC. 3. That a woman citizen of the United States shall not cease to be a citizen of the United States by reason of her marriage after the passage of this act, unless she makes a formal renunciation of her citizenship before a court having jurisdiction over naturalization of aliens: Provided, That any woman citizen who marries an alien ineligible to citizenship shall cease to be a citizen of the United States. If at the termination of the marital status she is a citizen of the United States she shall retain her citizenship regardless of her residence. If during the continuance of the marital status she resides continuously for two years in a foreign State of which her husband is a citizen or subject, or for five years continuously outside the United States, she shall thereafter be subject to the same presumption as is a naturalized citizen of the United States under the second paragraph of section 2 of the act entitled "An act in reference to the expatriation of citizns and their protection abroad," approved March 2, 1907." Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or amend the provisions of Revised Statutes 1999 or of section 2 of the expatriation act of 1907 with reference to expatriation.

SEC. 4. That a woman who, before the passage of this act, has lost her United States citizenship by reason of her marriage to an alien eligible for citizenship, may be naturalized as provided by section 2 of this Act: Provided, That no certificate of arrival shall be required to be filed with her petition if during the continuance of the marital status she shall have resided within the United States. After her naturalization she shall have the same citizenship status as if her marriage had taken place after the passage of this act.

SEC. 5. That no woman whose husband is not eligible to citizenship shall be naturalized during the continuance of the marital status.

SEC. 6. That section 1994 of the Revised Statutes and section 4 of the expatriation act of 1907 are repealed. Such repeal shall not terminate citizenship acquired or retained under either of such sections nor restore citizenship lost under section 4 of the expatriation act of 1907.

SEC. 7. That section 3 of the expatriation act of 1907 is repealed. Such repeal shall not restore citizenship lost under such section nor terminate citizenship resumed under such section. A woman who has resumed under such section citizenship lost by marriage shall, upon the passage of this act, have for all purposes the same citizenship status as immediately preceding her marriage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSA E. PLUMMER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2794) for the relief of Rosa E. Plummer; which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to Rosa E. Plummer, a former employee in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the provision of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, compensation hereunder to commence from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

SPILLWAY AND DRAINAGE DITCH IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

The bill (H. R. 243) providing for the construction of a spillway and drainage ditch to lower and maintain the level of Lake Andes, S. Dak., was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the bill will go over.

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator from Kansas think that bill ought to go over?

Mr. CURTIS. I reported the bill favorably, with amendments, but after I reported it I understood that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs had asked that the matter be held until his return. I am merely asking that the bill now go over, because I understand that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] desired that it should take that course. So far as I am concerned, having reported the bill, I think it should be considered and passed. However, on the suggestion of the Senator from South Dakota, I withdraw my objection to its consideration.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator, if he so desires, may ask that the vote may be reconsidered after the bill shall have been passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection to the consideration of the bill is withdrawn.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "authorized," to insert the words "and directed"; in line 6, before the word "feet," to strike out "two" and to insert "four"; in line 7, after the word "line," to insert "as found at the southwest corner of section 4, in township 96 north of range 65 west of the fifth principal meridian, in the State of South Dakota"; on page 2, line 1, after the word "of," to strike out "$60,000" and to insert "$50,000"; and at the end of line 2, to insert "Provided, That any person sustaining loss of property on account of the overflow of said Lake Andes, from and after the completion of the spillway and drainage ditch herein provided for, shall be forever barred from bringing suit against the Government of the United States," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to construct a spillway and drainage ditch that will lower and maintain the level of Lake Andes, S. Dak., to 4 feet above the present Government meander line as found at the southwest corner of section 4, in township 96 north of range 65 west of the fifth principal meridian, in the State of South Dakota; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the construction of said spillway and drainage ditch: Provided, That any person sustaining loss of property on account of the overflow of said Lake Andes from and after the completion of the spillway and drainage ditch herein provided for shall be forever barred from bringing suit against the Government of the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

FEES OF EXAMINING SURGEONS IN PENSIONS BUREAU.

The bill (S. 3540) fixing the fees of the examining surgeons in the Bureau of Pensions was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURSUM. That bill was not considered with the other pension bills yesterday; but it has been reported, and at the request of the Pension Bureau, and is for the purpose of regulating the fees of examining surgeons.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter each duly designated examining surgeon, except expert and foreign surgeons, and each member of a board of examining surgeons, appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions for the examination of pensioners and claimants for pension or increased pension, shall receive the sum of $3 for each examination and satisfactory report thereof: Provided, however, That the fee for each examination made by an examining surgeon at a claimant's residence for use in a pension claim shall be $5, and in lieu of actual traveling expenses there shall be paid the sum of 20 cents per mile for the distance actually and necessarily traveled, not exceeding the distance by the usually traveled route from the surgeon's office to the claimant's home and return: Provided further, That no fee shall be paid to any member of an examining board unless he is personally present and assists in the examination of the claimant: And provided further, That the report shall specifically and accurately set forth the physical condition of the claimant and include a full description of every existing disability.

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNAPPROPRIATED PUBLIC LANDS IN ARKANSAS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6863) granting to certain claimants the preference right to purchase unappropriated public lands in the State of Arkansas, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, in his judgment and discretion, is hereby authorized to sell, in the manner hereinafter provided, any of those public lands situated in the State of Arkansas which were originally erroneously meandered and shown upon the official plats as water-covered areas, and which are not lawfully appropriated by a qualified settler or entryman claiming under the public land laws.

SEC. 2. That any citizen of the United States who in good faith under color of title or claiming as a riparian owner has, prior to this act, placed valuable improvements upon or reduced to cultivation any of the lands subject to the operation of this act, shall have a preferred right to file in the office of the register and receiver of the United States land office of the district in which the lands are situated an application to purchase the lands thus improved by them at any time within 90 days from the date of the passage of this act if the lands have been surveyed and plats filed in the United States land office; otherwise within 90 days from the filing of such plats. Every such application must be accompanied with satisfactory proof that the applicant is entitled to such preference right and that the lands which he applies to purchase are not in the legal possession of an adverse claimant.

SEC. 3. That upon the filing of an application to purchase any lands subject to the operation of this act, together with the required proof, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the lands described in said application to be appraised, said appraisal to be on the basis of the value of such lands at the date of appraisal, exclusive of any increased value resulting from the development or improvement thereof for agricultural purposes by the applicant or his predecessor in interest, but inclusive of the stumpage value of any timber cut or removed by the applicant or his predecessor in interest.

SEC. 4. That an applicant who applies to purchase lands under the provisions of this act, in order to be entitled to receive a patent must within 30 days from receipt of notice of appraisal by the Secretary of the Interior pay to the receiver of the United States land office of the district in which the lands are situated the appraised price of the lands, and thereupon a patent shall issue to said applicant for such lands as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine that such applicant is entitled to purchase under this act. The proceeds derived by the Government from the sale of lands hereunder shall be covered into the United States Treasury and applied as provided by law for the disposal of the proceeds from the sale of public lands.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to prescribe all necessary rules and regulations for administering the provisions of this act and determining conflicting claims arising hereunder.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII is now completed.

MRS. E. H. JACKSON.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 681, being the bill (H. R. 8173) for the relief of Mrs. E. H. Jackson. By a mistake, the committee neglected to report an amendment to the bill which is necessary. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to reconsider the votes by which the bill named by him was ordered to a third reading and passed. Without objection, the votes are reconsidered.

Mr. CURTIS. I now move to amend the bill by inserting on page 1, line 4, after the word "pay," the words "to Mrs. E. H. Jackson."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 4, after the word "pay," it is proposed to insert "to Mrs. E. H. Jackson," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Mrs. E. H. Jackson—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

KINEO TRUST CO.

Mr. CAPPER. I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 810, being the bill (H. R. 8073) for the relief of the Kineo Trust Co. Since the passage of the bill my attention has been called to a clerical error in it. I ask that the vote whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed may be reconsidered in order that I may move an amendment to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill to which he refers was ordered to be read the third time and passed may be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. CAPPER. On page 1, line 13, after the word "maturing," I move to strike out the word "March" and to insert the word "September."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 13, after the word "maturing," it is proposed to strike out the word "March" and to insert the word "September," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to the Kineo Trust Co., of Dover, Me., a banking corporation existing by law, or its assigns, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 with interest at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum from September 15, 1919, to September 15, 1920, the amount of the principal and interest due it as owner of a United States Treasury certificate of indebtedness of series T-10, No. 6768, dated September 15, 1919, and maturing September 15, 1920, of which the Kineo Trust Co. has established loss from its possession.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DEFINITION OF BUTTER.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent to revert to Order of Business 847, being the bill (S. 3858) to define butter and to provide a standard therefor. The Department of Agriculture, I may say, Mr. President, is very anxious for the early enactment of this bill into law. The bill merely proposes to standardize the butter-fat content at 80 per cent.

Mr. CURTIS. That bill went over on the objection of the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no necessity for a reconsideration of the vote in reference to this bill, as it was simply passed over on objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. It was passed over and the Senator who objected is now absent from the Chamber.

Mr. CURTIS. The senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] objected. We shall have a calendar day on Monday next. I therefore hope that the Senator from Oregon will let the bill go over.

Mr. McNARY. I did not know that the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] had objected to the bill. His colleague, the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] reported the bill favorably, I, as acting chairman of the committee, directing a favorable report.

There can be no objection to the bill, but, as a matter of courtesy, I shall let the matter go over, provided the calendar may be considered on Monday next.

Mr. CURTIS. We shall have the calendar under consideration on next Monday.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CURTIS. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, September 11, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

MONDAY, September 11, 1922.

Rev. Wallace Radcliffe, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee for the rest and gladness of the past Lord's Day. May its influences beautify and sanctify the duties and experiences of the coming week, that we may walk before the Lord in the land of the living.

We remember again the darkness and fear in the Executive Mansion. We thank Thee for every measure of comfort and promise, and we pray for Thy special benediction upon her whom Thou hast appointed to this sickness and fear. Hear the prayers that arise from so many all over the land. Rebuke her sickness. Give knowledge, and skill, and success to those that care for her; and sustain her by the grace Thou hast promised, that in peace and quietness her soul may rest. Bless the President of the United States in these special hours of burden and fear. Let Thy rod and staff comfort him, that he may fear no evil.

And unto all of us help us so to use the world as not abusing it, knowing that the fashion of this world passeth away. Baptize Thy servants in the United States Senate with Thy spirit for all that Thou hast appointed to them this day to be or to do, that through them Thy will may be declared as a blessing to the land, and to the glory of Thy name. In Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

COMPULSORY SUNDAY OBSERVANCE.

Mr. WILLIS presented a memorial numerously signed by sundry citizens of Dayton, Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PUEBLO INDIAN LANDS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I desire to submit a report on behalf of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I think we had better have a quorum this morning. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Ernst	McLean	Shields
Ball	Fletcher	McNary	Shortridge
Borah	France	Moses	Simmons
Brandegee	Glass	Myers	Smith
Broussard	Gooding	Nelson	Smoot
Bursum	Hale	New	Stanfield
Cameron	Harreld	Nicholson	Stanley
Capper	Harrison	Oddie	Sterling
Culberson	Heflin	Phipps	Swanson
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Trammell
Curtis	Kellogg	Rawson	Warren
Dillingham	McCormick	Robinson	Watson, Ga.
du Pont	McCumber	Sheppard	Willis

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has been called from the city by reason of illness in his family.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BURSUM. From the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3855) to ascertain and settle land claims of persons not Indians within Pueblo Indian land, land grants, and reservations in the State of New Mexico, and I submit a report (No.

909) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. I inquire of the Senator from New Mexico if the bill is now on the calendar?

Mr. BURSUM. It is not on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill has just been reported from the committee?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from New Mexico make a brief statement as to its purpose? It is impossible to understand the bill by hearing the title read.

Mr. BURSUM. I will make a statement covering the object and purpose of the bill.

I will first say that the reason for urgency in the consideration of the bill is that titles to about 5,000 homes in New Mexico, which are situated upon land grants which were made by Spain in the seventeenth century are in question. The controversy is one which has gone on in New Mexico for a great number of years. The controversy arose on account of lands which were located on grants originally made by Spain in 1745. Those grants were what were called pueblo or town grants. Upon those pueblos or town grants were residing Indians and non-Indians. Those people have lived upon those grants for all these years. A few years ago the Government brought a suit against a party by the name of Sandoval. In that case there indirectly came up the question of the relationship between the Government and the Indians, and the legality of the title to those lands was threatened. An investigation was made by an agent of the Interior Department and of the Department of Justice. They investigated the whole question from the standpoint of the Government, from the standpoint of the Indians, and from the standpoint of the settlers. Finally the attorneys for the settlers and the attorneys for the Government met and conferred, and hearings were held before the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and also before the Secretary of the Interior. A bill was agreed upon vesting jurisdiction in the Federal court of the State of New Mexico to hear and determine the questions in controversy, and providing a remedy whereby title might be quieted to settlers occupying lands on the various grants.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the bill to which the Senator from New Mexico now refers the one which he has just reported to the Senate and for which he asks immediate consideration?

Mr. BURSUM. The bill which I have reported is exactly the one to which I have referred as having been agreed to by the parties in interest.

Mr. ROBINSON. Are suits now pending affecting the title to the lands in question?

Mr. BURSUM. There were such suits started, but by mutual consent it has been agreed to defer them until the passage of this proposed legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the report of the committee unanimous?

Mr. BURSUM. The report is unanimous.

Mr. ROBINSON. And it is recommended by the Interior Department?

Mr. BURSUM. It is recommended by the Interior Department and by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and also is agreed to by the parties to the controversy.

Mr. BORAH. How much land is involved in this controversy?

Mr. BURSUM. There are about 5,000 settlers on the land the title of which is involved, and the various tracts range from 2 acres all the way up to 100 acres or more in some instances. The specific basis upon which it is now proposed that title may be quieted is that recognition is to be given to titles which were granted by authorities under the Spanish Government, also by authorities under the Mexican Government, and also as the result of peaceable possession for 20 years prior to 1912; but in certain instances, where the court may find peaceable possession and the use of the land and improvements, the court may provide that such lands shall be appraised, their value ascertained, and in such cases payment shall be made to the Indians.

Mr. BORAH. Does this bill contemplate a suit to quiet title after the measure shall have been passed?

Mr. BURSUM. After the bill shall have been passed, suit must be brought by the settlers to quiet title.

Mr. BORAH. Then, no title will be quieted by virtue of the passage of the bill?

Mr. BURSUM. No; no title will be quieted by virtue of the passage of the bill. It will merely afford the machinery through which these titles may be quieted.

Mr. BORAH. It is merely, then, an act to enable the parties interested to bring suit?

Mr. BURSUM. Exactly so.

Mr. BORAH. And it establishes the rules by which suits may be maintained?

Mr. BURSUM. It proposes to establish the rules, and the rules will be as stated with reference to the rights of settlers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill; which is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the District Court of the United States for the District of New Mexico shall have original jurisdiction of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, in addition to the jurisdiction heretofore granted to said court, in the following cases:

(a) Crimes and offenses committed by any person whomsoever upon any lands included within the exterior boundary lines of any grant of land confirmed, or for which patent has been or shall be issued by the United States of America to the following-named Indian pueblos, to wit: The Pueblo of Taos, Pueblo of Picuris, Pueblo of San Juan, Pueblo of Pojoaque, Pueblo of Nambe, Pueblo of Tesuque, Pueblo of Santa Clara, Pueblo of San Ildefonso, Pueblo of Cochiti, Pueblo of Santo Domingo, Pueblo of San Felipe, Pueblo of Santa Ana, Pueblo of Cia, Pueblo of Jemez, Pueblo of Pecos, Pueblo of Sandia, Pueblo of Isleta, Pueblo of Laguna, Pueblo of Acoma, and the Pueblo of Zuni, so long as the legal title thereto shall remain in the said pueblos, respectively, or in any inhabitant thereof who shall be commonly known and accepted by the pueblo as a Pueblo Indian.

(b) Crimes and offenses committed by any person whomsoever upon lands included within the exterior boundaries of any reservation of lands set apart by the United States of America for the use or benefit of any of the pueblos above named, or for the use and benefit of any of the inhabitants thereof, commonly known and accepted by the pueblo as Pueblo Indians, so long as the said reservation so set apart shall continue as such reservation and be used by said Pueblo Indians for their purposes.

(c) Crimes and offenses committed by any person whomsoever upon any lands belonging to or claimed by any of the foregoing-named pueblos, acquired by said pueblo or any Indian or Indians thereof, by purchase, gift, or conveyance in writing, or in any other manner whatsoever, so long as said lands shall be in the possession of and the legal title thereto shall remain in the said pueblos or in any Indian or Indians thereof.

SEC. 2. That the District Court of the United States for the District of New Mexico shall have exclusive original jurisdiction in all suits or controversies of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, in addition to the jurisdiction heretofore granted to said court in the following cases:

(a) All suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, involving any right, title, or interest, benefit, use, possession, or right of possession of any person or corporation whomsoever, or of the United States of America, to any lands, included within the exterior boundary lines of any grant of land confirmed, or for which patent has been or shall be issued by the United States of America to the following-named Indian pueblos, to wit: The Pueblo of Taos, Pueblo of Picuris, Pueblo of San Juan, Pueblo of Pojoaque, Pueblo of Nambe, Pueblo of Tesuque, Pueblo of Santa Clara, Pueblo of San Ildefonso, Pueblo of Cochiti, Pueblo of Santo Domingo, Pueblo of San Felipe, Pueblo of Santa Ana, Pueblo of Cia, Pueblo of Jemez, Pueblo of Pecos, Pueblo of Sandia, Pueblo of Isleta, Pueblo of Laguna, Pueblo of Acoma, and the Pueblo of Zuni, so long as the lands involved shall not have been segregated from said grant by final decree of the District Court of the United States for the District of New Mexico.

(b) All suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, involving any right, title, or interest, benefit, use, possession, or right of possession, of any person or corporation whomsoever, or of the United States of America, to any lands included within the exterior boundaries of any reservation of lands set apart by the United States of America for the use or benefit of any of the pueblos hereinbefore named, or for the use and benefit of any of the inhabitants thereof, commonly known and accepted by the pueblo as Pueblo Indians, so long as the said reservation so made or set apart shall continue as such reservation and be used by said Pueblo Indians for their purposes.

(c) All suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, involving any right, title, or interest, benefit, use, possession, or right of possession, of any person or corporation whomsoever, or of the United States of America, to any lands belonging to, or claimed or over or upon which any easement shall exist, by any of the foregoing-named pueblos, acquired by said pueblo, or any Indian or Indians thereof, by purchase, gift, or conveyance in writing, or in any other manner whatsoever, so long as said lands and any right or easement therein and the legal title thereto shall be and remain in the said pueblos, or in any Indian or Indians thereof.

(d) All suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, involving any right, title, or interest, benefit, use, possession, or right of possession, of any personal property owned, or claimed to be owned, by any of the hereinbefore-named pueblos, or any of the Indian inhabitants thereof, commonly known and accepted by the pueblo as Pueblo Indians, as well as all actions ex contractu and ex delictu wherein any one of said pueblos or any one of the Indian inhabitants thereof, commonly known and accepted by the pueblo as Pueblo Indians, shall be a party.

(e) All suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, involving any question of internal affairs or the government of any of said pueblos, including the right to hold office in said pueblo in accordance with the customs and regulations of said pueblo.

SEC. 3. That the State of New Mexico and the courts thereof shall have jurisdiction over all lands and in all questions arising in relation thereto, which shall have been segregated from any of the pueblo grants hereinbefore enumerated by final decree, as well as also over all lands and as to all questions or controversies arising in relation thereto which have ceased to be reservations as hereinbefore provided, or which shall have been legally sold or disposed of by any of said pueblos or any Indian or Indians thereof, as now or hereafter provided by law.

SEC. 4. That all suits brought under the provisions of this act shall be brought by or against the pueblo or the individual Pueblo Indian, and in all actions brought under the provisions hereof involving any pueblo or the rights thereof, said pueblo shall be designated and styled as "The pueblo of ———," inserting the name of said pueblo, and any individual Pueblo Indian shall be designated and styled "———, a Pueblo Indian of the pueblo of ———," inserting the name of said Pueblo Indian, if known, and the name of said pueblo.

SEC. 5. That in all civil cases brought under the provisions of this act service of process shall be had and made upon the pueblo or upon any Indian inhabitant of such pueblo, commonly known and accepted by said pueblo as a Pueblo Indian, by serving the same upon the governor of said pueblo, or in his absence, or in case of any vacancy in said governorship, by serving the same upon any officer of said pueblo then acting in his place and stead, and, in the case of any individual Indian inhabitant of any pueblo, upon both the governor or other officer acting in his place and stead and the individual Indian.

SEC. 6. That pleading, practice, procedure, and rules of evidence shall be the same in all causes arising under this act as in other civil and criminal causes in the Federal courts, unless hereinafter otherwise set forth and declared.

SEC. 7. That all persons or corporations who, prior to and since the date of the ratification and proclamation of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, July 4, 1848, either in person or through their predecessors, in claim of interest, grantors, privies, or agents, have had actual, open, notorious, exclusive, and continuous possession, under color of title, of, in, or to any lands included within the exterior boundaries of any grant of land confirmed or patented to any of the pueblos hereinbefore named by the United States of America, shall be entitled to a decree in their respective favor for all of the lands so possessed, and the district court shall, by its decree, segregate the said land from the said pueblo grant, and shall ascertain and adjudicate the true boundaries and extent thereof, in the proof of which character of possession and of the boundaries and extent thereof secondary evidence shall be admissible and competent. Upon the entry of any decree segregating any of the lands of any pueblo grant pursuant to the provisions and requirements of this paragraph, the clerk of the said court shall forthwith send to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States a certified copy of said decree, and the said tract of land so segregated having been surveyed by or under his direction, according to the boundaries and extent as set forth in said decree, said Secretary of the Interior shall cause patent therefor to be issued to said person, his heirs or assigns, or to such corporation or its successors in interest. In all cases arising under the provisions of this act wherein the original title and the adverse possession thereunder antedates the dates of ratification and proclamation of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the remedy, relief, and procedure in this paragraph provided shall be exclusive and either party to any suit brought pursuant to the provisions of this act may make proof of date and source of title and the possession thereunder.

SEC. 8. That all persons who, or corporations which, for more than 10 years prior to June 20, 1910, either in person or through their respective predecessors in claim of interest, grantors, privies, or agents, have had actual, open, notorious, exclusive and continuous possession, with or without color of title, of any lands falling or included within the exterior boundaries of any grant confirmed or patented to any of the pueblos in this act specified, and all persons who or corporations which in person or through their respective predecessors in claim of interest or grantors claim any such lands lying within the exterior boundaries of any of said pueblo grants, under valid grant from the Governments of Spain or Mexico, or under any grant, act of confirmation or patent of the United States of America, shall be entitled to a decree in their favor respectively for the whole of the lands so claimed, and the district court shall in its decree segregate the said land from the said pueblo grant and shall ascertain and adjudicate the area and extent thereof and the value of the said lands without improvement, if any there shall be thereon, as of the date of the decree, and upon the entry of any decree provided for in this paragraph segregating any of the lands of any pueblo grant therefrom, the clerk of the district court shall forthwith send to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States of America a certified copy of the final decree, and, thereupon, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be surveyed from the public lands of the United States of America a tract or tracts of land as nearly adjacent to the said pueblo as possible, equal in area and value or equal in value to the lands so segregated in said final decree and shall cause patent therefor to be issued to the pueblo entitled thereto; but if it be found that such lands are not available then the Secretary of the Interior shall place to the credit of the said pueblo the value of the said land so segregated in cash as provided in said adjudication, and shall disburse the same to the best advantage and interest of the said pueblo.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior shall promulgate all necessary rules and regulations relative to the selection of such lieu lands to be patented to any pueblo as in this act provided, and all necessary surveys, field notes, and plats made or necessary in ascertaining the extent and area of any land to be segregated from any pueblo shall be made under the direction of the surveyor general of the United States for New Mexico upon instructions to that effect from the Secretary of the Interior, without cost to litigants.

SEC. 10. That whenever upon, through, or over, in whole or in part, any lands of any pueblo grant sought to be segregated, or segregated, from any Indian pueblo under the provisions of this act, there shall be located any river, creek, lake, pond, spring, reservoir, dam, irrigating ditch, canal, or other watercourse or source of water supply used for the irrigation and cultivation of any lands of any Indian pueblo not included within the areas so segregated, or sought to be segregated, the right of the pueblo to the use and benefit of any waters existing or found in any such river, creek, lake, pond, spring, reservoir, dam, irrigating ditch, canal, or other watercourse shall, in case of suit brought therefor, be decreed to the said pueblo according to its appropriation thereof for the irrigation of the lands of the pueblo as irrigated and cultivated at the time of the passage and approval hereof, and any further and additional use of such waters and the appropriation thereof shall be acquired, determined, and adjudicated according to the laws of the State of New Mexico governing the appropriation and use of waters for irrigation purposes.

SEC. 11. That all proceedings under this act in the said district court shall be without costs to parties.

SEC. 12. That any party aggrieved by any final judgment or decree of the district court in any of the foregoing cases, either civil or criminal, shall have the right to an appeal or writ of error as in other civil and criminal cases.

SEC. 13. That in any action brought under the provisions of this act in which the segregation of any lands of any pueblo is sought the United States of America, in its capacity of guardian of the said Pueblo Indians, shall appear and shall be represented by some person learned in the law, who shall be named and designated by the Attorney General of the United States for that purpose, with such assistants, legal and clerical, and with such compensation as to the Attorney General shall seem meet and proper.

SEC. 14. That all suits which may be brought by persons or corporations other than the pueblos hereinbefore named and the inhabitants thereof, commonly known and accepted by the pueblo as Pueblo Indians, involving any right, title, interest, benefit, use, possession, or right of possession, of any such person or corporation, to any lands falling or included within the exterior boundary lines of any of the pueblo grants in this act enumerated and specified shall be commenced within five years from the date of the passage and approval of this act; otherwise the same shall be forever barred, and said persons or corporations shall lose all rights and benefits by this act provided.

SEC. 15. That surveys of lands within pueblo grants and reservations held and occupied by persons not Indian, or corporations, as heretofore made under the supervision of the surveyor general for New Mexico, and plats and field notes of which have been filed in his office, shall be accepted as prima facie evidence of the boundaries of lands therein described.

SEC. 16. That in cases where lands within such grants, or any part or parcel thereof, shall at the trial be shown not to have been held and occupied by the claimants, non-Indian, for the period fixed by section 8 of this act for the acquiring of title under the provisions hereof, but have been purchased, or acquired by inheritance, used and cultivated, or purchased, or acquired by inheritance, held, occupied, or otherwise used for pastoral purposes under fence, in good faith by the claimant, the court shall make a special finding determining the boundaries of the tract so purchased, acquired, held and occupied, used and cultivated, in good faith, as well as also the value of the land without improvement, and shall report such finding to the Secretary of the Interior, and the claimant, if the Secretary of the Interior shall approve an application made by the claimant for said land, may purchase the same at the value found by the court, and the purchase price shall be held in trust and expended for the pueblo under such rules and regulations as shall be from time to time prescribed for the benefit of the pueblo within whose grant any such tract of land shall be situated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVISION OF MINING LAWS.

Mr. KING presented the report of a subcommittee of the mining committee to the Salt Lake Commercial Club, of Salt Lake City, Utah, relative to the provisions of the so-called Arentz bill, being the bill (H. R. 7736) to revise, amend, and codify the laws of the United States relating to the location of mining claims on the public domain, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3962) to prohibit the sending of threatening letters through the mails, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BURSUM, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 1883) granting a pension to Anna Claude Howard, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 910) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and by unanimous consent the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3992) to provide for the publication of an annual directory of income-tax payers;

A bill (S. 3993) to raise revenue to meet the expenses of the Government, and to prevent the monopolization of the industries of the United States, and amending sections 230 and 234 of the revenue act of 1921; and

A bill (S. 3994) to simplify and equalize the income tax, and amending sections 210 and 216 and repealing section 211 of the revenue act of 1921; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 3995) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to exterminate bean beetles in the State of New Mexico, and authorizing expenditures therefor; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am going to ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 725, being the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia. I should like briefly to state my reason for making the request at this time. The joint resolution will come up, of course, at 2 o'clock in regular order. However, the conference committee of which I am a member will meet at 2 o'clock, and I assumed that there probably would be no objection to taking the joint resolution up a little earlier for that reason.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator wishes to take up the joint resolution merely for the purpose of speaking on it and then having it laid aside until after 2 o'clock, I have no objection, but I do object to its being taken up for the purpose of consuming the time this morning.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well; if there is objection, of course I can not move to take the joint resolution up until after 1 o'clock.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator desires to speak upon the joint resolution I have no objection, but——

Mr. McCUMBER. I should not care to speak upon the joint resolution unless it were regularly under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota modify his request?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I withdraw the request.

PUBLIC MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there is a bill pending in the House of Representatives, known as the Arentz bill, which has attracted a great deal of attention in the public-land States, particularly those States having public mineral lands. The bill seeks to change existing law and to eliminate what we call in the West "extra lateral rights in lode claims." The bill, as I have said, has attracted a great deal of attention, and it has many supporters. The Commercil Club of Salt Lake City, which has a mining section which gives attention to mineral matters, appointed a committee to examine the bill and to make a report to the Commercial Club with reference to its provisions. The committee has made a very exhaustive examination of the bill and has condemned some of its features. The analysis, it seems to me, is very important, and I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, with the hope that they will find it sufficiently meritorious to have it printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the report to which the Senator from Utah has referred will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

INTERVIEW WITH FORMER GOVERNOR COX.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, recently a distinguished Democrat, former Governor Cox, of Ohio, the Democratic nominee for the Presidency two years ago, gave an interview dealing with international questions which attracted a great deal of attention. Reference has been made to it in the Senate and frequently in the public press. I ask that the interview may be published in the RECORD, together with two brief editorials, one from the New York World and one from the Washington News, in relation thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The interview and editorials are as follows:

COX TELLS OF EUROPE'S NEED OF UNITED STATES HELP—FORMER GOVERNOR, BEFORE VISITING LLOYD-GEORGE, DISCUSSES OUTLOOK—SEES WORLD'S FATE IN HANDS OF UNITED STATES—LONDON PRESS ATTACHES IMPORTANCE TO HIS "UNUSUAL PILGRIMAGE."

[By the Associated Press.]

LONDON, August 26.—James M. Cox, former Democratic candidate for President, was the guest of Prime Minister Lloyd-George at breakfast to-day. Last night Mr. Cox dined with Col. E. M. House, who is visiting here.

Before going to the premier's residence in Downing Street this morning Mr. Cox gave out a statement to the American and British press dealing with the economic plight of Europe and quoting the German chancellor, Doctor Wirth, as saying to him a few days ago in Berlin:

"Unless the United States interests herself in European affairs within a very short time, all in Germany is lost, and all in Central Europe as well."

Mr. Cox's complete statement follows:

"The storm center of the economic condition lies in Europe.

"Those who have visited Austria and Germany are of one opinion as to the state of things now and the tragic point to which both countries are drifting. Austria has reached a stage of almost complete dissolution.

"The approach of Germany to the same condition is steadily marked by every passing hour.

"The nations of Europe are deadlocked on the reparations question. There seems to be no relief on this side of the Atlantic. The master key is held by the United States. No decision by England seems likely to be accepted by the French.

"The French Government will not sanction a proposal from Germany which might approximate a readjustment of the figures now in the minds of French statesmen, for that circumstance might be regarded by the public opinion of French as a surrender to Germany.

"There is no respite, and every hour is fraught with danger. It is well to summarize the contentions of both France and Germany.

"Since the end of the war France has sold approximately $10,000,000,000 worth of bonds to her own people upon the reparations by which she would have been reimbursed by Germany in compliance with the terms of the peace treaty. Germany says she lost a fourth of her grain lands and altogether one-tenth of her territory. She issued about $25,000,000,000 worth of bonds during the war, and a deficit of $10,000,000,000 remains as a floating debt.

"The fiscal state of both countries without economic stabilization portends but one result.

"In the midst of this situation two false impressions obtain in Europe: First, that France is aggressively militaristic, and second, that Germany is making munitions and preparing for war. The military policy of France is based upon the desire to protect herself against invasion. With assurances on this point she will reduce her army.

"The Government of Germany desires peace. The leaders are progressively democratic, and the story of hidden arms, with the exception of unimportant sporadic community instances, is pure fiction. Germany has 20,000,000 more people than she can sustain except under high industrial stress. When the mark was 100 to 200 to the dollar there were certain trade advantages accruing to Germany, but in the present circumstances the banks of Germany can not finance the industries of that country in the purchase of raw products and foodstuffs.

"Unless relief is granted shops will soon be closing, millions will be out of employment, and the winter will bring the threat, if not the certainty, of starvation.

"With economic collapse the Government will go down, too. If Germany fails, France is without reimbursement, and can not sustain the loss involved without serious consequences.

"Within the last week I had a long interview with Chancellor Wirth in Berlin. He summarized the situation by saying with deepest emotion:

"'Unless the United States interests herself in European affairs within a very short time, all in Germany is lost, and all in Central Europe as well.'

"Recognizing that this statement broke the fetters of diplomatic usage in France, authority to repeat it in Chancellor Wirth's name to the people of the United States is given without reservation."

Mr. Cox said it was not too late to prevent disaster, that the American Government acting on behalf of the United States could do it without inconsistency with the existing policy.

Mr. Cox also advocates the designation of Herbert Hoover as an American representative on the reparations commission.

"Mr. Hoover holds the confidence of Europe," continued Mr. Cox's statement. "Peoples and governments trust him. He can analyze the economic situation in Germany. His decision as to what Germany can pay beyond much question of doubt would be accepted by France—and that means by all parties. I believe every chancellor in Europe would welcome his coming. The mere announcement of his selection would stabilize things.

"With reparations adjusted, Germany and France—both are in need of large loans—would be given credits, and Austria, too. Then would come the dawn of a new day.

"Mr. Hoover is not of my political party, but anyone that is in close touch with continental conditions, as I have been, is thoroughly stripped of every partisan thought.

"The question of the interallied debt need not be considered; it is not necessary. Europe recognizes that discussion in America is unlimited now."

Three considerations, said the statement, would cover every shade of American public opinion:

"First. If from a moral awakening, we desire to relieve distress, the opportunity is presented.

"Second. If our desires are purely practical and a market for our products is to be gained, the necessary rehabilitation of Europe is guaranteed.

"Third. If our policy is to insist upon the ultimate payment of the interallied debt, we must remember who the world's debtors are and realize that if some of them are permitted to go to ruin now there is not even a chance of collection later.

"The fate of the world is in the hands of America. Days wasted in procrastination now will bring years of self-reproach later. From Europe, the base of our ancestry, prayers go up that America will understand and, understanding, will not falter."

[From New York World, August 29, 1922.]

HOOVER ON THE REPARATION COMMISSION.

A proposal of the utmost weight and value is that of James M. Cox, who, after personal study of the crisis in middle Europe, says that the United States should "designate Herbert Hoover, now a member of the Cabinet, to serve in the reparation task." Mr. Hoover "holds the confidence of Europe." He can "analyze the economic situation of Germany," and his decision as to what Germany can pay "would be accepted by France—and that means by all the parties interested."

Mr. Cox does not exaggerate when he adds that the mere announcement of Mr. Hoover's selection "would stabilize things." All Europe has great confidence in Mr. Hoover, in his vast experience and his common sense. What is quite as important, our own people have confidence in him; and not the most punctilious Senator can scent the trail of partisan politics in a suggestion by Mr. Harding's late opponent that a member of the Harding Cabinet be sent to represent the United States in Europe.

No technical difficulty attends this sane proposal. Under the separate treaty with Germany the United States reserves every right defined in the treaty of Versailles to be represented in the Reparation Commission. No difficulty of practical politics ought to stand in the way; work on the Reparation Commission need touch directly no controversy about the handling of our foreign debts—though it might and should lead to a more general consideration of that problem.

Mr. Hoover, with his personal prestige and the power of his Nation behind him, would morally dominate the Reparation Commission. James M. Cox has given to Mr. Harding the wisest counsel that the President has received from any source in many a day.

[From the Washington News, August 30, 1922.]

Ex-Governor Cox, who is touring Europe, says America must act to save the central European nations from dissolution. He is right. If central Europe is allowed to degenerate, the United States will have to take a large part of the permanent loss in diminished world trade and in Europe's inability to pay her debts. Self-interest, therefore, demands that America help Europe, for in doing so we shall do no more than help ourselves.

The spectacle of the American people idly twiddling their thumbs while Europe continues to breed another war would be tragic even if America were not personally affected by the outcome. But, with American unemployment spreading because foreigners must curtail their purchases of American foodstuffs, raw materials, and manufactured goods it is suicidal for this country to let the process of European decay continue.

It would be unfortunate if any attempt were made to interpret Mr. Cox's appeal in partisan spirit. Mr. Cox, obviously, is not trying to embarrass the Republican Party, nor to help his own party. He specifically urges that Herbert Hoover represent America on the Reparation Commission, which holds the key to the European settlement.

If American intervention in Europe, under the management of Mr. Hoover, were successful, credit would go to the Harding administration. If Mr. Hoover got into trouble, the Democrats could not point to Republican inefficiency, since the original idea had been suggested by a presidential candidate of their own party. Democrats and Republicans would both have to get behind Mr. Hoover and make his mission succeed.

Any attempt by America to carry through a policy of assisting Europe can succeed only if its nonpartisan character is maintained throughout and is recognized by the world. It is probable that hard blows, in debate with the Europeans, might have to be exchanged. Only a united America could impress Europe with the determination of this country to go through with the job of stabilizing international relations, once the work were undertaken.

President Harding can do America and the world a very great service by consulting with ex-Governor Cox about European affairs, with Mr. Hoover to act as their agent in carrying out an American—not a party—policy of reconstruction. The fact of Democratic and Republican leaders acting in concert for world betterment would be in itself an inspiration.

The American people are tired of partisan politics being carried beyond the water's edge. America is the common country of Democrats and Republicans alike. The fact should be made clear to the world by international cooperation between the two parties.

A Harding-Cox alliance to help put Europe on its feet not only would go far toward restoring general prosperity, it would also speed the return of that era of good feeling in American affairs which has become lost during the domestic confusion of the past months.

SUITS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT IN DISTRICT COURTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as first in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement in regard to that bill. The only change in existing law is that under existing law all suits to enforce claims against the Government must be brought in the Court of Claims, except by an amendatory statute passed some years ago it was provided that claims involving $10,000 or less may be brought in the district courts. This bill simply amends the statute by increasing the limitation to $50,000, so that a person who has a claim against the Government for $50,000 or less may bring suit in a United States district court instead of the Court of Claims. That is the only change in existing law.

Mr. ROBINSON. The effect of the bill, then, is to expand the jurisdiction of the district courts?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; from $10,000 to $50,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The practical effect of the bill will be this, will it not—and I ask for information—that suits may be brought anywhere by any person up to $50,000 in any court——

Mr. NELSON. In any district court of the United States; but, of course, the rule as to the place in which such suits shall be brought generally applies to the cases covered by the bill. The suit must be brought in the district court where the cause of action arose or where the parties may be found.

Mr. KING. It places the Government at a disadvantage, because most of these cases either originate in Washington or the proof will be found in the archives of the Government here, and it will compel the Government to go to remote parts of the United States in order to defend suits against it, instead of defending them, as now, in the Court of Claims.

Mr. NELSON. That may be true to some extent, but it is a great hardship on a claimant who lives in a remote part of the Union to compel him to come here to Washington to file and prosecute a claim of $50,000 or less. This bill authorizes such claimants to bring suits in the district courts where they live. It is a great burden for them to be obliged in all these cases of small claims to come here to Washington and bear the expense incident to attendance on the court here. Besides, the proceedings here in the Court of Claims are rather slow and dilatory. There is no jury in the Court of Claims.

The cases are all decided by the judges on written briefs and documents, whereas if the suit is brought in the district court of the United States a jury can be invoked and a regular trial had, as in other common-law cases.

Mr. KING. Of course, the Senator knows that it is rather uncommon to authorize the suit of the sovereign anyway; and where the sovereign permits itself to be used it seems to me that there is no impropriety in its surrounding itself with such just measures of protection as will insure that no wrong shall be done to the Government itself.

Mr. NELSON. The law which is amended, giving jurisdiction in cases of claims not exceeding $10,000, has worked satisfactorily and well; and it seems to me that in these small claims of less than $50,000 it will lead to the convenience of litigants if they can have the cases tried in the districts in which they live.

Mr. KING. There is no intention by this bill to extend the class of cases in which liability attaches to the Government?

Mr. NELSON. No; the bill makes no change in that respect. Its operation is confined to claims arising ex contractu. Actions for tort, claims for damages for all kinds of torts, none of them can be brought in the Court of Claims under the existing law. This does not change the law in any particular except as to the amount.

Mr. KING. Does the Government recommend the passage of this bill?

Mr. NELSON. There is no recommendation from the Government. My recollection is that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] introduced this bill, and it was considered by the committee, and there seemed to be no objection to it.

Mr. KING. There has been no recommendation one way or the other by the Attorney General or the Department of Justice?

Mr. NELSON. No; no recommendation.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that a bill of this importance, affecting the interests of the Government as it does, ought to be referred, as is the rule, to a department?

Mr. NELSON. We refer a great many of the bills to the departments.

Mr. KING. I have discovered, in the case of many bills that I have introduced, that I can not get them reported until they go to the departments. I think this bill ought to go to the Department of Justice for review. There may be some reasons, not yet brought to the attention of the Senate, why it should not pass.

Mr. NELSON. I hope no objection will be made. The bill has been on the calendar a long time, and the officials in the Department of Justice no doubt have been aware of its existence, and no protest has been filed by the Department of Justice.

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator to let the bill go over until to-morrow, and in the meantime I will take up the matter with Attorney General Daugherty and see what objection, if any, the Government has.

Mr. NELSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

ELIZABETH WHITE, ADMINISTRATRIX.

The bill (S. 1467) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withdraw his opposition until I can make a very brief explanation about that claim. I may say that it has been on the calendar for quite a while. Mrs. White is a very old lady. She is the widow of Captain White, of my State, from whom the Federal Government took a boat during the Civil War. I shall not attempt to go into all the details about it, but I wish to state just one or two points mentioned in the report of the committee.

The bill has been before Congress several times. It has passed both the Senate and the House. On one occasion it passed both the Senate and the House during the same Congress, and by a clerical error the claim was omitted from the enrolled bill which was sent to the House, and was omitted for the same reason from the bill finally approved, the error not being discovered until after March 4, 1915, which date marked the end of the Sixty-third Congress.

This old lady has been trying to get the claim paid for a great while. There is no question about the merit of the claim. The Court of Claims has passed upon it, and this is a bill to provide for its payment. It is as just a claim as ever was presented to the Congress of the United States. As I say, it has passed both Houses during different Congresses, and on one occasion it passed both Houses during the same Congress.

I think, Mr. President and Senators, that it would be very unjust to hold this claim in abeyance any longer. I sincerely hope the Senator will withdraw his opposition and let the bill be passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate to read the report, or to go over the statement that I made before. I can not withdraw my objection at this time, nor do I care about taking the time of the Senate now to refer to certain questions that I referred to when the bill was under consideration before. The report, however, says:

> The words "in full of the above account," upon which the solicitor relies to maintain his position, should be restricted to the subject matter on which they were to operate, and that was "the above account."
> They are not like words of release standing alone without reference to any specific matter to be taken most strongly against the releasor and not liable to explanation by extrinsic evidence, but they constitute merely a receipt of the particular account to which they are subscribed, and a receipt of that character is always open to explanation.

I can not see why claims of this character should be paid under the conditions that exist. I will ask that the bill go over to-day. I have some letters on the subject over in the office that I thought I had here to-day but I have not. They were left with the bill at the last session.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am going to request the Senator to bring those letters and let us thrash this thing out. If the old lady is entitled to the money, let us give it to her. If not, let the agony be settled one way or the other.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. RANSDELL. I think this is a just claim, and the Court of Claims says it is a just claim. Congress has passed the bill several times, and we ought to settle the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

STABILIZATION OF THE COAL INDUSTRY.

The bill (S. 1807) to aid in stabilizing the coal industry was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill be put over under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah moves that Order of Business 54, Senate bill 1807, be transferred to the calendar under Rule IX.

The motion was agreed to.

RICHARD MURPHY.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I ask that the same order be made in the case of Order of Business 643, Senate bill 3248.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 3248, to provide for the issuing of a patent to Richard Murphy, and so forth, be transferred to the calendar under Rule IX. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is so transferred.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1016) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States" was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS.

The bill (S. 1375) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. STERLING. I ask that that bill be transferred to the calendar under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The resolution (S. Res. 67) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to hold hearings here or elsewhere and to employ a stenographer to report the same was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 491) to provide, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1829) for the relief of Walter Runke was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 7) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia," approved February 4, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BALL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2391) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2228) to amend certain sections of the Judicial Code relating to the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 183) imposing a duty of 90 per cent on all goods exported from the United States for the use of the American Expeditionary Forces and its allied forces and which have been sold to any foreign Government or person, when reimported into the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the joint resolution be transferred to the calendar under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SPECIAL OFFICER FOR OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF SENATE.

The resolution (S. Res. 150) directing the Secretary of the Senate to employ a special officer for the office of the Secretary of the Senate was announced as next in order, and was read, as follows:

> Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to employ a special officer for the office of the Secretary of the Senate at a salary of $1,800 per annum, to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate until provided otherwise by law.

Mr. NEW. Let that go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I express the hope that Senators may permit that resolution to be considered at this time. The Secretary of the Senate has felt the urgent necessity of having the officer whose selection is authorized by this resolution for the protection of the funds of the Senate, and under the existing conditions he believes that the manner of keeping the funds of the Senate is unsafe.

Under the practice which prevails it is necessary to keep in the room immediately adjoining the Senate Chamber a large amount of cash, and under the existing conditions the arrangements for the protection of those funds are inadequate. I make this statement from a full knowledge of the feelings of the officers who are charged with the responsibility for the preservation of the funds. I have no other purpose than to do what seems to be manifestly just and fair to the Secretary, who is charged with a very grave responsibility in this connection.

Mr. CURTIS. I join in what has been said by the Senator from Arkansas, and I hope the Senator from Indiana will withdraw his objection and let the resolution go through.

Mr. NEW. My objection is withdrawn.

The resolution was considered by the Senate and agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT.

The bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS.

The bill (S. 1452) providing for establishing shooting grounds for the public, for establishing game refuges and breeding grounds, for protecting migratory birds, and requiring a Federal license to hunt them, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let the bill go over.

Mr. NEW. I understand the Senator from Arkansas has interposed an objection to the consideration of the bill because of the absence of his colleague, who desires to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator is correct in that statement. I also made the request because of the absence of other Senators who desire to be present when the bill is considered. The bill is quite an important one, and its consideration and disposition by the Senate will require some time. I myself have an amendment which I intend to propose to the bill, which has been approved by one of the committees of the Senate, and other Senators who are not present have stated that they desired an opportunity to discuss the bill, and they are unable to be here at the present time. So for that reason I am compelled to ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. NEW. It was not my purpose to ask the Senator from Arkansas to withdraw his objection. I realize that it is a bill of some importance, and that there are Senators who desire to make amendments to it. However, I would like to be permitted an opportunity to say at this time that, as the author of the bill, I have sought to obtain from Senators an expression of their views concerning its provisions, and I myself have a number of amendments to offer in connection with it. If it be in order and permissible, I would like to send those amendments to the desk and to have the bill printed as it will be with those amendments in it. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

Mr. ROBINSON. I, of course, have no objection to the Senator presenting his amendments and having them printed. I think that is all he can do, unless he chooses to revise his bill and reintroduce it.

Mr. NEW. I do not want to reintroduce it. That is what I am seeking to obviate.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest to the Senator that he simply offer his amendments and have them printed.

Mr. NEW. I want unanimous consent to perfect my bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. In other words, I understand the Senator proposes now to offer amendments as committee amendments to the bill?

Mr. NEW. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. They can not be incorporated in the bill until the bill is under consideration. The only course open to the Senator now is either to modify his bill and reintroduce it, which he can easily do, or have his amendments printed and let them lie on the table, announcing his purpose to offer them as committee amendments when the bill is considered.

Mr. NEW. I send to the desk a number of amendments which I have prepared and ask that they be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

TRANSPORTATION OF MILITARY SUPPLIES, ETC.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 138) authorizing the payment of the cost of transportation for certain supplies purchased by the Military Establishment was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing transportation for dependents of Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

FORE RIVER SHIPBUILDING CO.

The bill (S. 1298) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $106,521.12 to the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., successor of the Fore River Engine Co. and the Fore River Ship & Engine Co., being the difference between the actual cost of the construction of two torpedo-boat destroyers and the amount paid under the contract entered into for the building of the said boats, as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 170, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLOATING DRY DOCK AT NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The bill (S. 2718) to provide for leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La., was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] requested me to ask that this bill go over if reached in his absence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2589) to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I was requested to ask that this bill should go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 67) for the relief of heirs of Adam and Noah Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1539) for the relief of Watson B. Dickerman, administrator of the estate of Charles Backman, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CAPT. DAVID M'D. SHEARER.

The bill (S. 1861) authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use and acquisition by the United States Government of his patented inventions, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish the Senator would not press his opposition to that bill. I know something about it. Captain Shearer is an eminent young engineer, and he made some discoveries which were used, to my certain knowledge, by the Mississippi River Commission on work upon the river. He thinks he has a claim against the Government. I do not know that he has, but all the bill proposes is to refer it to the court. It ought to be left to the court to say whether or not this citizen of the Union has a claim against the Government. That is all the bill proposes to do.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have spent a good deal of time with Capt. David McD. Shearer upon this claim. I wanted him to show me why he had a claim against the United States for using what he claims was an invention of his while he was an employee of the Government, and going into the case in detail I could not see one particle of excuse for the claim being allowed to the captain.

Mr. RANSDELL. With all due respect to the Senator, he may be a perfect judge of such matters, but I am pretty familiar with that claim, too. The incident occurred in my section of the State. Captain Shearer is not a Louisianian; he is a Mississippian; but I happen to know a good deal about the facts in the case, and I am not satisfied in my own mind but that he is justly entitled to be paid. If he is not entitled to be paid, the court will not award a judgment in his favor. We have courts to determine such controversies between citizens and the Government, and I think this ought to be left to the court rather than to the judgment of a Member of the Senate. I certainly would not put myself up as lawyer enough to say whether or not he is entitled to it or not entitled to it, although I practiced law for many years. I think he is entitled to payment. One Senator says he is not entitled to it and another says he is. Let us leave it to the court, and we can pay it or not if the court finds he is entitled to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I do not know what State he comes from, and it would not make any difference to me if he came from the State of Utah; if the claim was not just, I would not support it.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator surely would not expect the court to decide in his favor if the claim were not a just one.

Mr. SMOOT. Why put the Government to all the expense involved in defending the case, and why put the captain to a great deal of expense? Perhaps he would take his chance of getting some kind of a judgment from the court, because——

Mr. RANSDELL. He is a very sincere man and a very able man, and he thinks he has a claim. Let us permit him to file his claim before the court. That is what courts are established for.

Mr. SMOOT. We have so many cases before the courts now that they can hardly take care of what they have. When the bill came up before I asked that it might go over, and I had the captain come to my office after I objected. That was in the last Congress, not at this session. It was a direct claim against the Government in the last Congress. Since that conversation he has asked that the case go to the Court of Claims.

I say to the Senator that I have a good deal of sympathy with the captain, because I know what he did on the Mississippi River, but for the life of me I can not think that the Congress is going to establish the policy of compensating men under circumstances like those of this case. While working for the Government of the United States this claimant devised some plan for performing his work and in later years comes to the Congress and asks Congress to pay him for the thought he gave in perfecting, not a piece of machinery but some scheme, I will say, for better handling and keeping the Mississippi River from washing its banks away.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that I feel quite sure that one of the reasons why the bill has been changed in form was that an appropriation may not be made directly out of the Treasury of the Government, but that the case may go to the court so that it can make an award, if it finds the facts justify it. From the conversation the gentleman had with the Senator from Utah he saw that it was impossible to get the claim through in its original form because of the views entertained by the Senator, and perhaps others; but if the bill should go through in its present form and the court should hold that the facts would not justify the payment of the claim, it certainly would do no harm for us to pass the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am not familiar with the merits of the case in question, but there are precedents under which the Government of the United States has paid large sums to soldiers, for instance, for inventions devised while the soldiers were in the service of the Government, which inventions were subsequently used by the Government for the benefit of the Army.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there is a law against that. Was there not an amendment to the patent laws prohibiting the payment of compensation even for the use of a patent under such circumstances?

Mr. ROBINSON. That provision is all right. The time of one who is in the employ of the Government belongs to the Government, and his service belongs to the Government. On the other hand, where one performs an extraordinary service and perfects an invention of great value to the Government, there is no reason why he should not be granted some compensation by a special act, when under the particular circumstances of the case the claim may be found to be meritorious.

Take the case of the soldier who, prior to the Civil War, invented a tent which the United States Army used throughout the Civil War. Comparatively recently Congress passed a private claim bill for the benefit of one of the soldiers who made that invention. One of the soldiers received his compensation some years ago. The other was denied his compensation on account of some question affecting his loyalty, as I remember, but that question was subsequently satisfactorily met and, if my recollection serves me correctly, an appropriation was made by Congress. I merely refer to this case in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. NEW. I wish to follow up what the Senator from Arkansas has just said about the allowance that was made to the inventor of the tent. I suppose he was referring to the Sibley case?

Mr. ROBINSON. Sibley was one of the claimants.

Mr. NEW. It has been but a few days since the Committee on Claims has had under consideration a very similar case involving a device upon a tent invented by an officer many years subsequent to the Civil War. As a subcommittee of the Committee on Claims I have reported adversely on that case upon the theory strictly that while the officer was in the service of the United States Government the Government was as much entitled to the product of his brain as it was to the service of his hand, and that I fully believe. I believe, however, that the officer was clearly entitled to anything he might have received from the use of that patent by any other government or by any private party. I think that this claim comes under the same general head, that what this officer or any other officer of the Government devised and employed in Government work the Government is entitled to without cost. That is exactly what the Government educated the officer for, exactly what it employed him for, and if he is to say "I will serve the Government manually, but I will not give it the benefit of my intellect," then I think there is something wrong. I do not think the Government should be required to pay for his invention any more than for his service.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Utah permit me to make a brief statement?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not wish it to be understood, if the language I had heretofore used may have misled Senators into that belief, that I take the position that every officer of the Government serving the Government who makes an invention should have compensation therefor from the Government. On the contrary, I recognize the legal principle that one in the employ of another is duty bound to give the best services of which he is capable. There are, however, cases in which the Government has recognized the right of officers in the Army or employees of the Government to receive satisfactory compensation for inventions they have made, on the theory that it is wise and sound policy for the Government to encourage men who happen to possess inventive genius to exercise it while in the employ of the Government.

Mr. RANSDELL. May I read just a paragraph from the report of the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will permit me, perhaps my statement will clear the situation satisfactorily to the Senator. I have absolute confidence that if the matter is ever referred to the Court of Claims, that court will not give judgment against the Government. But there is another objection to the bill. It provides that the Court of Claims shall render judgment. If the Senator will change the bill so as to allow the court to report the findings of fact and then let Congress decide as to whether an appropriation should be made, I shall have no objection to it.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am entirely willing to make that change.

Mr. SMOOT. Then let the bill go over to-day, and I will confer with the Senator and we will modify that provision when it comes up again.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask the Senator, before the bill goes over, to allow me to read very briefly from the report, because I do not think Senators are familiar with it. Speaking of Captain Shearer, the report states that—

> In 1914, outside of office hours and not interfering with his duties and service as employee of the Mississippi River Commission, he invented a reinforced-concrete revetment; also molds for manufacture of said reinforced-concrete revetment; also apparatus for laying said reinforced-concrete revetment. He applied for and obtained patents on each.
> The United States Government, through the Mississippi River Commission, adopted and used all three of said inventions, covered by said letters patent, is still using them, and is planning for their extensive use in the future.
> The Supreme Court has in several decisions declared that an employee of the Government making an invention while in Government employ is entitled to compensation therefor if adopted and used by the Government.
> The Supreme Court says:
> "If an officer or employee of the Government, not specifically employed to make experiments with a view to suggest improvements, devises a new and valuable improvement, he is entitled to the benefit of it, and to letters patent for the improvement from the United States, equally with any other citizen not engaged in such service, and the Government can not after the patent is issued make use of the improvement any more than a private individual without license of the inventer or making compensation to him. (United States v. Burns, 12 Wall. 252.)
> "An employee performing all the duties assigned to him in his department of service may exercise his inventive faculties in any direction he chooses, with the assurance that whatever invention he may thus conceive and perfect is his individual property. There is no difference between the Government and any other employer in this respect. But this general rule is subject to these limitations: If one is employed to devise or perfect an instrument or a means for accomplishing a desired result, he can not, after successfully accomplishing the work for which he was employed, plead title thereto against his employer. That which he was employed and paid to accomplish becomes, when accomplished, the property of his employer." (Solomons v. United States, 137 U. S. 346.)

Mr. SMOOT. We will let the bill go over, but since the Senator has read from the report, I want the Senate to know another feature of the case. Captain Shearer did not furnish the money to build the machine. His idea was presented to the officials of the Government and the Government put up every solitary cent for building the machine that handled the particular invention or improvement for revetment work. I personally think that, the Government having done that and the improvement having been made by a Government employee, he is barred from receiving any kind of compensation from the Government for the invention of the machine. If Captain Shearer had put up his own money, and employed some one to do the work and had taken all the chances, it would be a different thing; but he did not use one cent of his own money. The Government took the chance and the Government put up the money with which to build the machine, and now, after years have passed, to say that the Government ought to pay him for the use of it I think is not right.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon will state the inquiry.

Mr. McNARY. Has objection been made to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It goes over for to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is proceeding with the discussion by unanimous consent. The Senator from Utah has objected to the consideration of the bill and it will go over.

VESSEL "MARIA ARTAU."

The bill (H. R. 5965) for the relief of the owner of the vessel Maria Artau was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,901.35 to the owner of the vessel Maria Artau as compensation for and in full satisfaction of all claims of such owner for any damages to said vessel sustained as a result of a collision between said vessel and the United States ship Kittery on August 7, 1917, in Santo Domingo waters, the responsibility for such collision having been placed on the United States ship Kittery by a naval board after investigation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL SUPPLY CORPS OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 2390) to redistribute the number of officers in the several grades of the Supply Corps of the Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ALMOND S. ROOT.

The bill (S. 2654) for the relief of Almond S. Root was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill be transferred to the calendar under Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks that the bill be transferred to the calendar under Rule IX. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DAMAGES FOR COLLISIONS WITH NAVAL VESSELS.

The bill (S. 2674) to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. I forget just what is to-day the amount of claims which may be settled in this way, but I think it is $500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is $500; but the department very strongly urges the passage of the bill. The committee have reported it unanimously.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it would save a lot of trouble in coming to Congress with small claims to be adjusted if we would raise the limit to $5,000, as proposed. We passed a bill Saturday allowing the heads of departments to settle claims up to the amount of $1,000. That gives the heads of the departments general power to settle claims, and such an arrangement should include, of course, this department. The only question is whether the limit of $5,000 is a little high.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is a little too high. I think the $500 limit ought to be increased, but $5,000 is quite a claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests that the Senator propose an amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 2, in line 11, I move to strike out "$5,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$3,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 11, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision contained in the act entitled "An act making appropriation for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes," approved June 24, 1910 (Public, No. 261, 61st Cong., 2d sess.), authorizing the Secretary of the Navy "to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine the amounts due on all claims for damages, where the amount of the claim does not exceed the sum of $500, hereafter occasioned by collision, for which collisions vessels of the Navy shall be found to be responsible, and report the amounts so determined to be due the claimants to Congress at each session thereof through the Treasury Department for payment as legal claims out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows, namely:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine the amounts due on all claims for damages, where the amount of the claim does not exceed the sum of $3,000, occasioned since April 6, 1917, and hereafter, by collisions or accidents incident to the operation of vessels for which collisions or accidents vessels of the Navy or vessels in the naval service shall be found to be responsible, and report the amounts so ascertained and determined to be due the claimants to the Congress through the Treasury Department for payment as legal claims out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN F. SPATES.

The bill (S. 1352) for the relief of Benjamin F. Spates was announced as next in order.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, that bill has been before the Senate for some time. Objections to its consideration were made the other day, which I understand have been withdrawn. It is a very meritorious bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$2,000" and to isert "$1,000"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Benjamin F. Spates, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 for a personal injury received by him on September 17, 1885, without fault or negligence on his part, while in the service of the United States Government, performing labor at the Capitol.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISE SAINT GEZ.

The bill (S. 403) for the relief of Louise Saint Gez, executrix of Auguste Ferré, deceased, surviving partner of Lapene & Ferré, was announced as next in order.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, this bill was before the Senate several days ago, but it was objected to because as drawn it provided for the payment of whatever judgment the court might find.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state to the Senator from Louisiana that the bill has been reported to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. RANSDELL. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting what I send to the desk. The amendment is in the usual form and provides that the claim shall be referred to the Court of Claims for an adjudication of the law and the facts under the act of Congress of March 12, 1863.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the claim of Louise Saint Gez, executrix of Auguste Ferré, deceased, surviving partner of the late firm of Lapene & Ferré, for the net proceeds of the cotton purchased or owned by them, taken by United States officers, sold, and the net proceeds thereof placed in the United States Treasury, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for determination of the law and the facts under the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863 (12 Stat. L. 820), any statute of limitations, or the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 376), and all other nonintercourse laws to the contrary notwithstanding, and report to Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF ALPHONSE DESMARE, DECEASED.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 404) for the relief of the legal representatives of the estate of Alphonse Desmare, deceased, and others.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is a bill of very similar character to the one which has just been passed, and I move a similar amendment to it referring the case to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts. I ask that my amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the claim of the legal representative of the estate of Alphonse Desmare, deceased, and the claim of the legal representative of the estate of Cyprian Dupré, deceased, surviving partner of the late firm of Desmare & Dupré, for the net proceeds of the cotton purchased or owned by them, taken by the United States officers, sold and the net proceeds thereof placed in the United States Treasury, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for determination of the law and the facts, under the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863 (12 Stats. L. p. 820), any statute of limitations, or the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stats. p. 376), and all other nonintercourse laws to the contrary notwithstanding, and report to Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let that joint resolution go over.

The bill (S. 14) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let that bill go over.

The bill (S. 2992) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information for historical purposes to the adjutants general of the several States and the District of Columbia, and making an appropriation therefor, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that on April 3 last this bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was amended and passed. On April 5 the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] entered a motion to reconsider the bill and the Secretary was directed to ask for the return of the bill from the House of Representatives, and the bill has been returned from that body.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill does not appear on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is interested in this measure, the Chair will suggest that it be passed over without prejudice, and, if he desires, it may be taken up when he returns to the Chamber.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest that the calendar be corrected. The bill does not appear on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill does not appear on the calendar, because it has passed the Senate and gone to the House and been brought back on a motion to reconsider, as the Chair understands.

BOARD OF ASSISTANT ASSESSORS OF THE DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 1739) to amend sections 5 and 6 of the act of Congress making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee to state just what it is proposed to accomplish by the proposed amendment to sections 5 and 6 of the act referred to in the bill. I should like to know what the purpose of the measure is.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, the existing law provides for five assistant assessors in the District of Columbia, but the District appropriation bills have for some time been providing for one additional assessor. Under the provisions contained in that bill, however, the sixth assistant assessor can only be employed in connection with the making of the assessments. Under the bill now before the Senate the board of assistant assessors is constituted of six members, and the sixth assistant assessor may act on the board of review and in other respects just as the other five assistant assessors may be employed. For a number of years there have been six assistant assessors.

The bill also provides that the board of personal tax appeals shall meet in January instead of February, the provision reading:

That hereafter the board of personal-tax appeals shall convene on the first Monday in January of each year and continue in session to and including the second Monday in February of each year.

Section 2 fixes the status of those who reside in the District of Columbia so far as taxation of tangible and intangible property is concerned. There have been people living in the District who have refused to pay taxes in the District on the ground that they held citizenship in other States. The attorney for the District claims that many of those people should be taxed, and there has been some dispute concerning the matter, the law not being specific upon that point. This bill proposes to establish who shall be considered residents of the District of Columbia so far as their being subject to taxation in the District is concerned.

Mr. FLETCHER. How will the bill affect Members of Congress?

Mr. BALL. It exempts Members of Congress or those elected for a definite term, the provision being—

That Cabinet officers, Members of Congress, and persons in the service of the United States Government elected for a definite term of office shall not be considered as residents of the District of Columbia for the purposes of this act.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the passage of the bill add very materially to the expenses of the District government?

Mr. BALL. It will not add to them at all, but it will permit the District government to use the sixth assessor for other duties than now devolve upon him.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well, I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill as passed is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act of Congress making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved July 1, 1902, is hereby amended so as to provide that the permanent board of assistant assessors referred to therein shall consist of six members instead of five members, and the assessor of the District of Columbia shall designate three of the members of said board for the assessment of real estate, and the three other members of said board to assess personal property, in accordance with law; all members of said board, together with the assessor of the District of Columbia, as chairman, shall constitute the board of equalization and review of real estate assessments, and also the board of personal tax appeals. That hereafter the board of personal tax appeals shall convene on the first Monday in January of each year and continue in session to and including the second Monday in February of each year.

SEC. 2. That, for the purposes of this act, any person maintaining a place of abode in the District of Columbia on July 1 of any year and for six months or more prior thereto shall be considered a resident of the District of Columbia, and shall be taxable on his tangible personal property if located in the District of Columbia during the period of his domicile therein or for any fractional part thereof; said person shall also be taxable on his intangible personal property wherever located unless evidence shall be submitted to the assessor of the District of Columbia, satisfactory to him, that such intangible personal property is taxed to said person in some other jurisdiction for the period hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That Cabinet officers, Members of Congress, and persons in the service of the United States Government elected for a definite term of office shall not be considered as residents of the District of Columbia for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. That section 5 of the act of Congress hereinbefore referred to is hereby amended by providing that in addition to the annual assessment of all real estate made on or prior to July 1 of each year there shall be added a list of all new buildings erected or under roof prior to December 1 of each year in the same manner as provided by law for all annual additions; and the amounts thereof shall be added as assessments for the second half of the then current year. The board of equalization and review, hereinbefore referred to, shall hear such complaints as may be made in respect of said assessments and determine said complaints between the first and third Mondays of December of the same year.

SEC. 4. That paragraph 32 of section 7 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, above referred to, is hereby amended by inserting after the words "fortune tellers" the word "phrenologists," so that said paragraph shall read as follows:

"That mediums, clairvoyants, soothsayers, fortune tellers, phrenologists, or palmists, by whatsoever name called, conducting business for profit or gain, directly or indirectly, when permitted to practice their calling in the District of Columbia, shall pay a license tax of $25 per annum: Provided, That no license shall be issued without the approval of the major and superintendent of police."

SEC. 5. That hereafter no deed, except deeds of release, deeds of trust, or other deeds not involving the transfer of title to real estate, shall be recorded among the land records of the District of Columbia unless it is accompanied by a sealed statement, addressed to the assessor of the District of Columbia, giving the information hereinafter referred to; and the recorder of deeds of said District is directed to receive such sealed statement and transmit it to the assessor of said District without breaking the seal.

Said sealed statement shall be made by the grantee, and shall be on a form approved by said assessor, and shall contain the names of the grantor and grantee, together with their addresses, the full nature of the transaction, together with the true amount of all moneys paid or received, and any other consideration in addition to said moneys shall be given and certified to by the grantee or an authorized agent.

The information contained in the sealed statement shall be regarded as confidential by said assessor and shall be used by him or by the said board of assistant assessors for the equalization of assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia in accordance with the requirements of law.

If any such grantee or his authorized agent shall fail to make any statement or shall make any false statement of the nature of the transaction, or as to the amount of money actually involved, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be liable to a fine of not less than $5 and not more than $500 for each offense. Such offenses shall be prosecuted in the police court of the District of Columbia in the name of said District by the corporation counsel or any of his assistants.

ANNIE M. LEPLEY.

The bill (H. R. 4504) for the relief of Annie M. Lepley was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit Annie M. Lepley, as postmaster at Plymouth, Amador County, Calif., on her account as postmaster of said place, in the sum of $2,055.83, the same being the amount of certain moneys, money orders, and postage stamps taken and stolen by burglars from the post office at Plymouth, Amador County, Calif., at nighttime at about 10 minutes past 1 o'clock a. m. on March 13, 1915, by unknown persons, and that the said Annie M. Lepley be, and she is hereby, relieved and released from payment to the Treasury of the United States of the said sum of $2,055.83, and every part thereof, as such postmaster, and that her account be credited as postmaster with said amount of $2,055.83 by reason of said loss caused by such burglary.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have almost come to the conclusion that the only way we can stop the introduction and consideration of measures of this kind is to pass some law which will require postmasters to carry some kind of insurance. Since we began the payment, by special act of Congress, of claims for reimbursement on account of robberies of post offices the stealing of postal funds has increased, I presume, 100 per cent, or perhaps even more than that, and so long as we continue to pay every dollar that is stolen in any way, whether the postmaster is responsible or whether he is not, we will never stop post-office robberies, for there will be no incentive at all for those in charge to take care of the money intrusted to them. I do not want to object to this bill; but really I should like to say to the chairman of the Committee on Claims that if we continue to reimburse postmasters on account of funds stolen from their offices we will never stop the robbing of Government post offices. It used to be a rare thing that we ever had a case of this kind; it was very seldom that such a claim was ever paid, and it never was paid unless the Government of the United States was responsible, in that it failed to furnish a safe place in which to keep the money; but now every postmaster who loses a dollar in any way, whether it is stolen by friend or foe, immediately comes to Congress and Congress provides the money to reimburse him. I think the policy is bad.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HUNTER-BROWN CO.

The bill (S. 820) for the relief of the Hunter-Brown Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment on line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out $2,423.08" and insert "$1,198.08," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Hunter-Brown Co., Chattanooga, Tenn., the sum of $1,198.08 as settlement in full for loss incurred through failure of the War Department to receive 192 cords of wood delivered by the Hunter-Brown Co. at Camp Forrest, Ga., under the terms of a contract with the War Department entitled "Quartermaster Corps contract," which represents the sum of the amount agreed to be paid for the wood so delivered and expenses incurred by the Hunter-Brown Co. by reason of delayed delivery occasioned by the refusal of the agents of the War Department to receive the shipments of wood and in prosecuting its claim for the payment of the contract price, the War Department having since refused to approve or settle such claim.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

REFUND OF TAXES.

The bill (S. 3716) to define a period in which certain claims may be presented for determination to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for refund of taxes erroneously collected from certain estates of decedents under color of section 29 of the act of Congress approved June 13, 1898, entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," and amendments; and to authorize payment of amounts allowed in the determination of such claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized and directed to receive, consider, and determine, in accordance with law but without regard to any statute of limitation, any claim filed not later than six months after the passage of this act by the personal representative of any estate of a decedent for money illegally collected from such estate under color of section 29 of the act of Congress approved June 13, 1898, entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," and amendments, where and when and only when it be found and determined that such illegal collection was upon the erroneous interpretation of the law passed upon and condemned by the United States Supreme Court in decision rendered in 1915 in the case of United States v. Jones, and in the case of McCoach, collector, v. Pratt, reported in 236 United States Reports.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the personal representatives of any such decedents any amounts allowed in the determination of any claims so defined and which shall have been presented in accordance with this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 11872) to amend sections 7, 8, and 9 of the Panama Canal act; to amend sections 288, 289, 342, 343, 368, and 461 of the Penal Code of the Canal Zone; and section 2 of the Executive order of July 9, 1914, establishing rules and regulations for the opening and navigation of the Panama Canal and approaches thereto, including all water under its jurisdiction; to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act extending certain privileges of canal employees to other officials on the Canal Zone and authorizing the President to make rules and regulations affecting health, sanitation, quarantine, taxation, public roads, self-propelled vehicles, and police powers on the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, including provision as to certain fees, money orders, and interest deposits," approved August 21, 1916; and to regulate divorces in the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RIVER AND HARBOR PROJECTS.

The bill (H. R. 10766) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill has been heretofore considered by the Senate as in Committee of the whole, and all except two of the committee amendments have been agreed to. The Secretary will state the amendments passed over.

The first amendment passed over was, on page 2, after line 22, to insert:

Inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C.: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to purchase, as a part of said waterway, the existing Lake Drummond Canal, together with all property rights and franchises appertaining thereto, at a price of not to exceed $500,000, in accordance with the report submitted in House Committee Document No. 5, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 14, beginning with line 24, to insert the following:

SEC. 12. That the contract dated July 29, 1921, executed by the Boston, Cape Cod & New York Canal Co., and transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of War and printed in House Document No. 139, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, is hereby ratified on condition that such company files with the Secretary of War its consent in writing that paragraph 8 of such contract be amended to read as follows:

"8. The payment of the amount herein agreed to be paid, or any part of same, to the said canal company is to be upon the express condition that the Boston, Cape Cod & New York Canal Co. waives, in writing, any and all claims of any nature whatsoever that it may have against the President, the Director General of Railroads, or the United States, and upon such release the Director General of Railroads shall release the company from any claim or demand against the company growing out of Federal control."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 7, at the end of section 1, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

Tennessee River and tributaries in North Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, and Kentucky. Survey in accordance with report submitted in House Document No. 319, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels that he should ask that this bill go over temporarily, because the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has a survey amendment that he desires to offer, and the Chair does not know what it is; so, if there is no objection, it will be passed over temporarily. It has reached the Senate, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole have been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER subsequently said: The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] informs the Chair that his matter is already covered in the bill. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. JONES of Washington subsequently said: Mr. President, this afternoon the Senate passed the river and harbor bill. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer (Mr. ODDIE in the chair) appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. NELSON, Mr. CALDER, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. RANSDELL conferees on the part of the Senate.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 227) rejecting bids for the acquisition of Muscle Shoals was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 13) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws and to punish the crime of lynching was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 385) to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act approved August 11, 1916, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That will have to go over.

Mr. McNARY. In the absence of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3146) to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill will be passed over for the same reason.

The resolution (S. Res. 330) authorizing a special committee to report to the Senate the results of its investigation concerning the financial interest of Senators in matters affected by the pending tariff bill was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2388) for the relief of Augusta Reiter was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] asked that that bill might go over when it was reached. It will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3858) to define butter and to provide a standard therefor was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I spoke of that bill Saturday, and expressed a hope that it would be considered to-day; but the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] advised me that he would like to have it go over for the day. So I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 335) directing the Federal Reserve Board to require the Federal Reserve Banks of Atlanta, Dallas, St. Louis, and Kansas City to report to the Senate the rates of interest charged by them on loans and discounts in 1920 and 1921 was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 11843) for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in grain, by regulating transactions on grain future exchanges, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. As I stated a few days ago, that bill has a fixed status, and I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 211) to extend the provisions of the pension act of May 11, 1912, and May 1, 1920, to the officers and enlisted men of all State militia and other State organizations that rendered service to the Union cause during the Civil War for a period of 90 days or more, and providing pensions for their widows, minor children, and dependent parents, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ENFORCEMENT OF PROHIBITION IN PORTO RICO.

The bill (H. R. 9270) to confer upon the Territorial courts of Porto Rico concurrent jurisdiction with the United States courts of that district of all offenses under the national prohibition act and all acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Territorial magistrates and courts of Porto Rico jurisdiction concurrent with the commissioners and courts of the United States for the said Territory of all offenses under the act of October 28, 1919, known as the national prohibition act, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, the jurisdiction of said Territorial magistrates and courts over said offenses to be the same which they now have over other criminal offenses within their jurisdiction.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributor, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. WINSLOW, Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota, and Mr. RAYBURN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States Coal Commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. WINSLOW, Mr. HOCH, and Mr. RAYBURN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6507) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. FULLER, Mr. BLAND of Indiana, and Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

S. 2199. An act to provide for the marking of anchorage grounds in waters of the United States;

S. 2460. An act to extend the provisions of section 18a of an act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. p. 437), to certain lands in Utah;

S. 3618. An act to amend the Judicial Code in reference to appeals and writs of error;

S. 3659. An act to create the White House police force, and for other purposes;

H. R. 1274. An act for the relief of Maude H. Mosher;

H. R. 1948. An act for the relief of Virgil O. McWhorter;

H. R. 2866. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent to parties named herein certain lands in Louisiana;

H. R. 10361. An act authorizing the sale and patent of certain alleged public lands in Louisiana;

H. R. 11590. An act to amend sections 34 and 40 of the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii;

H. R. 11901. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River to connect the city of Benwood, W. Va., and the city of Bellaire, Ohio;

H. R. 12493. An act amending the act of June 30, 1922, making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 23. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to grant revocable licenses for the quarrying and removal of stone from the Mariveles Military Reservation, Philippine Islands; and

S. J. Res. 156. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to erect and maintain a hotel upon the Fort Monroe Military Reservation in Virginia.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the unfinished business, H. J. Res. 270, be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] wants to be here when the joint resolution is considered. So I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	Nicholson	Stanfield
Borah	Hale	Oddie	Sterling
Broussard	Harrison	Phipps	Swanson
Bursum	Heflin	Ransdell	Trammell
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Rawson	Walsh, Mass.
Capper	Kellogg	Robinson	Warren
Cummins	McCormick	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Curtis	McCumber	Shields	Williams
Dillingham	McNary	Shortridge	Willis
Fletcher	Moses	Simmons
France	Nelson	Smith
Glass	New	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and the following Senators answered to their names when called:

Ball	du Pont	Harreld	McLean
Culberson	Ernst

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am due at a conference at this hour but will take just a few minutes to make a general statement in reference to the Liberian loan.

Authority was given by one of the Liberty loan acts under which credit was given to Liberia in the sum of $5,000,000. Like all such credits, there were conditions that had to be worked out. The Liberian Government immediately accepted the conditions, but the conditions had to be arranged for under which the money was to be advanced. Some of the conditions were that the Liberian Government should get rid of the French-British control of her finances and make some other arrangements, so that the control of her finances would be under the United States rather than France and Great Britain, but before final arrangements were concluded the war ceased. Our Government then took the position that although the credit had been given and although it had been drawn upon, I think, to the extent of $26,000, we had no authority to go ahead and complete the loan and turn over the balance of the sum. The matter had been under consideration. Possibly actuated by this intention and expectation, the Liberian Government declared war upon Germany. She suffered considerably by having her ports blockaded and also by having vessels attacked which were loaded with produce from and to Liberia. She performed everything in accordance with her arrangements so far as she had been able to go within the time which had elapsed between the arrangements for the loan and the closing of the war.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I asked him what evidence or proof or data he has that Liberia declared war against Germany because of the prospect of this loan?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I could not say, except as I understand from the Treasury Department that it was in the expectation that we would make the loan. I have no definite information myself, and I do not know that we have the record of that information.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. SHIELDS. If Liberia did declare war against Germany, as suggested by the Senator, and of which I understand there is no evidence, did Liberia do anything, did it change its status in any way, or was it a mere paper declaration?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly the declaration of war changed her status with the German Government. Connected with that was the understanding, as I am informed, that we would assist her financially and as a condition of that assistance we were to control her finances.

Mr. SHIELDS. Did Liberia take any part in the war?

Mr. McCUMBER. She furnished no army, but she did a considerable part. She excluded the German control of some of her financial interests and she also did everything that an independent nation declaring war would do with reference to the nationals of the enemy in her territory.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I did not understand what the Senator said that Liberia did during the war. What did she do?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will read it as set forth in the committee report, if the Senator desires me to do so:

> The Government of Liberia declared war against Germany on August 4, 1917. Concurrently with this declaration the Liberian Government, at the instance of Great Britain, France, and the United States, closed all German business houses in the Republic, liquidated the property, and deported all German subjects. Since approximately 85 per cent of the trade and commerce of Liberia was under the control of Germans, their deportation as a war measure very adversely affected the economic situation of the country. Germany meanwhile declared the territorial waters of Liberia to be prohibited areas to all merchant vessels, including the vessels of neutral nations, and served notice that any merchant vessels frequenting these waters were liable to be torpedoed.
> In an attempt to make this declaration effective German submarines attacked, and in several cases sank, merchant vessels en route to and from Liberian ports. On April 10, 1918, the wireless station at Monrovia, the capital of Liberia, was attacked and partially destroyed and other damage done by German submarine gunfire. Under these circumstances neutral vessels refused to call at Liberian ports and the calls of vessels of the allied nations became infrequent and uncertain. A severe trade depression inevitably ensued.

I do not think that I need go further than that mere statement to show that Liberia did suffer.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand from the report that sufficient property belonging to Germans was seized in Liberia to discharge all the claims for damage done by Germany to Liberia.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; they seized German property in Liberia.

Mr. SWANSON. And they held it to pay the damages. I would like to have the Senator answer this question: This is a $5,000,000 loan. My experience and investigation have shown that when such loans are made to some governments they are generally made for the purpose of paying the creditors of that government who have loaned it money and who are not able to collect it from the government and who simply desire to unload the debt upon us. Does the Senator know whether the $5,000,000 is owing to certain creditors of Liberia and will be appropriated to discharge the debts due those creditors?

Mr. McCUMBER. My understanding is that the $5,000,000 will be so used under the control of American agents as to relieve the Liberian Government from the control now exercised over that little Republic by both Great Britain and France, and that as soon as the loan is made the control will be through American agents, which naturally would be to the advantage of the United States.

Mr. SWANSON. Of what advantage to the United States?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly there would be an advantage in the diversion of trade, possibly, to this country, the same as it has been an advantage to the other countries, France and Great Britain.

Mr. SWANSON. We get no tariff advantages. We get no advantages at all except that we loan the $5,000,000 and then have to go to the expense of collecting the customs in order to have the debt repaid.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is some advantage in that respect, and there is another reason in which I think we have a just pride. Liberia is more or less a child of this Government. It was started by free negroes as such and under the control, to a great extent, of the American Nation. We have looked after her interests, and our dominant control of that country has generally been recognized by other countries.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to say to the Senator that I have but a few moments and I desire to close a few remarks that I have to make and then allow others to take charge of the joint resolution.

Mr. SWANSON. I am only asking the Senator for information. Has the Senator a list of the creditors of Liberia to whom this money would go, even under the direction of representatives of the United States?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Treasury Department has a full list.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I suggest that the record shows that there is between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000 due to France and Great Britain.

Mr. BORAH. And about $1,500,000 due Morgan & Co., of New York.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota a question? The Senator from Kansas has accounted for about $1,800,000 of the fund which it is now proposed shall be loaned to Liberia. What is it contemplated shall be done with the remainder of the loan?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is contemplated, I understand, that there are many internal matters to be looked after, and that it will be devoted to the building of railways or what else may be needed for the internal rehabilitation of that little country. All of these matters are to be worked out under a commission which is to be appointed by the United States in case the loan is made.

Mr. ROBINSON. If I understood the Senator correctly, it can not now be stated definitely what disposition shall be made of the remainder of the fund after the $1,800,000, accounted for by the Senator from Kansas, has been paid.

Mr. McCUMBER. Except that the disposition of it will be under the control of an American commission.

Mr. ROBINSON. That statement has been repeatedly made, but before Congress authorizes the appropriation of moneys which are collected by taxation from the American people——

Mr. McCUMBER. May I remind the Senator that the conference committee is waiting for me and has been waiting for 10 minutes, and I would like to finish my statement and then return to the conference.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall detain the Senator but a moment. I was about to say that the Congress is now asked to appropriate $5,000,000 to pay debts which Liberia owes other Governments——

Mr. McCUMBER. A small proportion of it is for that purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. And perhaps some debts which she owes American citizens. The statement is made that the authorization of $5,000,000 is justified on the ground that some American agents selected by this Government will have control of the disposition of the remainder of the fund. I think that Congress when asked to appropriate money contributed by American citizens, in view of conditions that exist in this country, should have definite and full information. We ought to know in advance just how the money will be expended. It is admitted that there is no legal obligation upon the part of the Government to make the loan. It is claimed that it grows out of an alleged moral obligation assumed by this Government in inducing Liberia to declare war upon the German Government. After the signing of the armistice, in advance of what was supposed to be the conclusion of the war, terminating the negotiations——

Mr. McCUMBER. I again ask the Senator if he will not allow me to complete my statement?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, I will, in just a moment.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator will have all the afternoon to make his speech on the subject.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not want to make a speech. I am trying to get information. There were a number of other governments, including the Russian Government, as I remember, to which the United States had committed herself in a policy of extending credits. There was the Grecian Government, as suggested by my friend the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. If we are now entering upon a policy of taxing the American people to carry out arrangements that were never effected, entered into for the prosecution of the war, to establish credits by governments which were cooperating with the United States in the conduct of the war, the subject matter of the joint resolution might be extended to comprehend all governments with which those same arrangements were at one time in progress. At least our country ought to have full information respecting the purposes of the loan and the subjects to which it was to be applied. We can not tax the American people in a spirit of generosity for the benefit of Liberia.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no doubt that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] could possibly answer the question of the Senator from Arkansas. The whole Liberian loan matter was inherited from a previous administration, and the question arises whether under all the circumstances there is or is not a moral obligation on the part of this Government to proceed to carry out the provisions of the agreement notwithstanding the fact that the war closed——

Mr. SWANSON and Mr. ROBINSON rose.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not going to yield until I finish this statement—notwithstanding the fact that the war closed before the money was drawn or all of the conditions precedent had been complied with by Liberia.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from North Dakota for just a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield for a question; but really I wish Senators would allow me to finish my statement, because, while they have all the afternoon to discuss this matter, I have not.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the Senator that the statement I wish to make will not consume the time of an ordinary question. I note that in the report of the committee reference is made to the fact that the Secretary of State, in a letter addressed to me as Secretary of the Treasury, urged that this Government was under a moral obligation to make this loan. I think I have a right to say that I did not concur in that opinion.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I read from the report the statement that after more than a year's delay diplomatic negotiations with France and England having terminated, and a definite program having been announced as to what Liberia was to do, Secretary of State Lansing, in a letter to the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. GLASS, stated:

> Not to carry through this program would be simply disastrous for our position in Liberia and would cast a blemish on our good name in international relations. I can not too strongly emphasize the embarrassment which would result to this Government from such a course, an embarrassment which would not be limited to our intercourse with Liberia but would be reflected in our larger relations with France and Great Britain.
> I have given this matter the most serious consideration, and I very strongly feel that to avoid being gravely compromised this Government is in honor bound to live up to the agreement made in this instance and to carry through the program of economic rehabilitation. I hope very earnestly that you will accept my point of view.

It may be that the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. President, did not accept that point of view, but that was the point of view of the then Secretary of State.

Again, in his letter of July 29, 1921, addressed to the Senate——

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, it is that statement of the Secretary of State which I desire to repeat I did not accept. I totally dissented from that view. Not only that, but I thought the $26,000 which had already been advanced to Liberia was the only item in all of the credits established by this Government that could not be justified.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from North Dakota permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator's questions are generally speeches, but I will yield to him for a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from North Dakota understands the difficulty of asking a question sometimes without prefacing it by a statement, but I will confine my statement to a question as to the agreement. What were the terms of the alleged agreement referred to by the then Secretary of State, Mr. Lansing, under which he claims that the Government was morally obligated to make this loan to Liberia?

Mr. McCUMBER. The agreements, I suppose, were both with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of State, but the conditions that were carried out by the Liberian Government and the position in which she placed herself with the expectation of being able to draw upon this sum of money, in my opinion and according to my view of the case, imposed a moral obligation upon this Government to make good its promises to make her that loan, even after the war had closed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, throughout the report, throughout the statement of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] and in the letter quoted by him, which it is alleged was addressed by the then Secretary of State to the then Secretary of the Treasury, reference is made to an agreement. Now, was the agreement written or was it verbal, and what were the terms of the agreement? Congress ought to be permitted to judge what the obligation of the agreement is by a consideration of the terms of the agreement.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think, Mr. President, that the agreement will be found in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. I have it not before me. Again, however, I plead with Senators to allow me to finish my statement.

Mr. SWANSON. I simply wish to make a suggestion to the Senator. As I understand from what the Senator has read and from the report of the committee the loan was delayed because it had not been made safe and certain conditions had not been complied with.

Mr. McCUMBER. All of the conditions under which the loan was to be made had not been fully complied with.

Mr. SWANSON. That is, so as to make the loan safe and to insure that the Government would not lose anything. That was during time of war. What has been done since to change that aspect of the situation?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. Did the Senator from Virginia say a "safe loan"?

Mr. SWANSON. I said "to make it safe."

Mr. McCORMICK. Does the Senator from Virginia regard the billion and a half dollars which were loaned to foreign powers after the signing of the armistice as a "safe loan"?

Mr. SWANSON. If we made any unsafe loans, we ought not to make any more. However, I am talking about the moral obligation referred to in the report from which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has read, and from that very report it appears that the delay was occasioned on account of the desire to make the loan safe.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I shall have to resume the floor and insist on holding it. Other Senators have all day in which to discuss the pending subject, but I have not. I have stated and tried to make as clear as I could that there were certain conditions precedent with which it was necessary that the Liberian Government should comply before the money was paid to it. Although the Liberian Government was proceeding to comply with the requirements, all of them had not been fulfilled when the war closed, but nearly all of the conditions precedent had been complied with, or at least a sufficient number of those of greater importance, to place upon our shoulders the moral obligation to make good.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to read from another letter. In his letter of July 29, 1921, addressed to the Senate, transmitting a letter from Secretary Hughes recommending the reestablishment of the loan credit, President Harding declared:

> "It is impossible to escape the conviction that we have an obligation which the executive branch of the Government can not discharge without the properly expressed approval of Congress."
> A financial plan was drafted by the State Department and signed by the Secretary of State and the representatives of the Liberian Government in Washington on October 28, 1921. This plan was approved, without change, by the Legislature of Liberia on January 26, 1922. All of the papers relating thereto were sent to the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House by Secretary Hughes and in turn referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.
> Representatives of the State Department appeared before the committee on March 22 and 24 and April 19, 1922.
> In his statement before the committee Secretary Hughes said:
> "I can not bring myself to believe that under the circumstances of this particular and important situation Congress would not realize how deeply the honor and good faith of the United States are involved."
> In a letter to the Ways and Means Committee, dated April 1, 1922, President Harding said:
> "The simple truth about this loan situation is that our Government is unable to deal with the Republic of Liberia in that good faith which is becoming a great Republic like ours. This loan was pledged to the Republic of Liberia by the previous administration and the funds would long since have been furnished that Government except for the delay incident to the making of arrangements to guarantee its wise expenditure and certain repayment. Pending these arrangements our Government has stood in the way of the grant of the loan by any other nation and we find ourselves in the position of denying financial assistance from others and unable to keep faith in the pledges made for ourselves. I do not believe your committee or the Congress wishes to put the Government in this position."

I think, Mr. President, this substantially presents the only real issue there is in the case. I think undoubtedly the Ways and Means Committee of the House have all of the papers, including the agreement, which I think is further referred to, though perhaps not in full, by the Treasury Department.

I now ask the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] if he will kindly take charge of the joint resolution during my absence.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, if he will allow me to ask him a question, What nation on earth could have loaned Liberia any money? They all borrowed from us, and they have not paid the money back.

Mr. McCUMBER. Unless there is a moral obligation resting upon us to make good the agreement which we made to loan Liberia the money, providing she did certain things, which she has done in large part, we can not extend her any loan at all. I think, however, we are morally obligated now to loan her the money, or withdraw all claims, and allow France and Great Britain again to take charge of Liberian finances and look after their own interests.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. But, Mr. President, the Senator has not answered my question. He said that our failure to lend to Liberia had prevented other nations from lending. What nations had money to lend and would have loaned anything to Liberia?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know what nations had the money to loan; but Liberia was already indebted to certain other nations, which other nations had control of her economic affairs, and the expectation and understanding was that if we were to take charge of her affairs to the extent, I suppose, that she was indebted to other nations, their interests would be taken care of.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think there ought to be a fuller attendance of the Senate here to hear the remarks of the Senator from Idaho. If he will yield to me for that purpose, I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senate ought to know what is to be said, but I doubt if they will stay to listen.

Mr. ROBINSON. Unless the Senator objects, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Glass	Nicholson	Stanfield
Broussard	Gooding	Oddie	Sterling
Bursum	Hale	Phipps	Swanson
Cameron	Harreld	Ransdell	Trammell
Capper	Harrison	Rawson	Walsh, Mass.
Culberson	Heflin	Robinson	Warren
Curtis	Kellogg	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	McCumber	Shields	Willis
du Pont	McLean	Simmons
Ernst	McNary	Smith
France	New	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and the following Senators answered to their names when called:

Ball	Fletcher	McCormick	Nelson
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Moses

After a little delay,

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may we have a statement of the number present?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is the joint resolution now open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is open to amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Idaho moves to amend by adding the following new section:

SEC. —. That to expedite the completion of Government reclamation projects heretofore begun and extensions thereof and to take up new projects under the national irrigation law, being the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., p. 388), and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, upon request of the Secretary of the Interior, to transfer the same or any part thereof from time to time to the credit of the reclamation fund created under the said act of June 17, 1902.

The said sum of $20,000,000, or so much thereof as shall have been transferred to the reclamation fund, shall be reimbursed to the general funds of the Treasury by transferring annually the sum of $1,000,000 from the reclamation fund to the general funds of the Treasury, beginning July 1, 1940.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the basis upon which the Liberian loan is supposed to rest is a very difficult one to discover. It rests in certain undertakings apparently arising from correspondence, none of which is direct or conclusive upon any particular proposition involved in this matter. I have endeavored to go through the record and the correspondence and the hearings, and I think I have covered them all, and I repeat that the basis upon which the loan rests is difficult to locate.

That there is no legal obligation to make the loan is conceded. If there were a legal obligation there would be no occasion for this legislation. But it is contended on the part of Liberia that there is a claim upon our conscience, that we are under a moral obligation, by reason of certain circumstances and conditions, to make this loan. Of course, if there is a moral obligation we must fulfill it. But I venture to say that if it be deemed to be a moral obligation, it rests upon the slightest evidence upon which anyone ever undertook to establish that kind of an obligation. In addition to the slight evidence of the moral obligation it is necessary to establish that obligation in the face of a statute. I am going to review briefly some of the facts connected with the supposed moral obligation to see upon what proponents of this measure rest their argument.

In the first place, the second Liberty loan act, approved September 24, 1917, provided as follows:

That for the purpose of more effectually providing for the national security and defense and prosecuting the war * * * the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized, on behalf of the United States, to establish credit with the United States for any of the foreign governments then engaged in war with the enemies of the United States.

But with this distinct limitation:

With the limitation that this authority shall cease upon the termination of the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government.

Now, there was no loan made to the Liberian Government during the war. There was no contractual obligation completed for the loan during the war. What happened was this: The President of the United States, through his Secretary of State, notified the Liberian Government at one time that upon its complying with certain conditions it would have a credit of $5,000,000. Those conditions were specifically set forth in a letter by Mr. Lansing, to which I shall call attention in a few moments.

I need not argue to either lawyer or layman that if I tender a loan upon certain conditions there is neither a legal nor a moral obligation until those conditions are substantially complied with. I make the statement that the conditions were never complied with; that it has been conceded they were not complied with. Long after the war closed this Government notified the Liberian Government that the credit was withdrawn. There the entire affair might have ended. The slate was washed clean. No obligation had arisen. They were notified that the credit theretofore to be extended was withdrawn. There was no chance thereafter to comply with the conditions.

Another thing which I desire to impress at this time is that the first essay at a loan was for war purposes supposedly to bring into the battle line this puissant nation of Liberians, who had neither a soldier nor a gun. There might have been a situation developed there which would warrant the statement that it was for war purposes, but now as the new loan was taken up it was stated that it was for commercial purposes, for the purpose of building up our commerce upon the coast of Africa, a wholly different proposition from the original proposition as it was submitted to the Liberian Government. This fact alone, that the initiation was for the purpose of establishing a war credit, and that it is now for the purpose of a commercial credit to be used for entirely different purposes under an entirely different scheme and wholly different program, shows that the thing did not initiate and does not intiate in the old original transaction.

Here is what Mr. Lansing said:

The Treasury has established credit of $5,000,000 in favor of Liberia. Before any part of the money is available, however, department must have the following:

Copy of portion of Liberian constitution providing for legislation authorizing the Liberian Government to borrow money.

Copy of law authorizing loan enacted in accordance with said provision of constitution.

Copy of proceedings on the part of the executive branch of the Liberian Government in accordance with said law.

Copy of full powers given Liberian representative in United States authorizing him to sign such obligations as may be necessary and to receive the advances or take such other steps as the Liberian law may require.

You are instructed to inform Liberian Government immediately of the establishment of this credit and the legal formalities this Government considers necessary.

LANSING.

Those were the conditions which were imposed in the notice of extension of the credit, conditions which could have been complied with fully, it would seem, but which never were complied with.

Let me here correct what I think is a mistake upon the part of the able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. He seemed to be of the opinion that it was by reason of the extension of this credit that Liberia came into the war or declared war. I asked the able Senator if he had any facts or circumstances to show that, and he stated frankly that he did not have, but that he so understood. I understand to the contrary. The extension of that credit had nothing to do with Liberia declaring war against Germany. The declaration of war arose out of these circumstances. Germany had practically taken possession of the waters surrounding Liberia. Liberia was unable to trade, unable to send out goods or to get in goods, and therefore it was stated that if she would exclude the Germans, Great Britain and France, the United States assisting, would protect her ports, as it were, and enable her to trade with the other nations of the world. That she did and that those nations did. The transaction or the understanding which was to bring Liberia into the war was another transaction, and was completely fulfilled upon the part of the other nations. That is my understanding. I think that is clearly borne out by the records. The loan had nothing to do with actually causing her to declare war.

The Lansing cablegram stated:

You are instructed to inform Liberian Government immediately of the establishment of this credit and the legal formalities this Government considers necessary.

Long after the war closed, after the armistice had been signed and hostilities had ceased, these prerequisites were still uncomplied with. At a later date, a date to which I shall call attention in a few moments, by reason of this fact, our Government officially notified them that the loan was withdrawn. What possible obligation could arise under those circumstances? What moral obligation could arise under those circumstances? Liberia had gone into the war for a different reason. The conditions which had been agreed upon to take her into the war had been complied with. She was then extended credit upon certain conditions. Those conditions she never complied with, and we later withdrew the credit.

In the hearings the Secretary of State said:

We should make the loan—

Mind you, he does not place it upon the grounds which seems to apply here—for the protection and promotion of American commercial interests on the West Coast of Africa.

That is the ground on which the loan is now being made. The question is not whether the Senate of the United States wants to make a loan which it is not in honor bound to make nor in equity bound to make but whether we want to enter upon the enterprise of loaning $5,000,000 for the purpose of building up our commercial interests upon the coast of Africa. It is a pure business transaction, and very bad business at that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, if the Government should embark upon a policy of that character, trade conditions and the conditions of our commerce as they would be affected by the arrangement would be the governing consideration and not an alleged moral obligation growing out of war relations.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely so, and if there is any business in it it ought to be revealed here. If there is any commercial advantage, it should be revealed. I have been unable to find it.

Under date of November 8, 1921, F. M. Dearing, Assistant Secretary of State, wrote the President of Liberia as follows:

NOVEMBER 8, 1921.

Hon. C. D. B. KING,
President of Liberia.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In view of the execution of the financial agreement of October 28, 1921, in terms of a proposed new credit of $5,000,000, subject to appropriate action of Congress, I have the honor to inform you, in keeping with previous verbal expressions of the Department of State, that the balance of the credit established in favor of Liberia with the United States Treasury September 12, 1918, but not deemed available, has therefore been withdrawn.

I am, my dear Mr. President,
Sincerely yours,
F. M. DEARING.

Now, let us take up another feature of the loan business. I do not think it is very difficult to find out why the loan is being urged. I have before me a copy of a financial plan and depositary agreement signed by the Secretary of State and the Liberian commission on October 28, 1921. It is to be found in the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, at pages 124 and 125.

Mr. ROBINSON. The hearings on the pending joint resolution?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. On page 125 they specify what is to become of the money, or a large portion of it, which is to be loaned to Liberia. Among other things it is said:

(b) A new arrangement for that purpose shall be made between the Government of Liberia and the Government of the United States.

3. Two hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars, or such less amount as shall be sufficient to enable the Government of Liberia to pay its internal funded debt and the interest due thereon.

I have been informed by a party who has investigated the matter and who is, I think, wholly reliable—I know he is reliable so far as his information goes—that the claims which were taken care of in this way were claims which had been bought up for 10 to 20 cents on the dollar, and that they are now being turned in and taken care of by the Government of the United States and the taxpayers of the United States on the basis of dollar for dollar. I think before the joint resolution becomes a law that the Government of the United States should know what kind of claims it is that we are proposing to pay, whether they are the claims of speculators, those who have taken advantage of the Liberian people, or whether it is really to the benefit in some way of the Liberian people themselves.

I continue the reading:

4. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or such less amount as shall be sufficient to enable the Government of Liberia to pay its internal floating debt.

5. One million six hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or such less amount as may be necessary for the purpose of enabling the Government of Liberia to purchase or redeem all of its bonds now issued and outstanding representing the 5 per cent sinking-fund gold loan, due July 1, 1952, under the agreement for refunding loan dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and J. P. Morgan & Co.; Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; the National City Bank of New York; and First National Bank of New York, acting for themselves and for Robert Fleming & Co., Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas; M. M. Warburg & Co.; and Hope & Co., and for others, of the second part, including such payments of interest, costs of notices and other payments or deposits, as well as payments which may be due from the Government of Liberia under the fiscal agency agreement dated March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia, of the first part, and the National City Bank of New York, of the second part, as shall be necessary to terminate all obligations of the Government of Liberia under all of said bonds or under the agreements for refunding loan or the fiscal agency agreement above mentioned, as shall entitle the Government of Liberia in accordance with the terms of said agreement to the cancellation and destruction of all said bonds held by the fiscal agents in the sinking fund mentioned in said agreements. Advances for this purpose shall be made at such times and in such amounts as shall be determined by the Secretary of State of the United States. It is understood that the Secretary of State of the United States may determine the best method for acquiring part or all of the aforesaid bonds, but in no event shall more than par and accrued interest be paid therefor.

So it appears, Mr. President, that this money is to be utilized in large measure in the first instance to take care of certain internal debts and certain other floating debt, which I have stated has been purchased, as I am informed, and is held by speculators, and by taking up a bonded indebtedness of $1,650,000 which is due to certain bankers in New York City.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. I desire to ask the Senator from what he has been reading?

Mr. BORAH. I have been reading from a contract which has been entered into between the Secretary of State of the United States and the Liberian Government. That contract is dated October 28, 1921, and is found in the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, at page 125.

The President has written a letter in which he says the executive department finds itself a little embarrassed because of this agreement. I should think the Congress of the United States would feel considerably embarrassed if it should O. K. that agreement simply because it had been negotiated unless there was solid foundation for the loan in the first instance.

In other words, Mr. President, the Secretary of State can not bind the Congress, and I do not presume he intends to bind the Congress, by making an agreement with the Liberian Government as to what shall be done with the money. He can not thereby bind the Congress to loan the money. It was, perhaps, a matter of foresight and a matter of good judgment for the Secretary of State in advance to provide how the money should be used in case Congress should grant it, but that agreement ought not to be utilized for a moment as establishing a moral obligation upon the part of Congress to make the loan. If that were true, the entire proposition of loaning money to foreign Governments could be taken over by the executive department, and all we should have to do would be to ratify that which had been provided for. I say, therefore, that while I have no criticism of this agreement having been made in advance, it is not proper for Senators here to refer to it as binding upon Congress. It was simply negotiated on condition that the Congress should make the loan, and for no other reason, I presume.

However, let us look further into this agreement and see how much Liberia is going to get out of the proposed credit of $5,000,000. We are relieving those who have made investments in Liberian obligations, but how much is Liberia going to get?

ARTICLE V.

The Government of Liberia further engages:

1. That, for the purpose of securing the United States loan, the control during the life of the United States loan of the collection, application, and administration of all the assigned revenues and receipts in accordance with the present plan shall be vested in the financial commission, the administration of which shall be under the direction and control of the financial commissioner or, during his absence, of the next ranking member of the financial commission. The financial commission shall be composed of a financial commissioner, at a salary of $15,000 per annum; a deputy financial commissioner, at $10,000 per annum; an auditor, at $6,000 per annum; three administrative assistants of class I, at $6,000 per annum, to be assigned, respectively, as controller general of customs, commissioner general of the interior, and director general of sanitation——

Mr. McCORMICK. From what is the Senator from Idaho reading?

Mr. BORAH. I am reading from the agreement which Mr. Hughes made with the Liberian Government. The agreement continues:

10 administrative assistants of class 2, at $4,000 per annum, to be assigned, respectively, as follows: Three controllers of customs, three district commissioners, two technical advisers (roads and ports), an accountant, and an agricultural adviser; and two administrative assistants of class 3, at $3,000 per annum, to be assigned, respectively, as follows: One postal-revenue officer and one clerk assistant. All members of the financial commission shall be designated by the President of the United States, to serve during his pleasure, and shall be appointed by the President of Liberia. The administrative assistants shall be under the direction and supervision of the financial commission, which shall be organized and function according to methods of procedure to be approved by the Secretary of State of the United States.

The financial commissioner, the deputy financial commissioner, and such other members of the financial commission as may be charged with the collection, application, or administration of moneys under the provisions of the present plan shall give adequate bond. All premiums on bonds executed by the aforesaid officials shall be considered a part of the expenses of the financial commission.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, is what the Senator from Idaho is reading a contemplated treaty?

Mr. BORAH. It is an agreement which is to take effect when we get ready to advance this money.

Mr. McCORMICK. But suppose that a year after the agreement had gone into effect one of the parties to the agreement declined to go on with it, would the agreement have any legal validity?

Mr. BORAH. None at all.

Mr. McCORMICK. If Liberia undertook to overthrow the agreement at the end of 12 months, would the agreement be binding?

Mr. BORAH. Not at all.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand, the Liberian Legislature has indorsed the agreement concerning the loan?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; that is correct. But suppose the Liberian Government should repudiate it at the end of six months or at the end of a year, we should be perfectly helpless.

Mr. McCORMICK. I was wondering if it might not be better for us to vote the money outright rather than to lend it to them?

Mr. BORAH. I had rather go down into the Treasury of the United States and take out $5,000,000 and hand it to the President of Liberia than to turn it over in this way. Then, if the Liberian people could not administer it, it would be their fault; but I am not in favor of taking over Liberia and bringing her under our protection and control, establishing our authority upon the West Coast of Africa, becoming a part of this imperial scheme of finance, which is now one of the curses which are leading the world into another war. I would rather give them the money outright than to get messed up in African affairs which will cost us many millions to get away from.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator how much Liberia will get of the $5,000,000, as he has estimated it, if that amount shall be credited to her? I should like further to ask does not the agreement require that about $2,000,000 of the total amount of $5,000,000 shall be used to pay those who have made loans to Liberia?

Mr. BORAH. One million six hundred and fifty thousand dollars would go to bankers in New York City.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, does the agreement say anything with reference to the indebtedness of Liberia to France and Great Britain?

Mr. BORAH. I have not discovered that it does.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator referred to the officials constituting the membership of the financial commission.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. There are a good many of them.

Mr. BORAH. And there will be more.

Mr. STERLING. I wonder if any of them will be officials or representatives of America.

Mr. BORAH. They will likely all be Americans.

Mr. STERLING. Does it so provide in the agreement? From what I heard the Senator read I did not understand the agreement so to provide.

Mr. BORAH. It says the President of the United States shall name the members of the financial commission.

Mr. STERLING. I did not hear that portion of it.

Mr. BORAH. I presume if we ever expect to get any part of this money back, we will send Americans over there to look after it.

Mr. STERLING. Is it not provided in the agreement that the customs duties, and so forth, shall be devoted to the liquidation of this indebtedness?

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. What the agreement really provides is for our taking charge of Liberia and administering it. So far as finances, revenues, customs, and so forth, are concerned practically they are turned completely over to the United States.

Mr. STERLING. Then the agreement with Liberia in a way corresponds to the arrangement made with the Haitian Government in regard to the collection of customs, and so forth, for the purpose of paying the debts of Haiti?

Mr. BORAH. I suppose, in a general way, it does.

Now, Mr. President, observe thus far, before the credit of $5,000,000 ever reaches the Liberian people at all, some $2,000,000 of it are disposed of to those who are said to hold the "bought up" loans of Liberia and to those who hold the bonds of the Liberian Government. Speaking in round numbers, that represents about $2,000,000, $1,650,000 of it going direct to New York bankers, and then it is estimated that the other floating indebtedness, and so forth, will make up the balance of the $2,000,000. So there will be about $3,000,000 left yet to be disposed of.

In connection with that sum I want the Senate to contemplate the force and the cost thereof which is to be appointed to administer to the Liberian people $3,000,000. A battalion of officials at exorbitant salaries are provided to administer the remaining amount, assuming that the Liberian people will get the balance, amounting to $3,000,000.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator be good enough to read the officials and their salaries again?

Mr. BORAH. I will read the statement again for the Senator.

The financial commission shall be composed of a financial commissioner at a salary of $15,000 per annum——

Mr. ROBINSON. How much?

Mr. BORAH. Fifteen thousand dollars—a deputy financial commissioner at $10,000 per annum; an auditor at $6,000 per annum; three administrative assistants of class 1 at $6,000 per annum, to be assigned, respectively, as controller general of customs, commissioner general of the interior, and director general of sanitation; 10 administrative assistants of class 2 at $4,000 per annum, to be assigned, respectively, as follows: Three controllers of customs, 3 district commissioners, 2 technical advisers (roads and ports), an accountant, and an agricultural adviser; and 2 administrative assistants of class 3 at $3,000 per annum, to be assigned, respectively, as follows: One postal-revenue officer and 1 clerk assistant. All members of the financial commission shall be designated by the President of the United States to serve during his pleasure.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. In the event the expenses and salaries of the officials appointed to administer the remaining $3,000,000 exceed that sum, how is it proposed that the balance shall be paid? By another appropriation from the Treasury?

Mr. BORAH. Of course, Mr. President, I think it logical; I think it inevitable that if we once enter upon this enterprise this is merely the first step. It is not possible to rehabilitate Liberia with $3,000,000; Liberia will be no better off when she gets the loan than she was before, in my judgment. If we are going to rehabilitate Liberia, if we are going to put Liberia on her feet, establish her agriculture and build roads, $50,000,000 will not be a cent less than we will appropriate.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, has the Senator any data about the income of Liberia now—the entire revenue of the Republic?

Mr. BORAH. It is really nil.

Mr. SHIELDS. I understand, from the evidence heard before the Judiciary Committee on the subject some time ago, that in 1920 and 1921 it was about $163,000—just a little over half of 6 per cent interest on the loan that we propose to make.

Mr. BORAH. It is practically nothing.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry? It would seem, from the size of the organization that it is proposed shall be established to administer this small balance of the loan which is to go to the Liberian people, and the very large salaries to be paid, that the arrangement contemplates a permanent organization, and, as suggested by the Senator from Idaho, the advancement of other sums in the future by this Government to Liberia; and, as said by the Senator from Idaho, certainly $5,000,000 would prove inadequate for any general plan of rehabilitation.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I suppose it is on account of the climatic conditions that the salaries are put so high; and I suppose that has something to do with the number of employees, because it is contemplated, no doubt, that owing to climatic conditions some of them may be sick, and it is desired to have a reserve force there to perform the functions.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator's construction is likely the correct one. You see, there we have 10 administrative assistants.

Mr. NELSON. But suppose half of them get the fever there?

Mr. BORAH. Yes, and suppose the other half of them are guilty of defalcation, and have to get out of the country? That is what happens in these administrations abroad. There is not any form of government so calculated to be corrupt as the administration of another people's Government 3,000 miles away from the source of authority. It has been a source of corruption from the time of Rome until to-day, and it does not make any difference what kind of men you try to select; it always results in dissatisfaction to the people who are having the government administered for them, and dissatisfaction for the people who are administering the government. If there is not actual corruption, there is the charge of corruption, and the people lose faith in the government, and the result of it is that it proves unsatisfactory to everybody. It is a vicious system, and speaking for myself, I do not want any interests in Africa. I am perfectly sure from all the facts it will not prove beneficial to either Liberia or the United States. This money will all be consumed in high salaries, bureaucratic waste, and the common people of Liberia will be no better for the amount which the taxpayers of the United States have donated.

I am opposed to this loan, then, for three reasons, among others:

First. There is no legal obligation for the loan.

Second. In my judgment there is no moral obligation for the loan.

Third. I am perfectly satisfied that the loan never will benefit the Liberian people a particle, and it never will benefit the United States. What will result in the end is that we will have to go in there and practically take possession of Liberia and ultimately claim it as our own territory, and in my judgment that would be a very great misfortune.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he does not think it will result in our being somewhat in the same situation that we are in with reference to San Domingo and Haiti? We will have the same trouble arising hereafter as to Liberia that has arisen in connection with both San Domingo and Haiti.

Mr. BORAH. I think that is true; but, Mr. President, attached to this discussion there is a far more important question than the mere question of loaning $5,000,000 to Liberia.

At this time in this country you can hardly find money for the purpose of starting any new enterprise. The able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] read an editorial in the Washington Post a few days ago to the effect that untold billions were locked up in New York City banks, using the language of the Senator, "crying out for investment." Mr. President, if that be true, why is it that you scarcely ever hear of a new enterprise in this country, of a development of any kind out of the ordinary? If that be true, why is it that the railroads that are pleading for money with which to rehabilitate themselves, with which to reconstruct their tracks, with which to buy cars and put themselves in condition to do the transportation work of the country, can get no money? One reason is that not merely millions but billions of money each and every year are going from the United States into foreign investments, going into exploitation of some people, and the United States is expected to do precisely what we are doing here. When the loan gets a little bad, or the situation gets critical, the United States steps in and becomes a collector for the loan agents who have made the loan abroad.

We went into Nicaragua and practically took possession of Nicaragua. The financiers of New York City exploited Nicaragua to the tune of billions. There is practically no limitation upon their profits in such enterprises. There is practically no limitation upon the amount which they make, the interest which they may draw, and that which they may realize. Then we went into Haiti, and practically at the point of the bayonet we forced upon the Haitian people a loan of from $10,000,000 to $14,000,000 which they were objecting to taking.

Why did we force it upon them? Is it not an anomalous condition that a nation will be forced to take a loan when it says it does not need it and does not want it? If you will read the prospectus of that loan, which I have here in my possession, there will be no difficulty in arriving at why it was forced upon them. It was because when the commissions were paid and the exorbitant interest was paid the loan realized for those who were loaning it far beyond anything that could possibly be realized in this country. The same was true with reference to Santo Domingo. And this is but another step—a small one, indeed, but reaching into a vast region of country into which I do not desire to go. I should prefer to see this money invested in our own country unless it can be demonstrated beyond peradventure that it is to be directly beneficial to the people who are to receive it abroad.

Mr. President, I have introduced here an amendment providing for a loan to the reclamation fund. I am opposed to this bill upon policy and upon principle; but out in the West there are vast tracts of arid land upon which settlers moved—some of them 8 and 10 years ago, some of them 20 years ago. In some instances there was an express obligation on the part of the Government to reclaim those lands and to give those home hunters an opportunity to build homes. In other instances there was the strongest possible moral obligation, because the Government advertised that within certain periods and under certain conditions the lands would be reclaimed; and people came from all parts of the United States hungry for land and settled upon these lands, and there they have remained for years and years under the most adverse circumstances waiting for the Government to redeem its pledge. The war came on, and among other things which had to be put aside and had to suffer was home building throughout this region of country. So these people have been there, under circumstances and conditions which it would be difficult to describe, waiting month after month and year after year for the Government to fulfill its express or its implied obligation to bring the water to their lands that they might build themselves homes.

I am wondering if there is any stronger obligation resting upon this Government to rehabilitate the agricultural conditions of Liberia than there is to build homes upon these western deserts, where the citizen moved years ago, waiting for his Government to fulfill its obligations. If the money is at hand to extend foreign credit, to take up foreign loans of bankers, certainly we ought to be ready to help take care of our own obligations here at home. While I do not propose to discuss this measure in detail this afternoon, I call attention to it, that the Senate may reflect upon it before they come to vote upon it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he expects to discuss the amendment to-morrow?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think we are all agreed that there is no legal obligation growing out of this transaction, and the question as to whether or not the Government of the United States is under a moral obligation to carry out this loan depends largely upon the feeling of every Senator. Each must settle that question for himself. The former Secretary of State, Mr. Lansing, thought there was a moral obligation. The present Secretary of State thinks there is a moral obligation. I believe a careful review of the facts will convince those who have not studied the question that there is a moral obligation.

On August 4, 1917, Liberia declared war against Germany. It is admitted by Secretary Lansing that that was done at the request of the United States, Great Britain, and France.

After Liberia declared war against Germany she needed financial assistance, and in January, 1918, a request was submitted to the United States, through the President and council of Liberia, for a loan of not less than $5,000,000. That proposition came to the Secretary of State and by him was submitted to the President of the United States, with a recommendation that the loan be approved. The President did approve the loan and authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to notify the Liberian Government that they had been given a credit of $5,000,000. The Secretary served that notice upon the Government of Liberia and asked for certain information, certain documents, and certain agreements.

But the Government did not stop there. The distinguished Senator from Idaho overlooks the fact that immediately upon the Government of Liberia being notified that $5,000,000 had been placed to the credit of Liberia, this Government, through our Secretary of State, informed Great Britain and France that that amount had been placed to the credit of Liberia.

It is true that the proposition first submitted was not accepted, but the Liberian Government did not give up its desire for the money; it did not withdraw its application, and this Government did not at that time, and not until long afterwards, withdraw the loan which it had placed to the credit of Liberia. It advanced $30,000 on that loan to that Government.

Mr. WILLIS. When?

Mr. CURTIS. In 1919.

Mr. BORAH. It advanced $26,000 to enable the Liberian delegates to attend the peace conference at Paris.

Mr. CURTIS. No matter what it was for, it advanced that much money, and thus recognized the loan.

Mr. SHIELDS. The advance of that $26,000 was after the armistice was signed, was it not?

Mr. CURTIS. Probably after the armistice was signed, but not before the war ended, so far as the United States was concerned.

Mr. SHIELDS. That $26,000 was to pay the expenses of the delegates to the Peace Conference?

Mr. CURTIS. That I do not know.

Mr. BORAH. That was the purpose, Mr. President.

Mr. SHIELDS. They could not even raise funds to pay the expenses of their delegates to the Peace Conference.

Mr. BORAH. I wish the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] were here. He knows all about the loan of the money for that junketing trip. The money was loaned after the war was over, advanced to them, and they used it for making a trip to Paris.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Kansas will permit——

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. In connection with the remark just made by the Senator from Idaho, as I understood the Senator from Virginia, he stated on the floor that the $26,000 which was advanced was advanced without authority.

Mr. CURTIS. It was advanced, the advance was recognized by the Liberian Government, and they are willing to pay it back when we loan them the $5,000,000.

It seems to me that if a government in need of money negotiates with another government, and the latter government informs them in writing that the loan will be made, and then notifies other creditors that it has established a credit, there is a moral obligation at least to carry out the undertaking.

The Senator from Idaho very adroitly said that all the negotiations under the agreement were abandoned, and that this last proposition is entirely new. The Secretary of State does not agree with the Senator from Idaho on that question. In a letter under date of April 5, 1922, the Secretary of State said:

Because of unavoidable delay, a plan to control the application and administration of this credit was not submitted to the Liberian Government until June 15, 1920.

The application was made in 1918.

Certain modifications were requested in this loan plan by the Liberian Legislature, but there was no question of the withdrawal of the offer of the money already promised, the time when the credit should be made available depending on satisfactory agreements as to details of administration.

Such an agreement was concluded on October 28, 1921.

That is the agreement from which the Senator from Idaho has read, and I need not repeat what he said in reference to it.

I may add, however, that in giving the figures, a few were overlooked by the Senator from Idaho; of course, not intentionally. First, the return of the $30,000 advanced by this Government was provided for; then a payment of certain obligations of $560,000; then an obligation to take care of the funding of a debt of $233,000; then the settlement of a debt of $350,000, which I judge was a floating debt; then the repayment of $1,650,000 owed to the bankers in New York and France, and I think probably in Great Britain. I believe, if the matter were looked into, most of the $1,650,000 could be traced to the bonds issued by the Government and held in France and England, and afterwards purchased by the New York bankers. Then there was $348,000, as read by the Senator, making in all $3,171,000 accounted for. As I understand it, the balance of the money is to be used in making internal improvements.

I know nothing about conditions in Liberia, and I was not in the committee when this question was presented, but I am told the Liberians have resources which, when developed, will be ample to repay this money. It does seem to me, in view of what has been said by the former Secretary of State, Mr. Lansing, and the present Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, that there is a moral obligation to make this loan, that this money should be advanced, and this agreement carried out.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, when this money was put to the credit of the Liberian Government, who authorized it? Did Congress ever authorize it?

Mr. CURTIS. The President had authority, under the second Liberty loan act, to make the loan. There is no question about that; I do not think anyone will dispute it.

Mr. HARRELD. What became of the credit? If the money was deposited to the credit of Liberia, how was that action set aside?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think the money was really deposited to their credit. They were notified that a credit had been established in that amount, and that, of course, the money would not be appropriated and deposited until the contracts referred to were sent in properly approved by our Government.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from Idaho distinctly stated, in reading the Liberty loan act, the specific purposes for which the Government could make those loans. This is an entirely different purpose from those contemplated under the second Liberty loan act. As that Senator well said, if this loan be for an entirely different purpose from those enumerated in the second Liberty loan act, how could there be a moral obligation to make a loan entirely different from what that act provided for?

Mr. BORAH. The second Liberty loan act provides, after providing for the authority of the President to extend credit upon behalf of the Governments engaged in the war with Germany:

With the limitation that this authority shall cease upon the termination of the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government.

If the Senator from Kansas will permit me——

Mr. CURTIS. I yield. We want to get all the facts.

Mr. BORAH. This is what happened. The Liberian Government was notified that a credit had been established with this Government for $5,000,000, upon certain terms and conditions to be complied with before it could be drawn upon. Those terms and conditions, as we contend and as I think the correspondence shows beyond question, were never complied with. That is the way it ended.

Mr. CURTIS. But the Senator will no doubt admit that negotiations were going on between the two Governments all the time, and it was like any other proposition submitted, even between individuals.

Mr. BORAH. No, Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. An examination of the facts bears out that statement, because the Governments were in continual negotiation, correspondence passed, and at last a new agreement was drawn up.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, no negotiations continued during the time in which the President had authority under the act to complete the loan. When the war with Germany ceased, the negotiations had to end for want of authority, and that is the reason why those seeking to make the loan are here. They would not be here if they had the authority.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator hold that the time expired upon the signing of the armistice or upon the passage of the resolution declaring that war no longer existed between the United States and Germany?

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator from Kansas will yield for a moment, I do not believe this statement from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1921 has been brought to the attention of the Senate; at least, I have not heard it. This is the statement in regard to Liberia:

The credit in favor of Liberia was established only for specific purposes. The balance of this credit was withdrawn on November 4, 1921.

Mr. CURTIS. That was read by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. STERLING. I did not know it had been read by that Senator.

Mr. SHIELDS. May I ask the date of the agreement to make this loan?

Mr. CURTIS. The last agreement?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. October 28 of last year. The first one was dated September 12, 1918.

Mr. SHIELDS. In view of the inquiry of the Senator from Oklahoma, I would like to ask the Senator from Idaho if he read the statute setting forth the purposes for which such a loan was to be made?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I read it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think it would be well right in that connection to read a few words, if the Senator from Kansas will yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I am perfectly willing to have it read.

Mr. SHIELDS. Just a part of it. It provides:

That for the purpose of more effectually providing for the national security and defense and the prosecution of the war.

I understand this loan was made after the war was practically over, and, of course, the Liberian Government knew that, and knew whether or not the Secretary of War or anybody else was acting by authority of law.

Mr. CURTIS. Application for the loan was made in January, 1918. The loan was placed to their credit or the credit was established on September 9, 1918, and notice to that effect was sent to them on September 12, 1918.

Mr. SHIELDS. To be used, of course, for the purposes expressed in the statute, but the war stopped before they could even get the money, much less use it for those purposes.

Mr. CURTIS. I have called to the attention of the Senate what Secretary Lansing said with reference to the moral obligation and the matter is presented now, as I said a moment ago, wholly upon the question that there is a moral obligation. When Secretary Hughes appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, he said:

I think it a point of honor that this loan should be made, and I shall briefly endeavor to explain why I think that the question of primary importance, that is to say, the moral obligation of the United States is involved.

I am not going to read all his testimony, but he said further:

Liberia had entered the war, you might say, at the instance of the United States and came within the description of these governments. Liberia had greatly suffered by reason of her relation to the war.

* * * * * *

Now, what is the basis of a moral obligation? I take it to be a promise on which another has acted. We told the Liberian Government that, assuming that the proper provisions for the protection of the loan was provided, this credit was open.

We went further than that. And now I must refer to a confidential paper which I hope will not be put upon the minutes, but which I think you should closely study, and which is found on page 58 of the confidential print.

I have referred to those letters and one of them has been read by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. It is unnecessary to read the letters. It all comes back to one point, and that is that the credit was established, the Liberian Government was notified, and England and France were notified. Some money was advanced, and the Liberian Government is asking us to advance the balance of the loan. I think clearly there is a moral obligation existing, and I hope the joint resolution will be passed.

I wish to say that to-morrow, after the Senator from Idaho has discussed his amendment in regard to irrigation projects, I shall probably have something to say upon that subject.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. I would like to ask the Senator if he knows of other claims of a similar nature which may be pending?

Mr. CURTIS. I read in the report this morning, which was the first time I had an opportunity to read it, that there is no other similar claim pending and that this does not establish a precedent.

Mr. MOSES. Members of the Committee on Foreign Relations will readily recall that former Secretary of the Treasury Houston appeared before the committee in confidential session, shortly before his exit from office, and set forth several credits which he averred were not only moral obligations, but in one case, involving some $33,000,000, as I recall, a complete legal obligation, a written contract having been entered into for the payment of certain military expenses incurred by one of the nations engaged in the war upon our side, and awaiting merely a vouchering of the accounts in order to secure its payment. I wondered why this particular claim had been singled out on the basis of moral obligation if there were others involving actually validated legal obligations which had been overlooked.

Mr. CURTIS. A question similar to the one asked by the Senator from New Hampshire was asked Secretary Hughes, and my recollection is that he answered that there was no similar case and that this would not establish a precedent.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator said that the resources of Liberia are sufficient to pay the debt. I have looked into the testimony given before the Ways and Means Committee of the House and it seems there are only 40,000 civilized negroes in Liberia and about 1,000,000 uncivilized negroes. The revenues last year were $446,000 and the expenses of the Government were $500,000. The additional $300,000 annual payment would leave a deficit annually of $350,000. Where does the Senator expect to get the money from those 40,000 people to pay any such deficit?

Mr. CURTIS. A few days ago I had occasion to read several articles upon Liberia and I became convinced, after reading those articles, that Liberia is a very rich country indeed and has many resources which, if properly developed, can be used for the payment of these obligations and also to pay the expenses of the Government.

Mr. SWANSON. I would like to know where those resources are and where the sources of revenue are to be found. I have looked everywhere and I have not been able to learn where they ever had any revenue. The indebtedness of the country now existing was contracted in 1912, prior to the war, and it amounts to over $1,000,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. The best evidence of the fact that there is nothing there to satisfy the keen financial appetite of Morgan & Co. and Great Britain is that they are trying to get out and they want us to pay so that they can get out.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand the testimony, the Government of the United States under a former administration wanted to get France and Britain out so that we could get in.

Mr. BORAH. I do not care anything about which administration did it. That is wholly immaterial to me. I know that if Great Britain and France were satisfied with their presence in Liberia they would stay there. I know that if Morgan & Co. and the other bankers were satisfied with their security they would not be endeavoring to get us to take it up.

Mr. NELSON. The hearings before our committee on this matter were not printed, but my impression is that the origin of these debts was through a German or French syndicate which agreed to make certain improvements in Liberia. They failed to do it. They have bonds or Liberian securities, and the New Yorkers became the residuary legatees of those debts and took them over from the French or German syndicate. I think upon investigation that will be found to be the case.

Mr. BORAH. I think that is correct.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I would like to inquire how getting France and Great Britain out and getting ourselves in was conducive to the security of this Nation and to the prosecution of the war? Only for those two purposes could any loans be made or credits established.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator will have to ask some one else, because I can not tell him.

Mr. GLASS. I was asking the Senator from Kansas how getting Great Britain and France out and getting ourselves in was at all conducive to the security of this Nation or to the prosecution of the war. That is what I would like to know. As a matter of fact, there is not one particle of merit in the contention here. As I have said, the payment of the $26,000 pending the negotiation was the only item in all the war loans which in my judgment can not be justified. The $26,000 was paid for what purpose? Was it paid for any purpose connected with the security of this Nation, for any purpose that related to the prosecution of the war? No; it was paid to afford the representatives of Liberia a junket to the Paris peace conference, and that was all.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely so. Mr. President, if this is a moral obligation there is a moral obligation to other governments resting upon much stronger evidence covering some millions or hundreds of millions. We owe a vast amount of money to Russia upon this basis. We established a tremendous credit for Russia. She had only about one-third of it. Now the evidence is the same precisely. We paid to Russia $186,000,000 upon that credit. Russia would have a right as a moral proposition to come and ask us to complete the payment. I have forgotten the exact figures, but they are very large, because Russia comprises a very large territory and was deemed to be very important at that time.

Mr. GLASS. I would like to ask the Senator from Idaho, who is a distinguished lawyer, if a moral obligation may be incurred in the face of the express language of a statute governing fiscal transactions?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly not.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator referred to the credit established with Russia. In the report of the Secretary of the Treasury the credit was stated to have been $187,729,750, and that credit was exhausted just to the cent. That was the only Russian credit, I think.

Mr. BORAH. I can furnish to the Senator to-morrow, I am sure, a statement of the credit established and the amount which was actually paid out.

Mr. STERLING. In the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury, as well as in his previous report, he gave the full amount of the credit and then gave the amount advanced on that credit. I remember the report of 1920, in which that amount was given as the credit established for Russia, and that amount was given as the amount drawn.

Mr. BORAH. I do not remember that particular report, but I am quite sure that a very much larger sum in the way of credit was established. I know that Russia had about $186,000,000, but that was only a small portion of the credit which was first established.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] desires to make a few remarks on the pending joint resolution, but does not want to do so at this time. If there is no one else who desires to talk on the unfinished business this evening, I shall ask to have it temporarily laid aside. I would like to have the measure disposed of this evening, but that I presume is impossible.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to submit some remarks before the measure is finally acted upon, but prefer not to do so this evening because of the condition of my throat.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. FRANCE. I would only consent to that with the understanding that it is impossible to finish the measure to-night. I would much prefer to have it finished to-night.

Mr. CURTIS. It is perfectly apparent, with the amendment of the Senator from Idaho pending and other amendments which I have been informed will be offered, that it is impossible to dispose of the joint resolution to-night. I would not care to attempt to hold the Senate here very much longer. There is barely a quorum in the city, and we would have a hard time to get a quorum here at this time in the afternoon. I renew my request for unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. FRANCE. To be taken up to-morrow as the unfinished business?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. FRANCE. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FRANCE. I ask leave to offer an amendment to the Liberian loan joint resolution. I ask that the amendment may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DAMAGES FOR COLLISIONS WITH NAVAL VESSELS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senate this afternoon on the call of the calendar passed the bill (S. 2674) to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels. An amendment was made to allow the settlement of claims in the sum of $3,000 or less. I find that order of business 741, the bill (H. R. 5349) to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels, is a House bill identical with the Senate bill passed this afternoon. The House bill has been reported from the Committee on Claims. The committee recommends the settlement of claims for damages to the limit of $5,000 instead of $1,000, as passed by the House. In order to get results it would be better for us to pass the House bill with an amendment in accordance with the action of the Senate this afternoon, and then the matter could go to conference. So I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House bill 5349 with the understanding that I shall offer an amendment to make the amount of claims $3,000 to correspond with the action of the Senate on the Senate bill this afternoon.

Mr. ROBINSON. What was the action of the House?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The action of the House was to fix a maximum of $1,000, while the Senate bill as passed provided a maximum of $3,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. I recall the circumstances now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to make the bill conform to the action of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the request of the Senator. I think it is a very reasonable one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the House bill referred to by the Senator from Washington?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5349) to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels, which had been reported by the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, lines 10 and 11, to strike out the words "occurring after the passage of this amendatory act," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "occasioned since the 6th day of April, 1917"; and, on page 2, line 13, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision contained in the act entitled "An act making appropriation for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes," approved June 24, 1910 (Public, No. 261, 61st Cong., 2d sess.), authorizing the Secretary of the Navy "to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine the amounts due on all claims for damages where the amount of the claim does not exceed the sum of $500, hereafter occasioned by collision, for which collisions vessels of the Navy shall be found to be responsible, and report the amounts so determined to be due the claimants to Congress at each session thereof through the Treasury Department for payment as legal claims out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows, namely:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine the amounts due on all claims for damages occasioned since the 6th day of April, 1917, where the amount of the claim does not exceed the sum of $5,000, occasioned by collisions or damage incident to the operation of vessels for which collisions or other damage vessels of the Navy or vessels in the naval service shall be found to be responsible, and report the amounts so ascertained and determined to be due the claimants to the Congress through the Treasury Department for payment as legal claims out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move to amend by striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$3,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the votes whereby the bill (S. 2674) to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed will be reconsidered, and the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 3086, in order that I may move to concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3086) providing for the removal of snow and ice from the paved sidewalks of the District of Columbia, which was, on page 3, line 10, after the word "State," to insert "except the Capitol buildings and grounds and the Congressional Library building."

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5214) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. KNUTSON, Mr. ROBSION, and Mr. RANKIN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11212) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. LEHLBACH, Mr. FAIRFIELD, and Mr. BLACK were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10248) authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Salt River reclamation project, Arizona.

The message also announced that the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of the United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10193) extending time for allotments on the Crow Reservation; protecting certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes; relief of Indians occupying certain lands in Arizona, New Mexico, and California; issuing patents in certain cases; establishing a revolving fund on the Rosebud Reservation; memorial to Indians of the Rosebud Reservation killed in the World War; conferring authority on the Secretary of the Interior as to alienation in certain Indian allotments; and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 322) favoring the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people.

The message further announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 169) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to receive for instruction at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis Mr. Willem van Doorn, a subject of the Netherlands.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11212) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the Presiding Officer appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. STERLING, Mr. CUMMINS, and Mr. RANSDELL conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, September 12, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, September 11, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou art all in all, our heavenly Father, and each passing day may it be a source of joy and strength to us. May we strive to serve Thee in our daily duties by a high standard of thinking, feeling, and living. Give rich blessing and strength to our President as he waits in anxious silence above the stricken companion of his years. O God, in yonder chamber, press not the cup of death to their breathless lips. O Lamp of Life, shine forth and linger there and leave them not alone. From the gloom let come the morning's glow of hope and promise. Tenderly, graciously, may Thy grace to bear, Thy spirit to bless, and Thy power to heal never fail. Give wisdom and skill to those who love to serve. Come to this assembly and give strength to those who may be under burdens, hope to those who may be despondent, and pardon to all. Increase our faith and continue to sweeten the song of life. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

IMPEACHMENT OF ATTORNEY GENERAL DAUGHERTY.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Minnesota rise?

Mr. KELLER. I rise to a question of the highest privilege. I impeach Harry M. Daugherty——

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. There are a great many important matters to come up to-day, and the Senate has not yet messaged over the coal bill. I think it would be a good idea to have a quorum present. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and thirty-two Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I impeach Harry M. Daugherty, Attorney General of the United States, for high crimes and misdemeanors in office.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition on that high privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, because of the privileged character of this proceeding I shall object——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman that he ought first to prefer his charges.

Mr. KELLER. I will do that in due time.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman ought to do it now.

Mr. KELLER. I thought that in the memorial I might present the charges.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman rises to a question of this high privilege he ought to present definite charges at the outset.

Mr. KELLER. The Chair means such charges as acts of the Attorney General?

The SPEAKER. Yes; definite charges.

Mr. KELLER. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I will do so.

First. Harry M. Daugherty, Attorney General of the United States, has used his high office to violate the Constitution of the United States in the following particulars:

(1) By abridging freedom of speech.

(2) By abridging the freedom of the press.

(3) By abridging the right of people peaceably to assemble.

Second. That, unmindful of the duties of his office and his oath to defend the Constitution of the United States, and unmindful of his obligations to discharge those duties faithfully and impartially, the said Harry M. Daugherty has, in his capacity of Attorney General of the United States, conducted himself in a manner arbitrary, oppressive, unjust, and illegal.

Third. He has, without warrant, threatened with punishment citizens of the United States who have opposed his attempts to override the Constitution and the laws of this Nation.

Fourth. He has used the funds of his office illegally and without warrant in the prosecution of individuals and organizations for certain lawful acts which, under the law, he was specifically forbidden to prosecute.

Fifth. He has failed to prosecute individuals and organizations violating the law after those violations have become public scandal.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the recitation of generalities does not under the rules of this House constitute an impeachment of a public official; that this recitation is nothing but generalities, no specific charge of malfeasance in office, no specific charge of improper conduct in office, but a mere recitation of generalities which could be lodged against any official of the United States. I make the point of order that it does not come within the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not hear the gentleman from Minnesota very well, but the Chair thought that there were definite charges. [After examining the written charges.] The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. KELLER. Sixth. He has defeated the ends of justice by recommending the release from prison of wealthy offenders against the Sherman Antitrust Act.

Seventh. He has failed to prosecute defendants legally indicted for crimes against the people.

Mr. Speaker, from all precedent in impeachment cases, the House can not refuse to consider an impeachment brought publicly and seriously on the floor of this Chamber against a public official.

I offer, therefore, the following resolution and am prepared to appear before a committee of the House, there to produce evidence and witnesses in proof of my charges.

Mr. Speaker, I offer this resolution, and I would like to have the Clerk read it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 425.

Whereas impeachment of Harry M. Daugherty, Attorney General of the United States, has been made on the floor of the House by the Representative from the fourth district of Minnesota: Be it Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they hereby are, authorized and directed to inquire into the official conduct of Harry M. Daugherty, Attorney General of the United States, and to report to the House whether, in their opinion, the said Harry M. Daugherty has been guilty of any acts which in contemplation of the Constitution are high crimes or misdemeanors requiring the interposition of the constitutional powers of this House; and that the said committee have power to send for persons and papers and to administer the customary oaths to witnesses.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves the reference of the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is in accordance with the usual practice of the House in matters of this sort to have a resolution of impeachment considered by the Committee on the Judiciary. While it is true in some cases there have been special committees appointed, the usual practice is otherwise. I move the previous question on my motion.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. I suggest to the Chair the gentleman from Minnesota has the floor, and if he wishes to discuss it before its reference under the rule he has the right to point out what the specific facts are which he charges. It is true he did not object when the gentleman from Wyoming made his motion, but he did not yield the floor, Mr. Speaker. I think it is not very material in this instance, but in a matter of this kind we certainly ought not to set a precedent by which a man can be taken off his feet in the midst of his proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the facts. The gentleman addressed the House and offered a resolution, and the gentleman from Minnesota then moved the adoption of that resolution, and, of course, he yielded the floor——

Mr. WINGO. I beg the Speaker's pardon, but if the Speaker will listen for just a moment. The motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary by the adoption of the resolution is purely incidental and ancillary to his action. The gentleman had obtained the floor on the impeachment charge.

Now, it was his duty, having the floor, and it was his right to make one of two motions. Now, he made a motion that he had a perfect right to make. He could have waited until he had finished to make the motion, but the better practice would have been to make the motion and then address himself to the disposition of the impeachment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas states the facts accurately. The gentleman had the floor and the Chair had recognized him and he was addressing the House. He then moved the adoption of the resolution. The Chair was entirely in ignorance as to whether the gentleman desired to further address the House. But he made the motion. Thereupon the gentleman from Wyoming moved, as he had the right to do, the Chair thinks, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KELLER] having made a motion, that the whole matter be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and upon that he has moved the previous question. The Chair thinks he had the right to do so, and that that is the proper practice.

Mr. WINGO. Does the Speaker hold that a Member having the floor and has not indicated his intention to yield, can of right be taken off the floor by some one making a privileged motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think he could unless he had made his motion.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman had made it. And the protest is not so much with reference to this instance, but a man in any solemn proceeding like it could be taken off the floor while making serious charges.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman made a motion for the disposition of the matter and thereupon the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] made another motion, and upon that the previous question was ordered.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming for the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I again ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I object. However, I withhold it for a moment in order to ask the gentleman on what subject he wishes to address the House?

Mr. KELLER. On the impeachment proceeding.

Mr. KEARNS. I object.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel, had requested a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. KELLOGG, and Mr. SMITH as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6507) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, had requested a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. BURSUM, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. WALSH of Montana as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon the amendments to the bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. BORAH, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5214) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, had requested a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. BURSUM, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. WALSH of Montana as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 9275. An act for the relief of Frances Kelly;

H. R. 7053. An act to grant certain lands to the city of Canon City, Colo., for a public park;

H. R. 2722. An act for the relief of W. W. McGrath;

H. R. 3034. An act for the relief of Lizzie Askell;

H. R. 5918. An act for the relief of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co.;

H. R. 6929. An act for the relief of Horace E. Walker;

H. R. 7967. An act granting certain lands to Escambia County, Fla., for a public park;

H. R. 8073. An act for the relief of Kineo Trust Co.;

H. R. 8173. An act for the relief of Mrs. E. H. Jackson;

H. R. 9275. An act for the relief of Frances Kelly;

H. R. 10672. An act to amend the act of July 24, 1919, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920";

H. R. 11212. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes";

H. R. 243. An act providing for the construction of a spillway and drainage ditch to lower and maintain the level of Lake Andes, S. Dak.;

H. R. 7912. An act to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case;

H. R. 10419. An act validating certain applications for and entries of public lands;

H. Con. Res. 66. Concurrent resolution to provide for the extermination and banishment of insects from the House Office Building, the Capitol, and the Senate Office Building;

PENSIONS.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 6507, an omnibus pension bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and disagree to Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for, a bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6507) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if I recall, in looking over the proceedings in the Senate, they took one of the House bills and put in a lot of Senate bills as amendments, and then put in general amendments applying to the pension system of the country. I do not know whether the minority members of the Pension Committee have been consulted as to sending this to conference or not, but it is a matter of importance in sending bills to conference that have in them provisions which affect the general pension policy of the country. I would like to ask the gentleman to withhold his request until I can talk with some of the Democratic members of the committee.

Mr. FULLER. All the Democratic members who are in the city—two, I think—were at the meeting this morning, and it was unanimously agreed to take this course. The Senate had eight of our bills, and they put them all in one omnibus bill, and included also some Senate bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. FULLER, Mr. BLAND of Indiana, and Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee.

COAL FACT-FINDING COMMISSION.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12377, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12377, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States Coal Commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it in order to make a motion to concur in the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. This is a unanimous-consent request, and the matter is only before the House so far by unanimous consent. Therefore it would not be in order now.

Mr. LONDON. May I ask the Speaker if, when it is in such condition, I may be recognized for that motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair sees only one way that the gentleman can do it. The Chair does not see how he could consent conditionally, but the Chair thinks the gentleman could obtain the same relief my moving to instruct the conferees.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to indicate what are supposed to be the real questions in controversy, if there is any controversy. I do not ask the gentleman to discuss anything immaterial, but questions that he considers material.

Mr. WINSLOW. There are a number of them. The question propounded by the gentleman from Virginia is a perfectly natural and orderly one, but in view of the considerable cut-up of the bill on the part of the Senate, it is a difficult matter to explain.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I may say to the gentleman that I do not care about the matter of controversy, but he knows what are the substantial questions at issue.

Mr. WINSLOW. One of the particular questions is a modification of the number of commissioners from nine to five. Another one is the separate report to cover the anthracite business as contrasted with coal and fuel business.

Then comes a suggestion as to different dates of making reports. The amount of money to be appropriated to meet the expenses of the work is reduced from $300,000 to $100,000, and there are other matters of no great importance. If the gentleman would like to look at this for a moment I shall be pleased to show it to him.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I had assumed that perhaps the most fundamental question is the question as to whether the inquiry shall extend to the proposed nationalization of the coal industry.

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes. That is here, and it should be emphasized. It makes it a very different proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the conferees when appointed be instructed to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the conferees when appointed be instructed to concur in the Senate amendments. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 117.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. WINSLOW, Mr. HOCH, and Mr. BARKLEY.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF COAL.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12472, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the request of the Senate for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12472, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the request of the Senate for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributor, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to give his conception of the real questions in controversy.

Mr. WINSLOW. I do not wish to start out with an apology, but I wish to say to the Members of the House that this information did not come to hand until this very morning in form to be compared.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If it will embarrass the gentleman to answer the question, I will not press it.

Mr. WINSLOW. No. It may be a little slow, but I have been over the ground several times with others.

One of the important features is the elimination of the penalty clauses.

Another is the elimination of any allowance to be made for expenses incurred in taking down this coal trouble previous to the passage of this bill, dating back to May 15.

The Senate bill has limited in some respects the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission in respect to car service. It has limited the time during which the bill shall be considered in force to July 1, 1923, if I am not mistaken, rather than to January 21, 1924. The termination of the act on July 1, 1923, appears to carry with it the elimination of the right of the President to bring it up to the rest of the unexpired period.

These are the important features, but there is a great deal of phrasing of a different kind but much to the same purpose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I make an inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes, indeed.

Mr. GARNER. I am advised from the office of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] that he is now in Kentucky. As I understand it you are going to work as conferees to-day or to-morrow. I ask that the next member ranking on the committee be substituted for the gentleman from Kentucky, not only in this conference but in the other one also.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if it is agreeable to the next man on the committee to serve on the conference?

Mr. GARNER. I assume that if he is a Democrat, he is willing to do his duty, and that he will serve. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. That is a hopeful suggestion. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the next ranking minority member on the committee be substituted in place of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. Will the gentleman suggest the name?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. RAYBURN is the next one.

The SPEAKER. That Mr. RAYBURN be appointed instead of Mr. BARKLEY. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as conferees on the part of the House Mr. WINSLOW and Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota; and Mr. RAYBURN on both bills.

ADDITIONAL FEDERAL JUDGES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement accompanying the conference report was read.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the following number of district judges for the United States district courts in the districts specified in addition to those now authorized by law:

"For the district of Massachusetts, 2; for the eastern district of New York, 1; for the southern district of New York, 2; for the district of New Jersey, 1; for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, 1; for the western district of Pennsylvania, 1; for the northern district of Texas, 1; for the southern district of Florida, 1; for the eastern district of Michigan, 1; for the northern district of Ohio, 1; for the middle district of Tennessee, 1; for the northern district of Illinois, 1; for the eastern district of Illinois, 1; for the district of Minnesota, 1; for the eastern district of Missouri, 1; for the western district of Missouri, 1; for the eastern district of Oklahoma, 1; for the district of Montana, 1; for the northern district of California, 1; for the southern district of California, 1; for the district of New Mexico, 1; and for the district of Arizona, 1.

"A vacancy occurring, more than two years after the passage of this act, in the office of any district judge appointed pursuant to this act, except for the middle district of Tennessee, shall not be filled unless Congress shall so provide, and if an appointment is made to fill such a vacancy occurring within two years a vacancy thereafter occurring in said office shall not be filled unless Congress shall so provide: Provided, however, That in case a vacancy occurs in the district of New Mexico at any time after the passage of this act, there shall thereafter be but one judge for said district until otherwise provided by law.

"Every judge shall reside in the district or circuit or one of the districts or circuits for which he is appointed.

"SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the Chief Justice of the United States, or in case of his disability, of one of the other justices of the Supreme Court, in order of their seniority, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, and annually thereafter, to summon to a conference on the last Monday in September, at Washington, D. C., or at such other time and place in the United States as the Chief Justice, or, in case of his disability, any of said justices in order of their seniority, may designate, the senior circuit judge of each judicial circuit. If any circuit judge is unable to attend, the Chief Justice, or in case of his disability, the justice of the Supreme Court calling said conference, may summon any other circuit or district judge in the judicial circuit whose senior circuit judge is unable to attend, that each circuit may be adequately represented at said conference. It shall be the duty of every judge thus summoned to attend said conference, and to remain throughout its proceedings, unless excused by the Chief Justice, and to advise as to the needs of his circuit and as to any matters in respect of which the administration of justice in the courts of the United States may be improved.

"The senior district judge of each United States district court, on or before the 1st day of August in each year, shall prepare and submit to the senior circuit judge of the judicial circuit in which said district is situated a report setting forth the condition of business in said district court, including the number and character of cases on the docket, the business in arrears, and cases disposed of, and such other facts pertinent to the business dispatched and pending as said district judge may deem proper, together with recommendations as to the need of additional judicial assistance for the disposal of business for the year ensuing. Said reports shall be laid before the conference herein provided by said senior circuit judge, or, in his absence, by the judge representing the circuit at the conference, together with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

"The Chief Justice, or, in his absence, the senior Associate Justice, shall be the presiding officer of the conference. Said conference shall make a comprehensive survey of the condition of business in the courts of the United States and prepare plans for assignment and transfer of judges to or from circuits or districts where the state of the docket or condition of business indicates the need therefor, and shall submit such suggestions to the various courts as may seem in the interest of uniformity and expedition of business.

"The Attorney General shall, upon request of the Chief Justice, report to said conference on matters relating to the business of the several courts of the United States, with particular reference to causes or proceedings in which the United States may be a party.

"The Chief Justice and each justice or judge summoned and attending said conference shall be allowed his actual expenses of travel and his necessary expenses for subsistence, not to exceed $10 per day, which payments shall be made by the marshal of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the written certificate of the judge incurring such expenses, approved by the Chief Justice.

"SEC. 3. Section 13 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 13. Whenever any district judge by reason of any disability or necessary absence from his district or the accumulation or urgency of business is unable to perform speedily the work of his district, the senior circuit judge of that circuit, or, in his absence, the circuit justice thereof, may, if in his judgment the public interest requires, designate and assign any district judge of any district court within the same judicial circuit to act as district judge in such district and to discharge all the judicial duties of a judge thereof for such time as the business of the said district court may require. Whenever it is found impracticable to designate and assign another district judge within the same judicial circuit as above provided and a certificate of the needs of any such district is presented by said senior circuit judge or said circuit justice to the Chief Justice of the United States, he, or in his absence the senior associate justice, may, if in his judgment the public interest so requires, designate and assign a district judge of an adjoining judicial circuit if practicable, or if not practicable, then of any judicial circuit, to perform the duties of district judge and hold a district court in any such district as above provided: Provided, however, That before any such designation or assignment is made the senior circuit judge of the circuit from which the designated or assigned judge is to be taken shall consent thereto. All designations and assignments made hereunder shall be filed in the office of the clerk and entered on the minutes of both the court from and to which a judge is designated and assigned.'

"SEC. 4. Section 15 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 15. Each district judge designated and assigned under the provisions of section 13 may hold separately and at the same time a district court in the district or territory to which such judge is designated and assigned and discharge all the judicial duties of the district or territorial judge therein.'

"SEC. 5. Section 18 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 18. The Chief Justice of the United States, or the circuit justice of any judicial circuit, or the senior circuit judge thereof, may, if the public interest requires, designate and assign any circuit judge of a judicial circuit to hold a district court within such circuit. The judges of the United States Court of Customs Appeals, or any of them, whenever the business of that court will permit, may, if in the judgment of the Chief Justice of the United States the public interest requires, be designated and assigned by him for service from time to time, and until he shall otherwise direct, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, when requested by the chief justice of either of said courts.

"'During the period of service of any judge designated and assigned under this act he shall have all the powers and rights, and perform all the duties, of a judge of the district, or a justice of the court, to which he has been assigned (excepting the power of appointment to a statutory position or of permanent designation of newspaper or depository of funds): Provided, however, That in case a trial has been entered upon before such period of service has expired and has not been concluded, the period of service shall be deemed to be extended until the trial has been concluded.

"'Any designated and assigned judge who has held court in another district than his own shall have power, notwithstanding his absence from such district and the expiration of the time limit in his designation, to decide all matters which have been submitted to him within such district, to decide motions for new trials, settle bills of exceptions, certify or authenticate narratives of testimony, or perform any other act required by law or the rules to be performed in order to prepare any case so tried by him for review in an appellate court; and his action thereon in writing filed with the clerk of the court where the trial or hearing was had shall be as valid as if such action had been taken by him within that district and within the period of his designation.'

"SEC. 6. Section 118 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is hereby further amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 118. There shall be in the second, seventh, and eighth circuits, respectively, four circuit judges; and in each of the other circuits, three circuit judges, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. All circuit judges shall receive a salary of $8,500 a year each, payable monthly. Each circuit judge shall reside within his circuit, and when appointed shall be a resident of the circuit for which he is appointed. The circuit judges in each circuit shall be judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit, and it shall be the duty of each circuit judge in each circuit to sit as one of the judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit from time to time according to law: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent any circuit judge holding district court or otherwise, as provided by other sections of the Judicial Code.'

"SEC. 7. All laws or parts thereof inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"An act for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the fourth judicial circuit, for the appointment of additional district judges for certain districts, providing for an annual conference of certain judges, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS STERLING,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

A conference report was made on June 27, 1922, by the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 9103. A like report was submitted by the managers on the part of the Senate. This report when taken up for consideration in the Senate was objected to upon the ground that it violated a Senate rule against omitting matters agreed to by the two Houses and adding new matters not contained either in the House bill or Senate amendment thereto. The objection was sustained and the report rejected upon that ground. The bill and amendment were thereupon resubmitted to the conferees on the part of the two Houses and a new conference report has been agreed upon and is submitted herewith. The following statement shows the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee:

The Senate struck out all after the enacting clause of the House bill (H. R. 9103) and inserted a new bill.

The conferees have written a new bill, embodying the substance of the original House bill and of the Senate amendment.

The effect of the bill as submitted by your conferees is to increase the number of judges from 22, as provided by the House, to 24. Two districts not in the House bill are provided with an additional judge each, namely, New Jersey and New Mexico. The additional judge for the northern and southern districts of Georgia has been eliminated.

The provision for an annual conference of judges to be called by the Chief Justice of the United States has been rewritten, and certain clarifying changes in phraseology have been adopted, but otherwise the provision remains practically the same.

The amendments to sections of the Judicial Code have also been rewritten, with no substantial change in effect.

The provision for designation and assignment of judges of the Court of Customs Appeals has been retained, but the authorization for designating and assigning a district judge to sit in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia has been dropped. An additional circuit judge has been provided for the fourth judicial circuit, as carried in the Senate amendment.

The matter omitted in the former conference report, namely, the requirement that every judge shall reside in the district or circuit, or one of the districts or circuits for which he is appointed, and the further provision that the Attorney General shall, upon request of the Chief Justice of the United States, report to the conference of judges provided for in the bill on matters relating to the business of the several courts of the United States, have been added, and the provision in that report eliminating the jurisdiction of the judge of the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee, over the middle district of Tennessee, has been omitted.

The title has been amended to conform to the text as agreed upon in conference.

A. J. VOLSTEAD,
L. C. DYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, the statement which has just been read covers in a general way the changes that have been effected by Senate amendments and in the conference. It is substantially the House bill, somewhat modified in phraseology. It adds two district judges to those provided for in the House, one in New Mexico and another in New Jersey. A judge provided for the northern and southern districts of Georgia by Senate amendment has been eliminated. The provision with reference to the judges of the Court of Customs Appeals has been retained.

There has been one circuit judge added to the fourth judicial circuit. There are only two in that circuit, while in others there are three or more judges. It was believed that there ought to be another in that circuit, and the House conferees agreed to accept that provision.

I do not know that there is anything further that I care to add, because otherwise the bill is practically as adopted by the House. I will yield to the gentlemen on the other side of the House, if they desire.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. I call the attention of the gentleman to section 2 of the conference report, the second paragraph, where it provides for making a report to the court of the condition of the business in the different circuits, and it reads as follows:

The senior district judge of each United States district court, on or before the 1st day of August in each year, shall prepare and submit to the senior circuit judge of the judicial circuit in which said district is situated, a report setting forth the condition of business in said district court, including the number and character of cases on the docket, the business in arrears, and cases disposed of, and such other facts pertinent to the business dispatched and pending as said district judge may deem proper, together with recommendations as to the need of additional judicial assistance for the disposal of business for the year ending.

Is that a misprint, or is that the way the conferees intended it should read? Should that word be "ending?" I think it should be "ensuing" If it is a mistake it ought to be corrected now.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It would not be very material one way or the other. He makes a report on what has taken place in the year prior to the time the report is made.

Mr. DENISON. No; but this is a recommendation as to what should be done for the year "ending." That does not mean anything. I think it ought to be the year "ensuing."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. When do you figure that the year begins?

Mr. DENISON. What did the conferees intend that word to be? Did they mean it to be "ending" or "ensuing"?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It may perhaps be a mistake, but it is immaterial anyway. This will take care of the situation or it can be corrected later on.

Mr. DENISON. I see the word used in the same paragraph in the Senate bill, and I think also in the House bill is "ensuing," and I think this is clearly a misprint that somebody ought to correct.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We can not correct it now, anyway.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes out of order. It there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, a few months ago President Harding delivered before the Vaughn Bible class of the Calvary Baptist Church of Washington an address on the proper relations of the citizen to the state. In the course of his remarks he used the following language:

"There is no relationship here between church and state. Religious liberty has its unalterable place, along with civil and human liberty, in the very foundation of the Republic. Therein is shown the farseeing vision of the immortal founders, and we are a better people and a better Republic because there is that freedom.

"I fear it is forgotten sometimes. In the experiences of a year in the Presidency there has come to me no other such unwelcome impression as the manifest religious intolerance which exists among many of our citizens. I hold it to be a menace to the very liberties we boast and cherish."

The fears and anxieties entertained by the great, patriotic, liberal-minded Chief Magistrate of the Nation are those also entertained by many Members of Congress and by every patriotic citizen who loves his country and its most sacred national tradition, that of freedom of conscience and of worship. In no period of our history since the proclamation of the Declaration of Independence and the adoption of the Constitution has the menace to religious freedom been so great as it is to-day. Race prejudice, religious bigotry, and lawlessness of every kind are running riot in the land. The alarm sounded by the President should be heeded by patriots everywhere and friends of freedom in every State should rally around the Constitution and the flag.

The propaganda of prejudice and persecution now in progress in the United States is sometimes open and sometimes insidious, but is always aggressive and perpetually malignant. At times we hear its utterances from the pulpit or from the political rostrum, at times we get it through the press or read it in books and pamphlets, and again it conceals itself in Ku-Klux garb of mask and gown and does its dirty and destructive work in mob action under the cover of night.

The leaders and champions of this un-American propaganda are almost without exception designing and unscrupulous men whose motives are mean and mercenary and whose bank accounts appeal more powerfully to them than do the guaranties of religious freedom in the Constitution of their country. Its votaries and victims are generally the most ignorant, narrow-minded, and lawless of our countrymen.

Mr. Speaker, the President in his address to the Baptist Bible class referred to the "unwelcome impression" of "manifest religious intolerance" that had come to him during his first year in the Presidency. This same impression, it may be added, has come to every Member of Congress in many ways, and very vividly and pointedly through the books, pamphlets, and newspapers containing anti-Catholic and anti-Jewish literature that have been thrown upon his desk with alarming frequency in the last two years. Reference to just a few of these publications will be not only illustrative but entertaining and instructive as well.

In the month of November, 1921, I received at my office in Washington a Texas newspaper entitled "Pure Democracy." It was dated "Elgin, Texas, November 5, 1921." On the first page, in big, black letters, was the heading:

READ
PURE DEMOCRACY
Get The Dope, Sign The Petition, And Kill The Pope!

Following this big, black letter caption came this announcement on the front page:

The Letter Below
Goes This Week to Your Congressman
And Senator.
Get His Answer.

DEAR SIR: We are respectfully requesting answers to the questions inclosed here, which are the same that occur in the current issue of "Pure Democracy" being sent you.

We desire the answer to these questions for publication. In desiring the submission of an amendment, forbidding office holding and voting as a penalty against those under foreign papal allegiance, direct or indirect, please bear in mind that we want your commitment on the principle involved. The wording of such an amendment will necessarily be fixed by those officials who submit the same for ratification.

Our petition is clear enough to let you know our aims, and we will thank you for giving us your stand on this question.

Truly,

DONALD B. ALLEN,
Editor of "Pure Democracy."

ELGIN, TEX.

In another place on the front page of this paper was the following petition addressed to its subscribers for signature:

"We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, of voting age, petition the submission for ratification of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States (also to our State constitution) forbidding voting or office holding, appointive or elective, by any person under direct or indirect allegiance to any foreign political potentate, such as the Papacy of Rome.

"Signature ——— ———."

You will note that the very modest request of the editor of Pure Democracy is for the disfranchisement of Roman Catholic citizens of the United States by constitutional amendment.

This puny publication, I understand, has passed out of existence, having died in early infancy, probably from lack of brains or want of nourishment and I feel that I should apologize to the House for using a corpse as an exhibit. Nevertheless its editor, I have been informed, is still spreading the gospel of hate and dissension among his fellow citizens in Texas wherever he can find an audience low-browed enough to listen to him in the following lectures:

1. Darkness from the Pit, or Rome Robbing the Records of History.

2. Babylon's Fall, or Rome must be Destroyed.

3. Ruling with Rods of Iron, or Amending the Constitution Against Foreign Papal Treason.

No wonder that Mayfield and the Ku-Klux Klan flourish in the Lone Star State, where propaganda of this kind is permitted and encouraged. But there is no reason for despair as long as the Dallas Morning News, one of the greatest and most ably edited newspapers in America, continues to wage ruthless warfare against the traitorous brood and the cheap and cowardly politicians who bend the knee to them.

Again, a few weeks ago, I received from Seattle, Wash., a pamphlet entitled "The Heretic Circular," edited or prepared by one Baron Dudley. The front-page caption was this:

Strong Reasons
Why
Roman Catholics
Should Not Hold
Civic or Federal Offices
In The United States of America.

Then followed statements, references, and allusions, founded in ignorance and bigotry, that should have shut the dirty sheet from the mails of the United States. I need not discuss the contents of this circular with you, my colleagues, since it is doubtless true that copies of it have been thrown upon the desk of each Member of the House.

During the last two years scarcely a week has passed that I have not received at my office in Washington, from every section of the country, north, east, south, and west, trashy and treasonable literature of this kind, intended to excite prejudice and hatred against Jews and Catholics, and generally patterned in cheap and imitative fashion after The Menace and the Dearborn Independent. Up to the present time I have not thought it worth while to pay any serious attention to these various anti-Catholic and anti-Jewish circulars, pamphlets, and newspapers that have been sent to me. I judged it best to treat them with the silent contempt that they deserved. This course seemed to me to be all the more proper and expedient since I was not personally or politically involved in any way.

But recently I received a pamphlet, sent by whom I do not know, that mentions me personally, makes charges against me, and threatens me with political punishment. The impudent and belligerent character of the booklet challenges my serious consideration, all the more so since it contains a charge and a threat.

This pamphlet is entitled "Rome in Congress," and was prepared by one Gilbert O. Nations, who describes himself as a "Ph. D." This gentleman seems to be the editor and publisher of a monthly magazine entitled "The Protestant," with offices at 639 F Street NW., Washington, D. C. This magazine is a violent anti-Roman Catholic publication, and is about a year and a half old.

In order to acquaint myself thoroughly with the views of Mr. Nations, and to determine how much consideration he and his magazine deserved, I sent to the Congressional Library and secured all back numbers of The Protestant. I have spent nearly a week, at odd moments, examining them. I find that they contain an amazing amount of literary trash and rubbish, and that their pages are filled with ludicrous citations from canon and other laws and with grotesque references to literary works that have not the remotest connection with the subject discussed or the thesis proposed. A perusal of this magazine convinces the reader that the editor of The Protestant is a literary paranoiac with a strong propensity to mendacity and a distinct predilection for hypocrisy.

Nearly every issue of this magazine from the first to the last publication devotes considerable space to an appeal for subscribers and a cry for financial help. In more issues than one the alarm is given that the ship is about to sink and that the lifeboats are being made ready to be lowered. Throughout the publication are strong suggestions of strained financial circumstances as well as mental and moral bankruptcy, and from the whole enterprise we feel justified in concluding that the author of The Protestant has prostituted his meager talents, not for love of Protestantism or solicitude for the Republic and its free institutions, but rather from a sordid desire for mercenary gain. The motive at the back of the publication of this magazine is the same as that at the back of the publication of The Menace and all others of its kind, a desire and a determination to make money, even if truth is outraged at every turn and the Constitution of the country is trampled under foot, even if religious freedom is ruthlessly struck down in her own temple, even if good-fellowship among the citizens of a common country is utterly destroyed.

But let us revert to the pamphlet styled "Rome in Congress." On the cover of this booklet, beneath the words "Rome in Congress," are the two words "A handbook," and beneath these there are the words "The record of national Senators and Representatives on issues of vital interest to Protestant voters."

On the first page of the pamphlet is a kind of preface, entitled "The political situation," and under this caption the author has grouped and discussed certain political problems and economic questions that in his mind indicate friendliness or hostility to the Roman Catholic Church. These political problems and economic questions may be grouped as follows, under varying titles:

1. The Burnett and Johnson immigration bills.
2. The Gallivan Irish petition and the Borah Irish resolution.
3. Prohibition.
4. Woman suffrage.
5. The Towner-Sterling bill.

In the opinion of this man Nations, the author of the booklet entitled "Rome in Congress" and the editor of the magazine called The Protestant, a Congressman or Senator who voted for certain of these measures or against others should be branded as Catholic or Protestant, as the case may be.

His contention is that those who voted for the Burnett immigration bill were Protestants and those who voted against it were Catholics who desired the rule of Rome in America. He seems to forget that 3,000,000 Jews in America are opposed to the Burnett immigration bill, and that Jews are neither Protestants nor Catholics. He also seemingly forgets that three Protestant Presidents of the United States, Cleveland, Taft, and Wilson, all vetoed the Burnett immigration bill or similar bills because of the "literacy tests" that they contained. According to the reasoning of Mr. Nations these men should be characterized in history as papal Presidents or presidential Popes, notwithstanding the reasons assigned in their veto messages that were not even remotely related to any religious consideration.

Again, it is contended that those Congressmen or Senators who signed the Gallivan Irish petition or voted for the Borah Irish resolution are friends of Rome and enemies of America. It matters not if they were prompted by love of liberty and by a belief in right of self-government for the Irish people; nevertheless they are to be classed as friends of Rome. The record shows that more than a hundred Representatives and Senators, Protestant and Catholic, Jew and gentile, Democratic, Republican, and Socialist, from the North, South, East, and West, signed the Gallivan Irish petition. Nevertheless, they are all Catholics, friends of Rome and enemies of America, according to the editor of The Protestant.

According to the reasoning of the author of this pamphlet those who voted for prohibition are Protestants and patriots; those who voted against prohibition are Catholics and traitors. The queer-headed, addle-brained man who makes this contention seems to have forgotten that the Germans of America, most of whom are Lutheran Protestants, are violently opposed to prohibition, and that the 3,000,000 Jews of America, who are neither Protestants nor Catholics, are also violently opposed to prohibition. If he had an ounce of gray matter in his head and were capable of a moment's serious and intelligent reflection, he would know that the antiprohibition ranks number millions of Protestants of all denominations—Methodists, Baptists, and Presbyterians, amen-corner brethren, and backsliders alike. He would also know that a very considerable percentage of Catholics in America are in favor of prohibition. The late Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul, a distinguished Roman Catholic prelate, was an avowed prohibitionist.

In the recent primaries in Texas ex-Gov. James E. Ferguson, a fallen political angel, who had been removed from the governor's chair for malfeasance and misfeasance in office, ran on a light wine and beer platform. He received nearly half the votes cast, more than 200,000, in a run-off primary. His chief source of popularity was his light wine and beer program. Now, the Catholics of Texas do not number more than 10 per cent of the population of the State, and a large majority of those who voted for Ferguson must have been good Protestants, who do not object to taking a little light wine and beer "for the stomach's sake."

The absurdity and imbecility of attempting to identify a particular church organization with an economic problem that affects all the people, or even with a certain question of morals, may be easily shown by considering the matter from a world-wide viewpoint. To identify the Protestant Church and Protestant teachings with prohibition and then be compelled to stare Germany in the face would be something that only a fool and fanatic like Nations could stand without embarrassment and a blush, for we must remember that Germany is the land not only of Martin Luther and thoroughgoing Protestantism but of beers, wines, and whiskies as well.

Since the days of Gustavus Vasa, Sweden has been densely Protestant, and yet only a few weeks ago Protestant Sweden voted overwhelmingly against prohibition. And to give a touch of mingled humor and pathos to the scene, we need only mention that "Pussyfoot" Johnson was ridden on a rail and lost an eye while trying to convert Protestant England to prohibition. So much for the ludicrous attempt of the editor of The Protestant to identify the Roman Catholic Church and antiprohibition.

Under this heading I wish only to relate a matter of personal experience that may be both instructive and entertaining. A few years ago I spent a summer in Scotland. I was the guest of a merchant prince of Glasgow who had a summer home on Loch Long, an arm of the River Clyde. I remember that this excellent Scotch family and I would spend each day fishing, rowing, and swimming. After dinner in the evening the beautiful and charming daughters of the Scotchman would give a concert of piano and violin music. After the concert we would eat cheese and crackers and drink Scotch whisky. Then followed family prayers and sweet sleep, undisturbed by the fanatical prohibition agitations of "Pussyfoot" Johnson, Gilbert O. Nations, and their kind. This all took place, please remember, in Protestant Presbyterian Scotland, the land of John Knox and the Covenanters.

In the fourth place, the man who prepared the booklet, "Rome in Congress," makes woman suffrage a test of Protestantism and Catholicism. He insists that the Catholic Church was opposed to woman suffrage and that those Members of Congress who voted against woman suffrage were friends of Rome and therefore enemies of the Republic and of free institutions. But here again the reasoning of the imbecile and bigot strikes a snag. In a lucid interval he remembers that the Catholic Church is not strong in the South. He also recalls that southern Senators and Representatives very generally voted against woman suffrage. Then half whiningly and at the same time with brazen impertinence he adds in this connection:

"In justice it should be stated that sentiment in favor of woman suffrage was not strong in the South, and therefore votes of southern Senators and Representatives against the nineteenth amendment were not necessarily inspired by Rome."

But if non-Catholic reasoning and sentiment inspired southern Senators and Representatives to vote against woman suffrage, what evidence have we that northern, western, and eastern Senators and Representatives were inspired by different motives or guided by different principles from those that influenced the conduct of southern Senators and Representatives? Only a man lacking in mother wit, blinded by fanaticism, undisciplined in debate, thirsting for cheap notoriety, and overpowered by greed could be entangled in a mesh or caught in a trap of this kind.

And, lastly, we are told by the editor of The Protestant in his preface to his booklet called "Rome in Congress" that the Catholic Church is opposed to the Towner-Sterling bill, and that those Members of Congress who vote for this bill will be Protestants and patriots because their votes will be opposed to the will of Rome. On the other hand, those Members who vote against the Towner-Sterling bill will be friends of Rome and at the same time enemies of the Republic and of free institutions. But here again the dear Mr. Nations finds his difficulties. It is an admitted fact that a large majority of southern Senators and Representatives will vote against the Towner-Sterling bill because of their peculiar State rights theories and without any reference whatever to the Catholic Church or its teachings. When the vote has been taken what will then be left to the editor of The Protestant but to make the same idiotic observations that he made in connection with woman suffrage and thereby become entangled in the same mesh and fall into the same trap of ludicrous inconsistency and contradiction?

If he should find after a canvass that a majority of the New York State Representatives, both Republican and Democratic, will vote against the Towner-Sterling bill because they do not believe it just and right that New York State, only 1 in 48, should pay one-third of $100,000,000 annually to educate the illiterates of other States, would the editor of The Protestant then give them credit for sincerity or would he still insist that the Pope has them under his heel and that they are slavishly dominated by Rome and the canon law?

In the booklet called "Rome in Congress" every Member of the House is classified by States as a friend or enemy of Rome by indicating his votes on the subjects that I have just discussed. And it is interesting to note that this is the closing paragraph of the preface:

"Scan the list with care. See how your Members voted in order that you may know how to vote when they ask reelection at your hands. If their records are clean, give them your active support. If unclean, defeat them in the primary if possible, and if not possible to defeat them there then support the candidate of the other party in the general election provided he is any better. They are arranged in this handbook by States and districts. Here is the list."

Then follows the classified list of all the Members of the House and Senate, beginning with Alabama and ending with Wyoming. Each of you, my colleagues, is listed as a friend or enemy of Rome according to your votes on the subjects heretofore mentioned, and you are notified that the pamphlet to which I have so frequently referred is to be used as a campaign document against you among the Protestant voters of your district or in your behalf, as the case may require. As for me I gladly accept the issue.

Under the New York subdivision my name is written thus:

"WALTER M. CHANDLER; voted against Burnett immigration bill and prohibition, and signed Gallivan Irish petition."

The statement is correct, and I have no apologies to make for my vote in any single case, and I am not ashamed that I signed the Gallivan Irish petition.

I voted against the Burnett immigration bill for the very same reasons that caused Presidents Cleveland, Taft, and Wilson to veto this and similar bills. In my speech of March 25, 1916, against the Burnett immigration bill I stated my reasons in the following language:

"I voted against the Burnett immigration bill during its passage through the Sixty-third Congress. I shall vote against it again at this time because it contains an unjust, undemocratic, and un-American provision, the so-called literacy test.

"I am convinced that the humanitarian traditions of our country should still be observed, and that foreigners of sound body, mind, and morals, of good and patriotic intentions toward our country and its institutions, and of sufficient means to justify the assumption that they will not become public charges should be welcomed into our midst, made to feel that they are at home, and extended all the blessings of law and liberty that our Constitution and our flag afford."

This was the real reason of my vote against the Burnett immigration bill, although I called attention in the same speech to the anti-Catholic tendencies of the bill and denounced the attempt to accomplish covertly in Congress by restricting Catholic immigration what it was feared could not be accomplished in the columns of a free press or in the forum of debate.

Yes; I voted against prohibition also, but I did not have the Catholic Church in mind when I voted. I voted against reporting the eighteenth amendment because I did not believe it either right or expedient to take the police power from the States where it had rested for more than a hundred years and place it with the Nation. I resisted with all my might the attempt to bring about a constitutional innovation of this kind. I voted as I did because my prophetic vision foresaw the bootlegging operations of this day and the contempt for law and order that would result from the adoption of this amendment. I also foresaw the Volstead Act against which my better judgment rebelled from the very beginning.

I am in favor of law enforcement of all State and Federal statutes. Antiprohibition may be bad and prohibition worse, but disregard and contempt for law are worse than either. A dead law upon the statute books is a stench in the nostrils of all good citizens. Believing this, I shall vote at the very first opportunity for a modification of the Volstead Act that will permit light wines and beers, within the limitations prescribed by the Supreme Court of the United States defining the extent of the jurisdiction of Congress in regulating the alcoholic content of beverages.

I believe that the saloon is gone forever, and I shall shed no tears because of this fact, but I am convinced that light wines and beers may be had without any violation of law, and that these slightly exhilarating beverages would greatly lessen and cool what Shakespeare is pleased to call "life's fitful fever."

It is a well-known fact that an abundance of liquor may be had almost anywhere in the United States, either in town or country, under bootlegging operations, by the wealthy who can afford to pay the price, but our laborers and workmen who create the wealth of the country in the sweat of the brow and who return to their homes at nightfall tired and exhausted with the toil of the day are denied even a single glass of refreshing beer because the law forbids the brewing of a drink that is reasonable in price and not an insult to the taste. This inevitable discrimination in the operation and effect of the Volstead Act has a direct tendency to embitter the minds of the masses of the people, to fill their hearts with rebellion against the law, and to drive them to lawlessness and anarchy as a refuge.

Yes; I also signed the Gallivan Irish petition, and I am glad and proud that I did. I signed it, however, as other Congressmen did, without any reference to the Roman Catholic Church. I signed it because I believed then as I feel now that the magnificent race of Celtic people who inhabit the Emerald Isle, who have fought bravely on all the battle fields of the world for the liberties of other peoples, are entitled to freedom for themselves.

I have never failed to cast my vote and to raise my voice in behalf of this proud, spirited, and gifted race that has contributed so much to the freedom and civilization of other nations and that has received so little from them in return. I shall continue my efforts in their behalf with the ardent hope that peace and happiness may return soon to the people of the stricken island and that all may yet be well with the children of Erin.

Furthermore, I want the narrow-minded, bigoted editor of The Protestant to understand that I do not have to show my sympathy for races or religions covertly in votes upon economic problems and political questions. Thank God, I have never once been charged by my bitterest enemies with cowardice or camouflage in politics, and whether my life be long or short in public office I am determined never once to attempt to deceive by trickery or evasion my constituents or my countrymen. As proof of this, in the matter of having signed the Gallivan Irish petition, I wish to submit at this time for insertion in the RECORD the following leading editorial from the Gaelic American of Saturday, February 16, 1918, entitled:

ONE CONGRESSMAN WHO IS NOT EVASIVE.

"The resolutions indorsing Miss Rankin's resolution for Irish independence passed by the John P. Holland branch of the Friends of Irish Freedom, New York, were forwarded to the Members of Congress, and Father John H. Dooley, of Corpus Christi Church, president of the branch, has received several replies. With one exception these replies are the usual perfunctory, stereotyped kind which say nothing at all except that the matter has been received and will be given consideration. Such replies are always followed by inaction. The Congressmen do nothing because they believe that they can afford to ignore the wishes of their constituents, or think the men who write to them have no influence and can do them no harm in the next election. Until Irish citizens convince them by the vigor and determination of their action that they mean what they say and will not submit to be trifled with this state of things will continue.

"Father Dooley has sent us copies of the replies he has received from the Congressmen, and we find that only one of them is from an Irish-American—Representative Peter J. Dooling. Mr. Dooling simply says, 'I will give this matter my most careful attention when it is brought before the House for action.' As Miss Rankin's resolution is now buried in a pigeonhole and will not come before the House for action until it is forced out by a vigorous demand, this promise amounts to nothing. What is wanted is an insistent demand that the resolution be reported by the committee which has smothered it.

"None of the other Irish members from New York City, who all owe their elections to the votes of Irish citizens, have thought it worth while to reply. They apparently think it is not necessary to be even polite with the people to whom they owe their political existence; and these people have stood so much of that kind of thing in the past that there is some excuse for treating them with contempt. The only Representative from New York who has promised whole-hearted support of the Rankin resolution is Mr. WALTER M. CHANDLER, and he is a native American, without, so far as we know, any Irish blood in his veins. Mr. CHANDLER writes as follows to Father Dooley:

"'MY DEAR FATHER DOOLEY: This is to acknowledge receipt of yours of February 2, containing the resolution recently adopted at the Star Casino. It is needless for me to write you that I am in favor of the resolution of Miss Rankin or any other resolution looking to Irish independence. You may depend upon me to do anything I can to realize this grand ideal of the war.

"'I was the orator of the evening at the Academy of Music in Philadelphia January 31, when the Ancient Order of Hibernians had their annual meeting. I there proclaimed and now declare my intention to do everything I can to make possible Irish independence as the result of the world struggle in which we are now engaged.

"'I hope that you will do me the kindness to let my attitude be known, as far as you can, to all the friends of Irish freedom in New York City.' (February 4, 1918.)

"What are the constituents of the Irish Congressmen in New York doing to make them feel that they have a duty to perform and an obligation to fulfill? Evidently little or nothing. These gentlemen ought to be got after without delay. Some of them seem to think that Ireland is no longer on the map and that only Belgium, Poland, Serbia, Montenegro, Lithuania, and Mesopotamia are worth bothering about. It is time to let these gentlemen know that the claims of Ireland antedate and outweigh those of all these countries and that the Irish people in America will insist that Ireland shall not be ignored. They must put themselves on record so that we may know our friends from our enemies at the next congressional elections."

The world seems to have forgotten, Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, what Catholic Ireland has done for the uplift of mankind and the civilization of the earth. When the night of the Middle Ages fell upon the human race, priests in her monasteries and schools held high the torch of learning and religion, sent her missionaries throughout Europe, and gained for her the merited title of the "Isle of Sages and Saints." To the monastic schools of Ireland flocked students from Scotland, England, Germany, and Gaul in numbers so great that St. Aldheim declared that they were as "numerous as bees." Throughout the seventh, eighth, and ninth centuries her schools of learning were the most illustrious in the world. Her missionary spirit is shown by the fact that she maintained 7 monasteries in France, 13 in Scotland, 7 in Lotharingia, 9 in Belgium, 11 in Burgundy, 10 in Alsatia, 16 in Bavaria, and 12 in Armoric Gaul.

Too frequently we hear from the lips of the light-headed and the flippant the remark that Ireland is nothing but a land of tragedy and ruins. Before they begin to mock and jest, let such men and women read and ponder the brilliant verses of Father Abram J. Ryan, the poet laureate of the Southern Confederacy:

A LAND WITHOUT RUINS.

"A land without ruins is a land without memories; a land without memories is a land without history. A land that wears a laurel crown may be fair to see; but twine a few sad cypress leaves around the brow of any land, and be that land barren, beautiless, and bleak it becomes lovely in its consecrated coronet of sorrow and it wins the sympathy of the heart and of history. Crowns of roses fade—crowns of thorns endure. Calvaries and crucifixions take deepest hold of humanity; the triumphs of might are transient, they pass and are forgotten; the sufferings of right are graven deepest on the chronicles of nations."

Yes, give me the land where the ruins are spread
And the living tread light on the hearts of the dead;
Yes, give me a land that is blest by the dust
And bright with the deeds of the downtrodden just.
Yes, give me the land where the battle's red blast
Has flashed to the future the fame of the past;
Yes, give me the land that hath legends and lays,
That tell of the memories of long-vanished days;
Yes, give me a land that hath story and song,
Enshrine the strife of the right with the wrong;
Yes, give me a land with a grave in each spot
And names in the graves that shall not be forgot;
Yes, give me the land of the wreck and the tomb—
There is grandeur in graves, there is glory in gloom;
For out of the gloom future brightness is born,
As after the night comes the sunrise of morn;
And the graves of the dead with the grass overgrown
May yet form the footstool of liberty's throne,
And each single wreck in the warpath of might Shall yet be a rock in the temple of right.

—Abram J. Ryan.

But let us not go too far afield and forget our good friend Nations and his precious publication called The Protestant. Mark you, my colleagues, that this man by the very title of his publication is assuming to speak for all the great Protestant denominations of America and the world. To play such a rôle properly and successfully a man should be strong and cultured in mind, noble and charitable in disposition, powerful in debate after the manner of St. Paul, merciful in conduct according to the teachings of the Sermon on the Mount, and truthful in character after the spirit of the commandment, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." A paladin of the church should be armored with all these weapons for the battles of Christianity, but the editor of The Protestant is clothed with none of them. He is as naked as a new-born babe. He is above all things a liar and a hypocrite, and I am going to prove it to you at once by a single illustration.

There is an old saying that a half truth may be a whole lie, and that a suppression of the truth may be the worst kind of falsehood. Let us apply these tests to this fellow Nations and his magazine.

In the issue of The Protestant of date November, 1921, on page 142, appears the following article:

WAR DEPARTMENT AND PRIEST.

"A good patriotic friend has written the following note, which deserves the thoughtful reflection of every good citizen:

"'DEAR SIR: I would like to call your attention to an article in the New York Evening Telegram of October 15, headed "Father Kelley named to conduct unknown services."

"'Was there no Protestant clergyman available who served overseas that it was necessary for Secretary Weeks to select a Roman Catholic priest to conduct the services over the body of the unknown soldier at Arlington Cemetery on Armistice Day?

"'The inquiry is timely. You should ask Mr. Weeks. It is time for the people to arrange things at the ballot box, so members of the President's Cabinet will not seek every opportunity to peddle favors to the alien hierarchy and clergy of the Vatican throne.'"

The "good patriotic friend" who wrote the editor of The Protestant asking for truthful information received a suppressed truth that is a lie in answer. The facts were these, as I have learned them authoritatively from the War Department. Secretary Weeks invited a Protestant preacher, Doctor Brent; a Catholic priest, Father Kelley; and a Jewish clergyman, Rabbi Lazaron, all of whom had been chaplains and had seen overseas service, to officiate at the ceremonies conducted over the body of the unknown soldier at Arlington Cemetery on Armistice Day. All of them accepted the invitation. Two of them, the Protestant preacher, Doctor Brent, and the Jewish clergyman, Rabbi Lazaron, were present and officiated. Father Kelley was unavoidably kept away. These were the facts, and Gilbert O. Nations doubtless knew them, or could easily have learned them, when he wrote that dirty lie and libel against Secretary Weeks and the contemptible and sneaking little diatribe against the Catholic Church.

Nations is a miserable little pedant. He delights to quote Latin, doubtless to impress his ignorant readers with his learning and importance. In this connection, and in the matter of the Arlington Cemetery ceremonies, this Latin phrase is peculiarly applicable to him, falsus in uno falsus in omnibus; that is, having been caught lying in this case, we are justified in assuming that he is a liar in all cases.

Secretary Weeks played a fine and manly part. Feeling that the occasion was truly national and that the unknown dead soldier might have been a Catholic, a Protestant, or a Jew, he acted with exquisite tact and taste and invited to officiate at the ceremonies representatives of all the great religious organizations of America. Nevertheless, the petty pamphleteer got in his dirty work of falsehood and of libel.

The Protestant clergymen of America, like the clergymen of the Catholic and Jewish faiths, are in the main men of education, earnestness, and piety, and are sincere seekers after truth. The large majority of them would scorn to subscribe for a magazine that disseminates falsehoods and seeks to destroy character by libelous inuendoes. If the real character of this magazine were known to them not a dozen clergymen in America would be subscribers to it.

Occasionally he is called down by some indignant citizen who has been the victim of his lies, and then it is vastly amusing to hear him apologize and watch him crawl and whine. In the characteristic recklessness of his irresponsible journalism, Nations called Colonel MacNider a Roman Catholic and attributed his appointment as head of the American Legion to the political machinations of what he is pleased to call the Roman hierarchy. The following brave and manly letter of Colonel MacNider to Nations should be read every day for a full month to every class of every public school in the Republic:

FEBRUARY 19, 1922.

To the EDITOR OF THE PROTESTANT,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your article "Rome Heads the American Legion" has just come to my attention. When you called to apologize, it was my impression that you had simply mistaken my religious affiliations and that your statement was entirely personal. I told you that I was not concerned with what you had said about me, but your article is an attack upon the American Legion, and it can not go unanswered, foolish as it is.

The American Legion is an organization of returned service men and women holding together in an endeavor to continue their service to their country in peace as well as in war as constructive citizens. Religion in Legion membership is no more a question than it is in American citizenship, nor can it be brought into Legion affairs.

It was not a question when a man stepped out to join the colors and to defend his country. It will never be a question in our service as Legion men. This country was formed by men who sought religious tolerance, and it was in that spirit that it was made free and worth living in. I happen to be a Protestant and to attend a Protestant church, but as a member of many Masonic bodies, of which I have taken a more or less active part, I have great admiration for that institution—the Roman Catholic Church. Its stand and teaching for the preservation of the integrity of our lawful Government were well exemplified in the heroic deaths of men who served in my command. And might I add that chaplains of that faith gave a human touch to their splendid service which made them beloved by all—Jew, Protestant, and Catholic alike.

Such propaganda as you are spreading is a menace to America and America's institutions. How a man worships his God is his own business and not yours.

The Constitution of the United States of America gives every man the right to choose his own religion, and it was to uphold that Constitution that the American Legion was formed.

Yours very truly,

HANFORD MACNIDER.

The editor of The Protestant was seized with convulsions when he learned that Colonel MacNider was a Protestant and a Mason and still had "great admiration for that institution—the Roman Catholic Church."

In his reply which was published in his magazine he went soaring into the empyrean of absurdity and bombast. One paragraph of his letter was this:

"But until the Roman hierarchy expiates the terrible ruin it has heaped on Mexico, South America, Spain, and Hungary during the long and dismal centuries of its dominion in those lands I am utterly unable to share in your expressed admiration of that hierarchy and institution. The tragedy of the whole matter is that popery vascillates before the world, feigning religion, but practicing the most venal and despotic kind of politics."

He meant by all this that until conditions changed in Mexico, South America, Spain, and Hungary he was not willing to stop lying about MacNider, Weeks, and others. He meant also that the constitutional guaranties of religious freedom in America must be suspended until the religious status of these countries formed itself to his liking. The language of this paragraph proves conclusively that as a word-monger Nations is a glittering success, but as a logician and disputant he is a dismal failure. It proves also the truthfulness of the saying of Lowell that "the vulgar intellectual palate hankers after the titillation of foaming phrase."

An examination of the various numbers of The Protestant shows that its editor is wholly without any sense or sentiment of propriety, modesty, shame, or fitness of things in his desperate drive for subscribers and "long green" with which to line his pockets. He is one of those fools that deliberately rush in where angels fear to tread. In his feverish desire for notoriety and cash he has not hesitated to attack, in a mean and lying manner, the characters and careers of the greatest and most beloved of modern American statesmen, who have been voted for and admired and loved by millions.

Of ex-President Wilson he has this to say:

"The constant secret gravitation of President Wilson toward popery is one of the mysteries of American history. * * *

"Why a great Presbyterian scholar, born in the mountains of Virginia of Presbyterian parents, his father being a minister, should seek every opportunity to enthrone popery in the White House and every department of the Government and should then go out and join a Roman Catholic Club established by a Jesuit priest passes understanding. It is time to annihilate that kind of secret plotting in high official life."

All this probably because Wilson had a Catholic secretary, Mr. Tumulty.

Of Ex-President Taft he has this to say:

"Rome and Wall Street rejoice at the appointment of ex-President William Howard Taft to the office of Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court. Well may they rejoice. No politician in this country ever served them better. * * * His whole administrative policy favored political popery at every opportunity."

All this because Taft was independent enough and American enough to appoint Mr. White, a Catholic, Chief Justice.

The editor of this magazine in one of its issues describes Mrs. Taft as a Catholic, a statement that he subsequently had to retract. From this and the MacNider incident we learn his methods of journalism, first to lie and, if caught up with, then to retract; if not detected, to let the lie stand in the name of many subscribers and much cash.

Not content with attacking ex-Presidents, the editor of The Protestant insults the present President of the Republic by showering him with his slimy slander and abuse. The following appears in the issue of his magazine of June, 1922:

THE PRESIDENT PRAISES GIBBONS.

"The Associated Press exploited generally throughout the country a letter which President Harding is alleged to have written March 20 to Rev. Albert E. Smith, a Roman priest and editor of the Baltimore Catholic Review, praising the late Cardinal Gibbons in connection with the approaching anniversary of his death. The Baltimore Roman paper mentioned of course published the letter very conspicuously in a heavy border and under great headlines on the front page of the paper March 25. It reads as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 20, 1922.

Rev. ALBERT E. SMITH,
The Baltimore Catholic Review, Baltimore, Md.

MY DEAR FATHER SMITH: It is hard to realize that almost a year has passed since the death of Cardinal Gibbons. He was one of the men whom the Nation could ill spare, for his long and earnest service for both church and country had made him one of the most useful and wise counsellors in a wide realm of public concerns. He possessed in a marked measure the qualities of the statesman as well as the churchman, and his influence was invariably exerted in favor of the best conceptions of America, its institutions and its destiny. Like others who have borne a somewhat extraordinary burden in the public service, I have learned to appreciate and rely upon his sincerity and breadth of vision in many matters of public concern, and his death was a very real loss. I am sure the same feeling was entertained throughout the Nation, regardless of creed. His liberal views had earned for him a high place in the esteem of all Christian citizens, and his services and leadership will not be forgotten.

Very sincerely, WARREN G. HARDING.

"Why did our Baptist and Masonic President of the United States write such a letter? Why did a great Baptist and great Mason, at the head of the greatest Protestant and democratic Nation in the world, thus extol the memory of an enthroned prince in the one government inevitably hostile to Baptists and Masons and democratic institutions? Was there any canon of propriety that called for such a letter from the White House to a priest of Rome in Baltimore?"

Why did the President write such a letter? The answer is easy to anyone not inflamed by fanaticism or blinded by bigotry. Warren G. Harding is the big, brainy, great-hearted, Christian-minded President of a great Republic of more than 100,000,000 of people, whose citizenship is made up of all races and all religions of the earth, and whose constitutional guaranties of religious freedom constitute the most sacred right and the most precious heritage of Americans everywhere. It is the duty of this great President to see that the laws of the Nation are properly safeguarded and duly executed in maintaining the rights, civil and religious, of men and women of every race and creed, and in every act of his public life he has shown a fine sense of consciousness of this duty and of the solemn responsibility that rests upon him of being President of all the people and not a part of them, of all races and of all creeds and not of certain races and certain creeds. This sense of propriety, this consciousness of lofty political duty, caused him to pay the tribute to the memory of Cardinal Gibbons, a distinguished Roman Catholic prelate, the spiritual guide and leader of some 16,000,000 Catholic American citizens, whose civic were as great as his ecclesiastical virtues, and who left at his death a problem for his countrymen to solve, whether in life he was greater as a priest or a patriot.

President Harding might have paid his fine tribute to Cardinal Gibbons because Gibbons once uttered these patriotic sentiments:

"As the years go by I am more than ever convinced that the Constitution of the United States is the greatest instrument of government that ever issued from the hand of man. Drawn up in the infancy of our Republic, and amid the fears and suspicions and oppositions of many patriotic men, it has weathered the storm period of American public life, and has proved elastic enough to withstand every strain put upon it by party spirit, western development, world-wide immigration, wars with little and great, far-reaching social and economic changes, inventions and discoveries, the growth of individual wealth, and the vagaries of endless reformers; that within the short space of 100 years we have grown to be a great Nation, so much so that to-day the United States is rightly regarded as the first among the nations of the earth, due to the Constitution, the palladium of our liberties and the landmark in our march of progress."

Again President Harding may have had in mind these words of the great patriot and priest:

"Fifteen millions of Catholics live their lives in our land with undisturbed belief in the perfect harmony existing between their religion and their duties as Americans. It never occurs to their minds to question the truth of a belief which all their experience confirms. Love of religion and love of country burn together in their hearts. They love their church as the divine spiritual society set up by Jesus Christ, through which they are brought into a closer communion with God, learn His revealed truth and His holy laws, receive the help they need to lead Christian lives, and are inspired with the hope of eternal happiness. They love their country with the spontaneous and ardent love of all patriots, because it is their country and the source to them of untold blessings. They prefer its form of government before any other. They admire the institutions and the spirit of its laws. They accept the Constitution without reserve, with no desire as Catholics to see it changed in any feature. They can with a clear conscience swear to uphold it."

Gilbert Nations, the bigoted editor of The Protestant, will never forgive Cardinal Gibbons for having uttered those splendid patriotic sentiments, for they brand him forever as a liar and a slanderer of the Roman Catholic Church in America when he says that Catholicism is identical with monarchy and that the Catholics of America are enemies of the Constitution and of our free institutions.

The closing sentences that I have just quoted seem to have been intended by the great priest and cardinal to confound the enemies of his church and to serve as a mighty breakwater against floods of false accusation that future enemies of his people and of the Republic, such as the Ku Klux Klan, might cunningly and designedly create.

The trouble with the mentally afflicted man who edits The Protestant is that his diseased imagination conjures up papal images in connection with everything that he considers evil in the heavens above, the earth beneath, and the waters down under the earth. He probably honestly believes that liquor is a very bad thing, and it then follows as the night the day that the Pope must be at the back of antiprohibition. He is probably an anglomaniac and honestly believes that self-government for the Irish is a bad thing. He has no doubts, then, that the Pope inspired the deviltry of which was born, in his opinion, the Gallivan Irish petition. He feels that war is the scourge of the race, and that the Great War was the greatest of all scourges, and he has not the slightest doubt that it was created by what he imagines to be the greatest of all evils, namely, the papacy of Rome, and he does not hesitate, in more than one issue of The Protestant, to charge the Pope with having brought about the war.

The insane delusion that some god or pope or other religious agency or power is working infinite harm or boundless good in the universe, along a multitude of lines and involving a multiplicity of detail, is a striking peculiarity of a certain kind of lunatic. The psychopathic wards of our great insane asylums are filled with unfortunate creatures of this kind.

If you will go back and consult the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS containing the debates on the war resolution, my colleagues, you will find that the ablest of our statesmen in Congress, both Senators and Representatives, reached their loftiest flights of eloquence in bitter denunciation of the Kaiser and his imperialistic designs to extend his empire from Berlin to Bagdad and to crush the liberties of the world with the mailed first of imperialism, absolutism, and despotism.

We all felt perfectly assured that the assassination of an Austrian grand duke by a simple-minded fanatical Serbian youth was the beginning but not the cause of the Great World War; that it was simply the match that lit the flame that threw the world into conflagration. We believed that the elemental causes of the war were to be found deeply embedded in German military philosophy, in Prussian despotism and desire for world dominion, in a false and fraudulent diplomacy handed down from the days of Frederick the Great, and in the belief of the German Kaiser that he was the annointed of God, and that the German people were the chosen seed. These intellectual principles, we thought, were the spiritual elements that formed the fertile soil in which was germinated the world catastrophe and from which it received its budding and its blossoming. We have reason to believe that President Wilson had these thoughts in mind when he asked us to declare war against the Kaiser and the Germans in order that the world might be made safe for democracy.

The strongest brains of the greatest statesmen of the allied powers spent all their energies and talents in all kinds of books—blue, yellow, and others—in demonstrating that the Kaiser caused the war. The finest minds among the greatest statesmen of the German and Austrian Empires, in their white and red books, spent their supreme intellectual forces proving that the Kaiser and Franz Joseph did not cause it, but that it was brought about by the jealousy of the surrounding nations of the industrial greatness and the military power and prowess of the Germanic peoples.

But poor, ignorant, deluded statesmen of both the Allied and the Central Powers! Poor fools in the Congress of the United States, both House and Senate! Everybody was wrong. The world was laboring under a strange and incomprehensible delusion. The Kaiser did not cause the Great War. It was the Pope, the very man whom nobody had ever suspected, and the editor of The Protestant is now dealing out this dirty stuff, this poisonous misinformation, to the poor dupes and ignoramuses who have nothing else to do but to read his magazine.

Another characteristic method of the fanatic, who is both stupid and dishonest, is to claim for his friends or his cause virtues or excellencies that the facts of history show are also possessed by his enemies, or to ascribe crimes and vices to his enemies which it is apparent to every intelligent mind are also to be justly attributed to his friends. The real polemic, the sincere friend of truth, the man who is too conscientious and courageous to permit himself to degenerate into a pettifogger and special pleader, is not afraid or ashamed to make damaging statements or confessions if his object is to enlighten and not to deceive.

We are deeply impressed with these considerations while scanning the pages and studying the headlines of the various issues of The Protestant. Everywhere there is evidence of an attempt to deceive the mind of his readers and to inflame their passions against the Roman Catholic Church by telling only half truths or by suppressing truth altogether. A few illustrations will suffice to prove my point.

In one number of his magazine Nations speaks with horror of the attempted or threatened burning of Dante by the Church of Rome, but is strangely silent everywhere in regard to the actual burning of Servetus by Protestants with the approval and at the instigation of John Calvin himself.

In another place he speaks sneeringly of "alien names of Roman hierarchy," and his patriotic soul shudders when he hears mentioned the names Pope, Cardinal, and Archbishop, but that same dear soul is filled with heavenly music by the entrancing sounds of the words Invisible Empire, Imperial Wizard, Grand Goblin, Kleagle, and King Kleagle, terminology of the Ku-Klux Klan, an organization that he praises throughout his publication, calling it in one place that "mighty patriotic organization," whose principles, methods, and conduct are very dear to him.

The editor of The Protestant takes great delight in crowding the pages of his magazine with accounts of the removal from office and disbarment of the Roman Catholic district attorney of Suffolk County, Mass., Joseph C. Pelletier, but is again strangely silent in regard to the removal from office and disbarment of the Protestant district attorney of Middlesex County, Nathan A. Tufts, who was involved in the same scandal that brought about both the personal and professional ruin of himself and Pelletier. Neither has mention ever been made, as far as I have been able to learn, of the impeachment and removal of William Sulzer, Protestant Governor of New York, or of James E. Ferguson, Protestant Governor of Texas. In other words, if a Protestant is convicted of corruption in public office, it is in the mind of Nations probably a miscarriage of justice or at worst only a slight manifestation of human depravity. If a Roman Catholic commits a crime in public office it is, to hear Nations tell it, a diabolical offense, not only because it violates a criminal statute of the State but because it is also a dastardly assault upon the Republic and our free institutions through the papacy.

In another issue of his magazine the editor of The Protestant rails against the Knights of Columbus for alleged distortion of the facts of American history, but fails, so far as I have been able to find, to mention the fact that the Knights of Columbus recently awarded a capital prize of $3,000 for the best essay on American history to a professor in a Protestant college.

It is a favorite pastime with papers like The Menace and The Protestant to describe in every detail of horror and execration the atrocities of the Catholic Spanish Inquisition, but they doubtless contemplate with merry indifference or even with silent satisfaction the tortures and cruelties of the English Court of Star Chamber and the Court of High Commission, a kind of double-barreled judicial organization, a Protestant tribunal that corresponded to the Spanish Inquisition and that did the same bloody work, but upon Catholics this time. A contributor to the New International Encyclopedia, writing of Whitgift, archbishop of Canterbury, as head of the High Commission, says:

"He established practically a new commission with enlarged powers and administered the oath with such rigor that his inquisition was comparable to those of Rome and Spain."

Describing a judgment of this court, an English writer says:

"In 1637 Mr. Pickering, for saying that the King was reconciled to Rome and for having built a pigsty on ground belonging to a churchyard, was fined £10,000, pillory, ears, whipping, branding with a hot iron, boring his tongue with an awl, and imprisonment for life."

While writing about the Catholic Spanish inquisition why not manifest the true spirit of American fair play and tell something about the English High Commission? Why suppress one-half the truth and thereby tell a lie? Also, while condemning the massacre of St. Bartholomew for the purpose of creating prejudice against the Catholic Church would it not be truly American and brave and righteous to tell the other half of the story and let the world know that Oliver Cromwell slaughtered every man, woman, and child in the Irish garrison of Drogheda and then had the impiety and inhumanity to write about it as follows:

"It hath pleased God to bless our endeavors at Drogheda. * * * I believe we put to the sword the whole number of its defendants. * * * This hath been a marvelous great mercy."

In this connection Green, the Protestant historian of England, says:

"Religion had been turned into a system of political and social oppression."

The pharisaic hypocrisy of the editor of The Protestant is so monumental that it makes us dizzy and fairly takes the breath. When Colonel MacNider charged him with being intolerant he calmly replied:

"I am as uncompromisingly opposed to anything even bordering on religious intolerance as you or anyone could be. The provisions of our National Constitution on that and all subjects have my profound and unqualified approval."

The most cursory perusal of any number of his magazine would convince any sane and disinterested reader that only a liar and hyprocite could have written that sentence.

As the journalistic motto of The Protestant he has taken a sentence from St. John 8-32:

Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

This sentence is the only suggestion of truth in the whole realm of his journalistic activity, as far as I have been able to find. Its only service, as he sees fit to use it, is to remind us of the imp who stole the livery of heaven to worship the devil in.

Throughout his publication he is fond of quoting celebrated writers and historians to show the intolerance and bigotry of the Catholic Church. If he is sincere in his desire that his readers shall know the truth concerning the history of intolerance, why does he not occasionally quote from standard Protestant historians showing the intolerance and bigotry of the Protestant Church? If he will not do it, in the name and interest of truth, I will do it for him, Protestant though I am.

"Persecution," says Hallam, "is the deadly original sin of the reformed churches; that which cools every honest man's zeal for the cause, in proportion as his reading becomes more extensive." (Constitutional History, Vol. I, Ch. II, p. 51.)

"The spirit of Calvinistic Presbyterianism," writes Green, "excluded all toleration of practice or belief. The absolute rule of bishops, indeed, Cartright denounced as begotten of the devil; but the absolute rule of presbyters he held to be established by the word of God. For the church founded after the fashion of Geneva he claimed an authority which surpassed the wildest dreams of the masters of the Vatican. Not only was the rule of ministers to be established as the one legal form of church government but all other forms were to be put down. For heresy there was the punishment of death. Never had the doctrine of persecution been urged with such blind and reckless ferocity." (History of the English People, Book VI, Chap. V.)

"It must be admitted," writes Buckle, "that in Scotland there is more bigotry, more superstition, and a more thorough contempt for the religion of others than in France. And in Sweden, which is one of the oldest Protestant countries in Europe, there is, not occasionally but habitually, an intolerance and a spirit of persecution which would be discreditable to a Catholic country, but which is doubly disgraceful when proceeding from a people who profess to base their religion on the right of private judgment." (History of Civilization in England, Vol. I, p. 264.)

Mark you, my colleagues, these historians just cited are all Protestant historians, whose historical writings constitute integral and important parts of English literature, the greatest and most brilliant of all literatures, with Shakespeare, the intellectual crown of the world, as the most splendid ornament. Why, it may be asked, if Nations wants to have his readers know the truth, in order that they may be made free, does he not give some of these quotations to his readers? Does he fear that he would lose his subscribers overnight and be mobbed by the Ku-Klux Klan besides?

Instead of writing long discourses on the canon laws of Rome, why does he not give his readers a brief history of Protestant Puritan life in early colonial days? If he were a truthful historian he would tell the whole truth about the Massachusetts Puritans—how they fled from England to America, braving the storms of the seas in coming and bloodthirsty savages on arriving, in order that they might worship God Almighty as they saw fit. Being a truthful historian, he would then tell his readers how the Puritans, as soon as they became thoroughly established in the complete enjoyment of unbounded religious freedom for themselves, began to persecute and imprison and murder the Baptists and Quakers, their Protestant brethren, who were bold, brazen, and imprudent enough to claim the same rights as those enjoyed by the Puritans.

He might tell them the story of how the Rev. Cotton Mather tried to kidnap William Penn and the Quakers and sell them as slaves in Barbados for rum and sugar. His historical sketch might be illuminated and be made quite entertaining by the insertion of the following letter by Cotton Mather:

SEPTEMBER YE 15, 1682.

TO YE AGED AND BELOVED MR. JOHN HIGGINSON: There is now at sea a ship called the Welcome, which has on board an hundred or more of the heretics and malignants called Quakers, with W. Penn, who is the chief scamp, at the head of them.

The general court has accordingly given secret orders to Master Malachi Huscott, of the brig Porpoise, to waylay the said Welcome slyly, as near the Cape of Cod as may be, and make captive the said Penn and his ungodly crew, so that the Lord may be glorified and not mocked on the soil of this new country with the heathen worship of these people. Much spoil can be made by selling the whole lot to Barbados, where slaves fetch good prices in rum and sugar, and we shall not only do the Lord great service by punishing the wicked but we shall make great good for His minister and people.

Master Huscott feels hopeful, and I will set down the news when the ship comes back.

Yours in ye bowels of Christ, COTTON MATHER.

Furthermore, he might devote a special chapter to Roger Williams, a refugee from the Puritan colony, and the truths of history would compel him to say that the voice of the Baptist in the wilderness of Rhode Island proclaiming religious freedom was a protest not against Catholic persecution but against the Protestant persecution of his Puritan brethren whom he had left behind when he fled for life from Massachusetts.

But it would be too much to ask Nations to do anything of that kind. A delegation of the Ku-Klux Klan would come all the way from Texas to put him to death for a base betrayal of their cause; that is, for telling the truth just once in the columns of his magazine.

If he intends to be fair why does not the editor of The Protestant cite tributes to the Catholic Church as well as criticisms of it? He delights to quote the great British statesman and orator, William E. Gladstone, against the Catholic Church. Why does he not also tell his readers things that Gladstone has said that are favorable to the Church of Rome? Why does he not quote this paragraph:

"A century ago we began to relax that system of penal laws against Roman Catholics, at once pettifogging, base, and cruel, which Mr. Burke has scathed and blasted with his immortal eloquence."

Why does he not quote for the pleasure and instruction of his readers this beautiful and eloquent passage from the writings of Mr. Gladstone on the Catholic Church:

"She has marched for fifteen hundred years (since the days of Constantine) at the head of civilization, and has harnessed to her chariot as the horses of a triumphal car the chief intellectual and material forces of the world; her art, the art of the world; her genius, the genius of the world; her greatness, glory, grandeur, and majesty have been almost, though not absolutely, all that in these respects the world has had to boast of. Her children are more numerous than all the children of the sects combined; she is every day enlarging the boundaries of her vast empire; her altars are raised in every clime and her missionaries are to be found wherever there are men to be taught the evangel of immortality and souls to be saved. And this wondrous church, which is as old as Christianity and as universal as mankind, is to-day, after its twenty centuries of age, as fresh and vigorous and as fruitful as on the day when the Pentecostal fires were showered upon the earth."

Why not also give his comrades and compatriots of the Ku-Klux Klan the benefit of the estimate of Macaulay, who, in his essay on Ranke, paid the following eloquent tribute to the Church of Rome and to its history of nineteen hundred years:

"There is not, and there never was on this earth, a work of human policy so well deserving of examination as the Roman Catholic Church. The history of that church joins together the two great ages of human civilization. No other institution is left standing which carries the mind back to the times when the smoke of sacrifice rose from the Pantheon, and when camelopards and tigers bounded in the Flavian amphitheater. The proudest royal houses are but of yesterday when compared with the line of supreme Pontiffs. That line we trace back in unbroken series from the Pope who crowned Napoleon in the nineteenth century to the Pope who crowned Pepin in the eighth; and far beyond the time of Pepin the august dynasty extends till it is lost in the twilight of fable. The Republic of Venice came next in antiquity. But the Republic of Venice was modern when compared to the papacy, and the Republic of Venice is gone and the papacy remains. The papacy remains, not in decay, not a mere antique, but full of life and youthful vigor. The Catholic Church is still sending forth to the farthest ends of the world missionaries as zealous as those who landed in Kent with Augustine, and still confronting hostile kings with the same spirit with which she confronted Attila. The number of her children is greater than in any former age.

"Her acquisitions in the New World have more than compensated for what she has lost in the old. Her spiritual ascendancy extends over the vast countries which lie between the plains of the Missouri and Cape Horn. Nor do we see any sign which indicates that the term of her long dominion is approaching. She saw the commencement of all the governments and of all the ecclesiastical establishments that now exist in the world; and we feel no assurance that she is not destined to see the end of them all. She was great and respected before the Saxon had set foot on Britain, before the Frank had passed the Rhine, when Grecian eloquence still flourished at Antioch, when idols were still worshiped in the temples of Mecca, and she may still exist in undiminished vigor when some traveler from New Zealand shall, in the midst of a vast solitude, take his stand on a broken arch of London Bridge to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's."

This was the judgment of Macaulay, Protestant historian of England—statesman, orator, and essayist—one of the great ornaments of the history and literature of his country, a man whose fine brain was grandly lit with learning and with truth, whose courage was too splendid to permit him to accuse falsely, whose goodness was too noble to tolerate even the thought of persecution. What a contrast between Macaulay, the statesman, orator, and writer, and the peanut politicians and petty pamphleteers of America who are willing to barter their souls for a little ready cash and sell their birthrights of religious freedom for a miserable mess of pottage of the Ku-Klux Klan! What a dangerous and dizzy descent from Macaulay to one of the candidates for office of this traitorous vendetta!

Mr. Speaker, I have been told recently by different Members of this House that the members of the Ku-Klux Klan are still circulating at their secret meetings in the South and West reports of the existence of a terrible oath which it is alleged is taken by members of the Knights of Columbus, an oath too dirty and filthy to be spoken or printed, an oath said to be directed at the destruction of Protestantism and free government, an oath that has been repeatedly shown to be bogus and false.

The poor dupes and ignoramuses who allow themselves to be misled by lies of this kind are doubtless ignorant of the fact that this alleged oath of the Knights of Columbus has been shown to be false not only by commissions of Protestants appointed for the purpose but by court trials as well, at which Protestant judges presided and Protestant juries convicted. In the interest of truth and justice I wish to cite several instances.

On January 29, 1915, Hon. William Kettner, formerly a Member of Congress from California, a Protestant, and a thirty-third degree Mason, caused to be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a report of a committee of Free Masons of Los Angeles which read as follows:

"We hereby certify that by authority of the highest officer of the Knights of Columbus in the State of California, who acted under instructions from the supreme officer of the order in the United States, we were furnished a complete copy of all the work, ceremonies, and pledges used by the order, and that we carefully read, discussed, and examined the same. We found that while the order is in a sense a secret association, it is not an oath-bound organization, and that its ceremonies are comprised in four degrees, which are intended to teach and inculcate principles that lie at the foundation of every great religion and every free state. Our examination of these ceremonials and obligations was made primarily for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not a certain alleged oath of the Knights of Columbus, which has been printed and widely circulated, was in fact used by the order, and whether, if it was not used, any oath, obligation, or pledge was used which was or would be offensive to Protestants or Masons, or those who are engaged in circulating a document of peculiar viciousness and wickedness. We find that neither the alleged oath nor any oath or pledge bearing the remotest resemblance thereto in matter, manner, spirit, or purpose is used or forms a part of the ceremonies of any degree of the Knights of Columbus. The alleged oath is scurrilous, wicked, and libelous, and must be the invention of an impious and venomous mind. We find that the order of Knights of Columbus, as shown by its rituals, is dedicated to the Catholic religion, charity, and patriotism. There is no propaganda proposed or taught against Protestants or Masons or persons not of Catholic faith. Indeed, Protestants and Masons are not referred to directly or indirectly in the ceremonials and pledges. The ceremonial of the order teaches a high and noble patriotism, instills a love of country, inculcates a reverence for law and order, urges the conscientious and unselfish performance of civic duties, and holds up the Constitution of our country as the richest and most precious possession of a knight of the order. We can find nothing in the entire ceremonials of the order that to our minds could be objected to by any person.

"MOTLEY HUGHES FLINT,
"Thirty-third Degree, Past Grand Master of Masons of California.

"DANA REID WELLER,
"Thirty-second Degree, Past Grand Master of Masons of California.

"WM. RHODES HERVEY,
"Thirty-third Degree, Past Master and Master of Scottish Rite Lodge.

"SAMUEL E. BURKE,
"Thirty-second Degree, Past Master and Inspector of Masonic District."

Let it not be forgotten, my colleagues, that the committee that framed this report and the Congressman who introduced it in the RECORD were all Protestants and Free Masons and were actuated in their conduct only by motives of truth and justice.

Mr. Speaker, I wish now to tell briefly of two criminal trials in which the bogus character of this alleged oath was conclusively shown.

The first was a Philadelphia case and was legally styled "Commonwealth of Pennsylvania against Charles Megonegal and Clarence H. Stage."

Megonegal and Stage were indicted for malicious libel, and were charged with printing and causing to be printed libelous matter—the bogus Knights of Columbus oath—thereby willfully and maliciously exposing the Knights of Columbus as a body and certain individually named men, members of the order, who were complainants, to public hatred, contempt, and ridicule, to their great damage, disgrace, scandal, and infamy.

At a preliminary hearing before the trial Megonegal stated that he had bought copies of the bogus oath in bulk from The Menace before starting to print it on his own account.

On Friday, January 30, 1914, Megonegal and Stage appeared in the quarter sessions court before Hon. Robert N. Willson, presiding judge, to answer the indictment against them. Megonegal pleaded guilty and Stage nolo contendere, meaning that the truth of the charge was not denied, the district attorney having previously agreed that sentence be suspended in consideration of these pleas.

Attorneys MacLaren and King, counsel for the defense, joined in the request to the court for suspended sentence, pleading good faith on the part of their clients, who, they said, had received the "oath" from The Menace, of Aurora, Mo.

As evidence that their clients had been deceived, they presented to the court a copy of a letter sent to The Menace by Mr. King, asking the paper's aid in the defense of Megonegal and Stage, and the original of the reply received from The Menace.

The text of Mr. King's letter follows:

PHILADELPHIA, February 27, 1913.

MENACE PUBLISHING CO., Aurora, Mo.

GENTLEMEN: Mr. Peter M. MacLaren and myself are associated in the case of libel and conspiracy brought by the Knights of Columbus against Clarence H. Stage and Charles Megonegal, of this city.

We notice in your issue of March 1 that you are prepared to print and distribute the complete ritual and secret work of the Knights of Columbus, and we desire to obtain an authentic copy of said ritual and secret work for use in the trial of our clients, since the prosecution alleges that there is no oath taken by candidates for any of the Knights of Columbus degrees. Can you supply us with what we desire and need?

Our clients have no knowledge of the authenticity of the Knights of Columbus oath, having received them in the first instance from your company, and they naturally rely upon you to aid them in their present difficulty.

An early reply will be greatly appreciated.

Yours very truly,

LEROY N. KING.

The answer of The Menace was as follows:

AURORA, MO., March 5, 1913.

Mr. LEROY N. KING,
Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of February 27, we wish to state that we are not in possession of the ritual and secret work of the Knights of Columbus, but we believe we are in fair way to get it; and the statement in a recent issue of The Menace which led you to believe that we had it in our possession, while somewhat of a bluff on our part, was based on the fact that we know that it can be had. You will note that we printed in our No. 99 the ritual and secret work of the Hibernians, and we are positive that it is authentic. The alleged oath which your clients in Philadelphia were arrested for distributing was circulated in practically every State during the late campaign, and the demand upon us for this document was something great, and we had received copies of them from so many sources we simply printed and handled them as we would any other job of printing—to supply the demand—and while we have no apologies to make for so doing, we do not have any evidence that the oath is the one which is taken by members of the Knights of Columbus.

We feel sure that it would be folly for you to undertake to base your defense on the authenticity of this document.

We note that some of the officials are claiming that it is not an oath-bound order, which, of course, is a subterfuge and untrue. You can depend on them resorting to any method which they can contrive to bluff away their critics, and if they are so bent on vindicating themselves, why not ask that they present in court the obligations which they do take? This would be the quickest way to clear the matter up in the minds of the people.

We are filing your letter and will be on the lookout for anything which we think will aid in the defense of these men.

Trusting that this will be satisfactory, we beg to remain,

Yours sincerely,

THE MENACE PUBLISHING CO.

In suspending sentence under the agreement, Judge Willson, a prominent Presbyterian layman in Philadelphia, said:

"I think that these cases have reached a very proper conclusion, and it is, in my judgment, quite suitable that, in accordance with the desire of all parties concerned, sentence should be suspended in the cases.

"Great care ought to be taken that no injustice should be done by written or spoken words to either individuals or institutions. It is not at all strange that the prosecutors in these cases should not have been willing that the opprobrium which would naturally arise if the publications complained of had been founded in truth should be allowed to exist.

"I am personally glad to hear from the head of the order or society referred to what he has said in regard to the matter.

"Though not of the same faith, I realize fully and without reluctance that the church with which that society is affiliated accomplishes a vast deal of good. Its activities should be protected from misrepresentation.

"I may add that my personal acquaintance with Mr. Flaherty, the head of the order in question, leads me to accept his statement without hesitation."

The distressing conclusion to be drawn from this trial, Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, is that there are publications in this country which are permitted to pass through the mails that shamelessly admit that they lie and bluff, and unblushingly confess that they ship these printed lies and bluffs in job lots and carloads to the detriment of the character and to the destruction of the good names of American citizens.

Another case of the greatest interest in this regard was that entitled "State of Minnesota against A. M. Morrison and Garfield E. Morrison, editors and publishers of the Mankato (Minn.) Morning Journal."

This was an action of criminal libel brought by one E. M. Lawless, editor of the Waterville Sentinel, against two men—A. M. Morrison and G. E. Morrison, father and son, editors and publishers of the Mankato Morning Journal, of Mankato, Minn. The libel consisted, as alleged, in the charging of Lawless with having taken the bogus Knights of Columbus oath.

After a long and sensational trial the jury returned a verdict of guilty, which was read by the foreman, Rev. Thomas Billing, a Methodist minister, and the court imposed a jail sentence of 30 days on each of the defendants, from which an appeal was taken.

An interesting correspondence regarding this trial between the Reverend Mr. Billing and Mr. Fred Bierman, publisher of the Decorah (Iowa) Journal, was as follows:

DECORAH, IOWA, August 14, 1914.

Rev. THOMAS BILLING,
Pastor of Methodist Church, Waterville, Minn.

DEAR SIR: I have noted with interest that you were a juror in the prosecution of A. M. and G. E. Morrison, of Mankato, for criminal libel by R. M. Lawless, of the Waterville Sentinel.

The reports are that the jury unanimously voted for the conviction of A. M. and G. E. Morrison. May I not ask you to write me a line or two, stating whether or not this report is a fact? And also give me any bit of information that may be of interest in the case.

This anti-Catholic agitation, in my judgment, is very discreditable to all the Protestant Churches that do not seek in the spirit of Christian charity to quiet it. Furthermore, it is a menace to the best conduct of political affairs and breeds a very regrettable bitterness and suspicion among people who otherwise would be friends.

If you have no objection, I should thank you very much for the privilege of publishing your reply in the Journal.

Sincerely yours,

FRED BIERMAN.

The answer:

WATERVILLE, MINN., August 15, 1914.

Mr. FRED BIERMAN, Decorah, Iowa.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 14th received. And while I do not care for publicity, must admit that either by the irony of fate or by the hand of Providence I found myself upon the jury empaneled to find a verdict in the E. M. Lawless criminal libel case against A. M. and G. E. Morrison, of the Mankato Journal. I did not know until I reached the court room of the case. Had I known what awaited me that day I would probably have been absent when the sheriff came three-quarters of an hour before the trial to summon me. But when summoned, did not inquire how or learn for what purpose. However, never having run away from anything that looked like duty, and not being challenged by either party, I stood my ground, and notwithstanding much adverse local criticism, am glad to have had the privilege of helping to nail down so ugly and diabolical a lie as the pseudo oath so widely published and attributed to Ed Lawless was proven to be.

Furthermore, my district superintendent and other of my ministerial brethren (all of whom I have hitherto met) have expressed themselves as being perfectly at one with me.

The case was very simple.

1. The publication of the so-called oath in the defendant's paper was proven.

2. Its diabolical character was proven.

3. Its circulation in Waterville was proven by Rev. H. P. Chapman, pastor of the Congregational Church of that city.

4. Its utter and complete falsity was proven by two witnesses of the highest standing in the order, viz, Doctor Buckley, of St. Paul, by whom or in whose presence the fourth degree was conferred on complainant Lawless, and also by William J. McGinley, of New York, supreme secretary of the order and custodian of all the written and oral work.

The first ballot stood 9 to 3 for conviction. The second ballot stood 10 to 2 for conviction, and the third was unanimous for conviction. The verdict was followed by a sentence of 30 days for each of the defendants in the county jail. The case, however, is appealed to the district court in September.

The case was the result of an anti-Catholic spirit (which has had other deplorable results), stirred up by the advent of Annie Lowry, the pseudo nun, whose trail across the State is quite visible and certainly not enviable. Such things exhibit the strange anomaly of a religion of love producing the keenest haters and a gospel of peace engendering strife and animosities more bitter than the disputes and rivalries of the most profane.

Yours for the peace of Zion,

(Rev.) THOMAS BILLING,
Foreman of Jury.

Thanks for letter:

DECORAH, IOWA, August 17, 1914.

Rev. THOMAS BILLING,
Waterville, Minn.

MY DEAR SIR: I thank you very much for your letter of August 15 and for the promptness of your reply.

I want to compliment you on the position you take in the matter and to say that, in my opinion, if the Protestant clergymen in general took this position they would be held in higher esteem by the general public.

If I can do you a favor at some future date, I hope that you will not hesitate to call upon me.

Sincerely yours, FRED BIERMAN.

And lastly, Mr. Speaker, not only have Protestant committees and the courts of the country branded the alleged "oath" as a lie but an election committee of this House, after careful examination of the subject, has done the same.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 15, 1913, pages 3215 et seq., appears a report of the Committee on Elections No. 1 of this House, in the contested-election case of Eugene C. Bonniwell against Thomas S. Butler. The contestant alleged that the circulation of the "oath" against him was libelous and had influenced the election to his disadvantage.

After reciting the "oath," which is too indecent to be quoted here, the committee in its report said:

"This committee can not condemn too strongly the publication of the false and libelous article referred to in the paper of Mr. Bonniwell, and which was the spurious Knights of Columbus oath, a copy of which is appended to the paper. It also condemns the publication of editorials to excite religious prejudice in a political campaign. No man should be persecuted for his religion, whether he be Catholic or Protestant,"

Notwithstanding the indisputable proofs of the falsity of this alleged "oath" by Protestant committees, by the courts, and by the Congress, anti-Catholic publications and the Ku-Klux Klan still continue to poison the public mind with this infamous lie and libel.

The latest form of persecution directed by fanatics against the Knights of Columbus is to accuse them of misappropriation of war funds intrusted to them for the benefit of American soldiers of the Great War. Recently I received at my office in Washington from one Jay W. Forrest, alleged supreme grand master of the so-called Sons and Daughters of Washington, Albany, N. Y., a card which read, in part, as follows:

"To the Congress of the United States:

"We demand that the Knights of Columbus, a secret Roman Catholic organization, be investigated by a committee to ascertain what they have done with the millions of dollars raised by the American people for the benefit of the American soldiers, turned over to them by the invisible hand in Washington the latter part of 1918."

Then following this on the card are statements, allegations, and insinuations that are doubtless as baseless as those concerning the bogus Knights of Columbus oath.

I have in front of me, my colleagues, the printed "Report of the Supreme Board of Directors, Knights of Columbus Educational and Welfare Work," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922. This report is certified as correct by Mr. Emanuel Engel, a member of the New York bar and a certified public accountant, with offices in the Woolworth Building, New York City.

Mr. Engel is a non-Catholic, and there is no reason whatever to believe that he has certified a false account. On the contrary, there is every reason to believe that the account is absolutely correct. The receipts and disbursements, the assets, liabilities, and reserves are given systematically and in great detail, in such detail and at such length that I do not deem it expedient to insert them in the RECORD. I will gladly submit the printed report to any Member of the House who wishes to examine it. It was evidently issued by the Knights of Columbus for the inspection and examination of the general public.

I will merely state that the account shows that the Knights of Columbus received from the two sources, (1) Knights of Columbus drive a total of $15,230,503.76, and (2) from the united war-work campaign a total of $26,862,592.69, making a grand total of $42,093,096.45.

When the disbursements are subtracted from the receipts, the amount shows a balance of $7,879,104.11, and the printed statement concludes with this paragraph:

DISPOSITION OF BALANCE UNENCUMBERED.

Balance unencumbered as of July 1, 1922		$7,116,370.51
Estimated budget for fiscal year beginning July 1, 1922	$2,094,370.51
Estimated requirements for continuation and extension of activities for five years beyond June 30, 1923, for hospital service, correspondence courses, general administration, sundry requirements (chaplains, insurance, etc.), and contingencies	5,022,000.00
		7,116,370.51

It affords me great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to call attention to this accounting, which is doubtless correct to a cent. It affords we pleasure also to testify personally to the magnificent work of the Knights of Columbus during the Great War in France, Belgium, and Germany. I was myself a member of the faculty of lecturers of the American Expeditionary Forces University at Beaune, France. I had occasion and opportunity to study the fine work of all the great religious and charitable American organizations. Many times have I stood and watched agents of the Knights of Columbus, standing in front of their booths, huts, or tents inviting soldiers to come in for refreshments, and never once did I hear even a suggestion of religion or denominational adherence. The doughboys were given sandwiches, chocolates, or drinks, and were then sent away with a blessing and a Godspeed, without question or comment concerning any religious or denominational profession. And the very last thing that I remember when our train pulled into Brest from Paris loaded with American soldiers homeward bound was the presence of Knights of Columbus men, together with representatives of other welfare organizations, shouting welcome to the happy doughboys and showering them with sandwiches, chocolates, and candies.

I remember, too, that there was no mention of religion there. Such a thing would have been despicable and mean, for every train from Paris brought Protestants, Catholics, and Jews, indiscriminately mingled; great, strong-limbed, ruddy-faced youths in khaki, with brows crowned with laurels of victory fresh from the battle fields of France where they had covered themselves and their country with glory at Chateau-Thierry and in the Argonne Forest. And when I think of those splendid days of national exultation, of magnanimous and generous self-forgetfulness, of distinctions in politics and religion buried in supreme patriotic enthusiasm and emotion, and then am compelled to consider and contemplate the meanness and degeneracy of the race prejudice and religious bigotry of this day and time, I am alternately angered and made sick at heart.

Mr. Speaker, I am neither Catholic nor Jew. I am a Presbyterian Protestant, and I hold the tenets of my faith as dearly as does any man. But I despise racial intolerance and religious bigotry, and I hate persecution as I do the spirit of the devil and all his ways. I believe that the best hope of this Republic lies in the maintenance forever of the groundwork of religious freedom upon which the fathers founded it. When that foundation crumbles I believe that the Republic will crumble with it.

Civil liberty was not born in America. It was born in Catholic England, at Runnymede, in 1215, more than 300 years before Protestantism appeared upon the earth, when Catholic barons wrung from King John the famous Magna Charta, the foundation of all Anglican and American civil freedom.

America's distinct and priceless contribution to the political civilization of the earth was in the gift of religious freedom to mankind; in other words, in the framing of a government that separated church and state forever, and made individual judgment and conscience the test of man's rights of faith and worship in matters of religion.

Excepting a few years in the reign of Constantine, beginning in the year 313 of our era and ending with the death of that monarch, there was no religious freedom upon the earth until the adoption of the American Constitution and the founding of the American Republic. That is, there was no separation of church and state and no legal religious freedom.

The founders of the Republic who gathered at Philadelphia in 1787 had the history of mankind before them for inspiration and instruction. They were deeply familiar with all the bloody religious wars that had cursed the human race. They knew that Protestants and Catholics had been equally guilty of religious persecution and oppression. They also knew that both Catholics and Protestants had fought the battles of the Revolution successfully side by side, had suffered together at Valley Forge, had both upheld the arms of Washington at every turn, and together had triumphed gloriously at Yorktown.

These reflections impressed the framers of the Constitution with a holy magnanimity, imbued them with a divine generosity, and blending their patriotic counsels, they said: In building our Constitution, the great instrument of our new Government, we will forget the horrors and barbarities, the cruelties and atrocities of the religious persecutions of the past. We will forget the burning of Savanorola by Catholics and of Servetus by Protestants. We will forget both the Catholic Spanish inquisition and the Protestant English Court of High Commission. We will only remember that almost simultaneously Roger Williams, a Protestant, in the forests of Rhode Island, and Lord Baltimore, a Catholic, in the wilderness of Maryland, proclaimed religious liberty to the world, based upon the sublime declaration of the Nazarene, the divine author of their common faith, when he said: Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's.

Washington, the immortal first President of the Republic, expressing his own views as well as indicating the sentiments of his compatriots of the great convention, once said.

"If I could have entertained the slightest apprehension that the Constitution framed in the convention, where I had the honor to preside, might endanger the religious rights of any ecclesiastical society certainly I would never have placed my signature to it, and if I could now conceive that the General Government might be so administered as to render the liberty of conscience insecure I beg you will be persuaded that no one would be more zealous to establish effectual barriers against the horrors of spiritual tyranny and every species of religious persecution."

Thomas Jefferson, expressing the same patriotic sentiments in condensed form, once wrote:

"I have sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man."

In the same tone and tenor James Madison wrote:

"Religion, or the duty which we owe to our Creator, and the manner of discharging it, can be directed only by reason and conviction, and not by force or violence. The religion, then, of every man must be left to the conviction and conscience of every man to exercise it as these may indicate. This right is in itself an inalienable right."

Line upon line and precept upon precept this cumulative creed of religious freedom has come down to us from the lips and lives of all our statesmen, heroes, and patriots, and has marked every step of our progress toward a marvelous and magnificent destiny.

But, Mr. Speaker, all this is to be now reversed if the Ku-Klux Klan can have its way. Protestants are to be secure, but Catholics and Jews insecure, in their rights of religious freedom. We are to return to those days of bigotry and persecution that the fathers in their wisdom believed they had blotted forever from the minds and memories of men. God forbid!

Roman Catholics, I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, are entitled to complete religious freedom as a matter of "inalienable right," in the language of Madison. But aside from this inalienable right, of which no human agency can legally rob them, Catholics have earned this constitutional right as statesmen in the councils, generals in the tents, and soldiers in the ranks of freedom.

Time does not permit and the occasion does not demand a calling of the roster of Catholic great names in the annals of the Republic. Nevertheless, Catholic deeds and achievements enrich the pages of all our history.

Charles Carroll of Carrollton, the Irish Revolutionary patriot, was a signer of the Declaration of Independence and a bosom friend of Washington.

"Saucy Jack Barry, father of the American Navy," whose monument adorns one of the parks of the Capital, was, like many of the seamen under him, an Irishman and a Catholic.

Gen. Stephen Moylan, appointed by Washington, was a Catholic and the first quartermaster of the Revolutionary Army.

It is a well-known fact that the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick met the revolutionary bankrupt Government's appeal for financial aid with a subscription of over a half million dollars. Thomas Fitzsimmons, a Catholic merchant of Philadelphia, made an individual subscription of $25,000, a vast sum at that time.

Our later military history has been adorned by the illustrious names of Meagher, Ewing, Sheridan, and Rosecrans.

The Supreme Court of the Nation has been ably presided over by two great Catholic jurists, Taney and White, Chief Justices.

The Senate of the United States has been adorned by the brilliant statesmanship of many Catholic Senators, notable among them being General Shields, whose statue stands in Statuary Hall, who was the hero of two wars—the Mexican and the Civil—and that had the peculiar distinction of being a United States Senator from three States—Illinois, Minnesota, and Missouri.

Every grammar-grade pupil in the public schools knows the history of Catholic activity and achievement in the discovery, exploration, and settlement of America. The first names taught him are those of Columbus, Americus Vespuccius, De Soto, Balboa, Cortez, Champlain, Joliet, Marquette, Cartier, La Salle, and Iberville, all Catholic heroes and explorers. He no sooner learns of the discovery and settlement of America than his teacher tells him of the great aid of Catholic France and Catholic Poland in the establishment of the independence of his country. He is thrilled with the mere mention of the names of Lafayette, Rochambeau, Fleury, Count de Gras, Pulaski, De Kalb, and Kosciusko, all Catholic comrades of Washington and champions of American independence.

If the grand goblins and king kleagles of the Ku-Klux Klan could gather in Lafayette Square in front of the White House in Washington and be reminded that of the four heroic figures in bronze and marble that adorn the four corners of this square, three of them—those of Lafayette, Rochambeau, and Kosciusko—are statues of Catholic heroes, they might be slightly mollified in their hatred of Catholicism. They might even be inclined to allow a few Catholics to remain in the country undisturbed in the enjoyment of the civil and religious liberty that these men with their swords helped to establish.

The names of Lafayette and Rochambeau, Mr. Speaker, remind us that brave and brilliant and beautiful Catholic France has more than once in a supreme crisis of human history stood in the breach for liberty and civilization.

They were Catholic knights under Karl Martel at the nine-day battle of Tours that stopped the advance of Mahomet's empire, that preserved western Christian civilization, and that gave to Europe Bibles instead of korans and cathedrals instead of mosques. They were Catholic youths at Verdun who, with faces lit by the eternal Gallic smile and with hearts beating wildly to the trumpet calls of La Marseillaise, went, like bridegrooms to a marriage feast, to death and dust for liberty, humanity, and civilization.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make vigorous and earnest protest against the anti-Catholic propaganda in many sections of the country that is becoming a menace to the peace of the Nation, that is furnishing a solemn mockery of our boasted religious freedom, and that would destroy the corner stone of the Republic if allowed to become effective. As a Presbyterian who believes that there can be no religious freedom for the Protestant unless there is equal religious freedom for the Jew and Catholic, I protest against the widespread anti-Catholic agitation in America.

It is not possible, my colleagues, that the nature and character of this propaganda are unknown to you. The purposes are seriously and solemnly proposed and proclaimed by certain anti-Catholic organizations and anti-Catholic newspapers to restrict the political rights of Catholics in America by denying them, as far as possible, the privilege of holding public offices under the Government. Could any proposal be more undemocratic and un-American? Could a more dastardly project be suggested to undermine the spirit of the Constitution and to destroy religious freedom in our country? And do you know that these agitators advocate this religious discrimination in spite of the fact that Article VI of the Constitution provides that—

"No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States."

And in spite of the fact that article 1 of the Bill of Rights provides that—

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

Do you know that they strangely contend that such a discrimination is needed to preserve free institutions and as a means of perpetuating public liberty? Have you stopped to consider that they seriously contend that Catholicism and despotism are identical and interchangeable and that Catholic domination would be the destruction of free institutions in the United States? These anti-Catholic propagandists tell us that if Catholics reach a numerical majority in the country and get control of the machinery of government, the Pope, instead of the President, the Congress, and the courts, will rule us. They boldly assert that we are even now threatened with Catholic domination, and they point with alarm to numerous offices held by Catholics under the State and Federal Governments, as if Catholics were not constitutionally entitled to hold offices if the people see fit to elect them.

In their fear and trembling that Catholics will seize the Government and overturn the Republic, they do not seem to understand that Catholics do not now hold and that they have never held public office in America, except in a few large cities, in proportion to their percentage of the general population. There are approximately 16,000,000 Catholics in the United States, about 17 per cent of the whole people. But, except in a few cities, like Boston, New York, and Chicago, they do not hold public positions in proportion to their numbers.

On a proportional basis Catholics would be entitled to about 76 Members of this House. They have only about 30. They would be entitled to 17 Members of the United States Senate. I understand that they have only five. And what is true of Congress is true of nearly every other branch of both the State and Federal Governments of this Union. How we are seriously threatened with Catholic domination, then, it is impossible for me to comprehend.

The silly and preposterous charge that Catholicism is hostile to free institutions and identical with a union of church and state is made in the very face of comparatively recent radical democratic developments in the histories of two of the most powerful Catholic countries in the world, of Italy and France, where the separation of church and state is as positive and pronounced as in our own country.

What support for their arguments, may I ask, do these anti-Catholic agitators derive from the outcome of the Garibaldian revolution, from the separation of church and state in Italy, and from the imprisonment of the Pope in the Vatican by Italian Catholics themselves? What support have they in the separation of church and state in France, the beautiful and brilliant among the nations, whose chivalric sympathies sent Lafayette and Rochambeau as ambassadors of freedom to our shores, whose school children presented to our Republic the Liberty Goddess in the harbor of New York, and whose "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity" of her famous revolution has reverberated like a splendid anthem around the earth for more than a hundred years?

What have these anti-Catholic propagandists, who charge that Catholicism is a menace to free institutions, to say when they are told that nearly every Republic on this earth, more than 20 in number, excepting the pagan Republic of China and the United States, is overwhelmingly Catholic in population? Far from being antagonistic to free institutions, is there not a strong suggestion in this fact that Catholicism and republican government are identical? Is there not a further suggestion of republican heredity when we consider that nearly all the Catholic races of modern times are direct descendants of the people of the ancient Roman Republic?

Are the anti-Catholic agitators, we may ask, ready to declare that Catholics of other Republics are advocates of freedom and are friendly to free institutions, while the Catholics of the United States are hostile and unfriendly? Would not such a charge be a gratuitous insult to the patriotism and an ungrounded slander upon the heroic conduct of American Catholics in every crisis of our history? Is it not a matter of common knowledge that Irishmen, chiefly Catholics, have always been foremost as defenders of American liberty? Has there ever convened a single Congress of this Republic in which Irish Catholic Members were not present and ready to defend American constitutional freedom if occasion arose and necessity required defense? Has there been a single battle field of this Republic upon which their blood has not richly flowed in defense of liberty and of the Union? Then why this unfounded calumny, these ungenerous insinuations, these cruel attacks upon their religion and their patriotism?

Let me remind my colleagues, in closing, of their exalted character and of the sacred and solemn obligations resting upon them as national representatives of the foremost Republic of the earth. If ungenerous and un-American impulses and fierce and unbridled passions must kindle the fires and stir the hatreds of religious bigotry among the people at large, let us here, at least, in the sacred confines of this Hall, preserve a dignified and patriotic equanimity, a statesmanlike composure, and a courageous attitude as the legislative guardians of civil and religious freedom on this continent. Let us above all things not forget that this Republic was not designed by the Revolutionary fathers to be Protestant, Catholic, or Jewish, but was intended as a perpetual asylum of religious freedom, where Protestant, Catholic, and Jew might each worship Almighty God after the dictates of his own conscience and in his own way.

The founders of the Republic designed the Constitution to be perpetual, the generations that followed proclaimed it an immortal document, and it is our sacred and solemn duty to help to transmit it untarnished and undiminished in beauty and in strength to all the generations that come after us. Any assault upon it should be accounted an accursed act. He who would despoil it should be execrated as we would loathe the profaner of a temple or the desecrator of a shrine.

There is positively no place for race prejudice or religious bigotry beneath our flag. In vain did Washington, marching in Liberty's vanguard, "lead freedom's eaglets to their feast"; in vain the proclamation of the Declaration of Independence and the adoption of the Constitution at Philadelphia more than a hundred years ago; in vain the bonfires and orations of the Nation's natal day, if our boasted liberties are to exist in theory but not in practice, in fancy but not in fact. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object, what is the subject, in detail?

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. I desire to extend my remarks along the lines of what the President has said on this particular subject.

Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York renews his request to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I hope that the Members of this House appreciate the importance of this judgeship bill. By one act of Congress we are increasing the number of Federal judges of this country by 24. I dare say that never in the legislative history of this country, with perhaps one exception, has a similar addition been made to the Federal judiciary at one time. I believe every Member of this House, regardless of which side he may sit upon, will agree with me that one of the highest duties which this Congress owes to the country is to see to it that neither the fact nor the suspicion shall rest against the Federal judiciary that political considerations have entered into the creation of the positions or the clothing of an individual with judicial authority. Is not that a sound proposition? If it is not, then I do not understand the duty and responsibility which rests upon Members of the American Congress.

I call your attention especially, gentlemen, to one particular judgeship in this bill, and incidentally I shall refer to some others; and upon facts which can not be controverted, I respectfully challenge the right of a Member of the American Congress to vote for this sort of legislation.

Gentlemen upon the left-hand side of this Chamber have the responsibility with regard to legislation now. You have proclaimed to the country that this is an administration of economy. Those were words, and words only; by your deeds you shall be judged. But, gentlemen, there is something far more important involved in a bill touching the Federal judiciary than the mere matter of dollars and cents. The man who wears the robe of a Federal judge tries the citizens of this country for their lives and their liberties and adjudicates property rights. The citizenship of this country have no power, directly or indirectly, broadly speaking, to choose their Federal trial judges. Now, let us see. I am referring now to the new judge for the State of New Mexico. The record shows that the judge now provided for the State of New Mexico—the judge already there during the fiscal year covered by the last report of the Attorney General—tried only 44 cases, criminal and civil together—44 cases only—and yet this administration is putting in a new judge there. Why? Politics! The rankest sort of politics! I hate to say that, but it is a palpable fact.

Now, gentlemen on the Republican side of the House, I am not claiming any superior merits for the party of which I am a member. I am speaking to you now because you have the responsibility. We must not be Democrats and Republicans when we face a question of this sort.

I tell you that in a time like this, when there are grave questionings in the hearts of many of the people of this country with regard to the integrity of their officials, the honesty of governmental administration generally, we can not afford to have the suspicion rest against the judge or against the position which he holds that his job was created for the sake of politics; because, gentlemen, if the facts justify the suspicion that the job has been created for political considerations, you can not make the people believe that political consideration stopped short of filling the position. That is why you create the position—to put the man in it. When you go before the tax-burdened people this fall with these unnecessary judgeships, you may be able to help some individual Members of Congress who have gotten these judgeships for their respective districts and for their States, but you must face the people of the country as a whole, who are required to pay the taxes for their maintenance, and you must face the people of the country as a whole, whom, I believe, do not favor and have virtue enough to resent "playing politics" with Federal judgeships. The people of this country are not going to indorse a policy on the part of this administration to make secure the reelection of its adherents by such a price as this.

This New Mexico judgeship which is provided in this bill is not the only judgeship which is provided where no judge is needed. In my opposition to this bill when it was before the House originally I called your attention to a number of others, but this New Mexico judgeship is the rawest deal of them all. It illustrates the lengths to which you are apparently willing to go; it demonstrates the lengths to which you are going in "playing politics" with Federal judgeships. It is not fair to you; it is not fair to the country; it is violative of one of the highest duties which you owe to have regard for the sanctity of these judicial positions and to keep them free from the fact and free from the suspicion of political jockeying. No Member of Congress, in the House or in the Senate, has a right to ask the Congress to lay the hand of politics—cheap, palpable, jockeying politics—upon the Federal judiciary in order to make sure his reelection. I believe in party loyalty within proper limitations, but there are duties which men owe which are higher than the duties which they owe to their party. I challenge any man on this floor to defend this judgeship, the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. VOLSTEAD] included. I want to say to his credit that he opposed the creation of this position. The only criticism that I have with him is that he ever consented to it. Forty-four cases tried in one year and we create a new judge for the district. Think of it, gentlemen; we had already added a new judge to each of the districts of California, a new judge to Arizona, one for the eastern district of Oklahoma, one for the northern district of Texas, and one for the district of Montana, absolutely surrounding the district of New Mexico with new judges and most considerably oversupplying that western territory. And now you are sending an additional judge to New Mexico! What for? Let us be honest about it. Is he needed in that district? No. Nobody can seriously contend that; I assume nobody here will contend that he is needed there. Is he needed in any of the territory from the Pacific Ocean straight through to the Atlantic, in any of the Western or Southern States? Nobody can contend that he will be needed there. He can not be used anywhere without transporting him across the continent at Federal expense for transportation and $10 per day additional for each day that he is out of his district. Then why is this new judge provided for New Mexico, for a district where he is not needed and in a territory where he can not be used? Simply, gentlemen, to help out the New Mexico delegation in Congress, or some member of that delegation, you are asked to contribute as a matter of politics this Federal judgeship with its added burden upon a tax-burdened people. I say with all respect, gentlemen, it is a disgrace to the American Congress. You can not defend it and you can not afford to do it.

Mr. YATES. This judgeship for New Mexico came from the Senate, did it not?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; it was put on by the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman knows that the House conferees objected to it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I objected to it.

Mr. BUTLER. Was the gentleman one of the conferees?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; and I never signed the conference report and never will.

Mr. BUTLER. I know the gentleman very well, and I know he will not stultify himself by doing what he does not want to do. What I want to know is, how this judgeship got in. I want to know the reason of it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I wish I could tell you how it got in.

Mr. BUTLER. I voted for the bill originally, thinking there was occasion for some of these additional judges, and I think my friend did.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I voted against the bill then. I have always conceded that there is need for some additional judges, but we must not permit that need to be taken advantage of, and this bill turned into a pork-barrel affair.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it not a case of simply having to take this judgeship or have no bill at all?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think not. But I take the position, and regard it as fundamental, that in the creation of Federal judgeship positions, it can not be compromised or sacrificed for any other consideration on earth, that it must be so—that every man that wears the robe of a Federal judge shall not have attached to him or his office the suspicion that he was given the job as a matter of political consideration at all. I think that is fundamental. How can you if you make the American people believe that the job has been created for the sake of politics—how in the name of common sense are you going to make them believe in the integrity of the man that will take a job of $7,500 from the taxpayers, the people of this country, hard up as the people are, put that money in his pocket, loaf around, and make them believe that he is the right sort of man to try the issues of life, property, and liberty in this country? If you will defeat the conference report we will get the judgeship bill back this session of Congress, and one that will not stultify a man when he votes for it. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words in answer. I am very glad of one thing. It has been generally charged in the newspapers that this bill was a pork barrel bill that provided for a great many unnecessary judges. When the bill is here for final passage the gentleman from Texas has only been able to stress one instance where he thinks there is anything wrong.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I voted against the bill originally in the House. I cited the instance of New Mexico as illustrating what I believe is the general character of the bill touching not only New Mexico but a number of other judgeships.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. An examination was made by a commission selected by the Attorney General, composed of three judges and two district attorneys, for the purpose of determining how many judges were needed. They concluded that 30 new judges were needed if we should clean up and take care of the business as it is coming in.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Were these 30 judges who were recommended to be rotated?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They recommended that 18 should be rotated, and that we put in other judges so as to make up the number of 30.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And did that recommendation contain a judge for New Mexico?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It did not; the House conferees were not in favor of a judge for New Mexico. But this bill provides for a conference of the senior circuit judges of each circuit, to be called here at Washington annually, for the purpose of determining where judges are needed. If judges have not sufficient work in their own districts, they will be assigned to a place where they can work.

Mr. BUTLER. That would include any district, any of the northern districts?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It would.

Mr. BUTLER. Then this judge of New Mexico could be sent to Maine?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; and he will be sent where he is needed. That was one of the chief arguments used by the Senate conferees to convince the House conferees that the amendment for this judge ought to be accepted. It seems clear to me that all of these judges are needed, and that it is only a question of where they ought to be located. It perhaps is unfortunate that one of these judges should be located in New Mexico, as he might have been located where it would have been more convenient. But there is nothing in the contention that because this man is appointed from New Mexico he will have nothing to do, because we provide in this bill that these judges shall be assigned for work elsewhere when it is necessary to keep the work current everywhere, and there is no question but that there is a great deal more work to do than the judges can clean up in the next dozen years to come. In all probability there will be more business than all of these judges can care for as the business of the country increases.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is the gentleman from Minnesota personally convinced that there is enough work for all these judges to do if properly assigned?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is no doubt about it; there will be more business for the Federal courts to do for years to come regardless of the fact that we have these 24 new judges.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Would the gentleman object to stating his judgment as to why they located the judge in New Mexico?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think that is material one way or the other. The Senate insisted on having the man appointed from New Mexico, it voted for it, and their conferees insisted that we ought to allow it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman state to the House what the expenses in the way of per diem and subsistence are allowed for a district judge when he is holding court in a place other than where he resides?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Not exceeding $10 a day for maintenance, besides mileage.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman spoke of the judge who is not needed in New Mexico being sent to Maine. If that should occur incidentally and he was sent to Maine, we would allow him $10 a day and mileage from New Mexico to Maine, because he is holding court in a place other than his residence.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think I mentioned Maine or sending the New Mexico judge to Maine.

Mr. BUTLER. I mentioned Maine myself to make a rather extravagant supposition.

Mr. BLANTON. I know the State of Maine was mentioned.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The State of Maine is on everybody's lips to-day.

Mr. BLANTON. It is to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. And will be to-morrow. Let me ask the gentleman the objection is not to the number of judges that are created by this bill but it is the error or misfortune in the location?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Even if we agree that it is an unfortunate thing to locate one of these judges in a place where we believe he ought not to be appointed there is no reason for finding serious fault with a bill of this kind. We can not expect to get all the things we may want; compromise is necessary; we have to be reasonable. So long as we do not provide unnecessary judges, it does not seem to me that we should oppose the bill or take serious exceptions. We have done the best we could, and the bill on the whole is a very good one. I move the previous question on the conference report.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold his motion, I desire to ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I withhold my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOWELL). The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Minnesota moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division, and I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays. Forty-six Members have arisen, a sufficient number, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 139, nays 78, not voting 210, as follows:

PENSION BILL.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5214, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5214) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to reconsider the vote by which the judges bill was passed and to lay that motion on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether or not he has consulted with the minority members of the committee about sending this bill to conference?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will say to the gentleman that I spoke to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW] possibly two weeks ago and told him that I hoped to get the bill to conference just as soon as the Senate had acted upon it, and he said that it was perfectly agreeable to him. I do not know whether the gentleman is in the city or not.

Mr. GARNER. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW] could not have known what is in this bill because it was added to in the Senate, very materially changing the pension policy of the country. It is not a mere private pension bill granting pensions to private individuals, but the Senate has broadened the scope of the pension laws of the country. I do not think a bill like that should go to conference by unanimous consent, but should be considered by the membership of the committee, and for the present I shall object.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think this is just merely an omnibus bill, I will say to the gentleman. I do not think there has been any legislation attached to it. It is nothing but an omnibus bill.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman if he is certain that his statement is correct, that it is nothing but an omnibus pension bill and has no legislation in it? If he takes the responsibility of making that statement, I will not object, but my impression is, in looking over the proceedings of the Senate, that there is general legislation in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. For the present, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am informed by the parliamentary clerk, Mr. Speaker, that there are no amendments such as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. GARNER. Then I withdraw my objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I was out of the Chamber when this matter was brought up. I would rather have the chairman of the committee withdraw the request for the present, until members of the committee have an opportunity to look over this bill. I am not one of the conferees.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will say to the gentleman this is about the last opportunity at the present session to dispose of the bill, and if it goes over now it will go over until next winter. It has been before one House or the other since last winter, and I think we ought to dispose of it. I will say to the gentleman that if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW] is not here, of course it would be perfectly proper to substitute the name of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I am not asking to go on the conference committee.

Mr. KNUTSON. I make the suggestion in order to expedite this legislation. Otherwise it will go over until next winter, and there are some very meritorious cases here for which Members on both sides are anxious for consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. I shall not object.

There was no objection.

SURPLUS POWER, SALT RIVER RECLAMATION PROJECT.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 10248.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10248) authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Salt River reclamation project, Arizona.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

[For conference report and statement see House proceedings of August 30, 1922.]

CADET FROM THE NETHERLANDS TO THE NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 169 and ask for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio calls up a Senate resolution. Has it been passed by the House?

Mr. STEPHENS. It has been passed by the House and passed by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. It is a Senate resolution similar to a bill that has already been passed by the House. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 169) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to receive for instruction at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis Mr. Willem van Doorn, a subject of the Netherlands.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit Mr. Willem van Doorn, a subject of the Netherlands, to receive instruction at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that the said Willem van Doorn shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the course in the various departments of instruction, and that the said Willem van Doorn shall not be admitted to the academy until he shall have passed the mental and physical examinations prescribed for candidates from the United States, and that he shall be immediately withdrawn if deficient in studies or conduct and so recommended by the academic board.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object in order to ask a question, may I ask the gentleman how many countries are given this privilege by the United States Government?

Mr. STEPHENS. I can not answer the gentleman, but it is customary to give countries this privilege when they make application, and they are granted the privilege of sending to our Naval Academy some one whom they desire.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will remember that there was a measure before the House to increase the present membership in the Naval Academy, and the proposition was turned down. I was just wondering whether or not we were going to deprive our own American boys from entering the academy and then at the same time permit various countries to send boys there?

Mr. STEPHENS. Not at all. There was a disposition to reduce the Naval Academy numbers because we did not need so many of them for the future. But this is not an expense to our Government, and it does not take the place of any boys from our own country that need a place, and it is a courtesy that has always been extended.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the Netherlands grant a reciprocal privilege to the United States?

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not believe they do, because there is never any application from the United States to attend any of their naval or military academies in the Netherlands.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman advise us why this privilege should be granted by the United States to any country?

Mr. STEPHENS. I probably could if I had the time to go into a lengthy discussion of the custom that has been followed here in our country for years and years to grant this courtesy to different nations in order to give their representatives appointment in either our Naval Academy or our Military Academy.

Mr. BLANTON. The only reason for my taking up the time of the gentleman by asking this question is this, that when we are in war we seek to overcome our enemy by reason of having better trained soldiers and sailors. Now, if we are going to give every country the right to the same knowledge and training that our soldiers and sailors receive in this country, what is our hope of being able to outdo them in strategy or in any other way in war time?

Mr. STEPHENS. We are only going to give one representative.

Mr. BLANTON. But that representative can go home and tell his country every single item that is connected with the training that our naval officers receive in this country.

Mr. STEPHENS. They can get that anyhow. That is not a secret. It is open to all countries, the whole public, as to the character of the instruction they receive at the Naval Academy. There is nothing secret about that.

Mr. BUTLER. Anybody can get that.

Mr. BLANTON. I doubt very seriously the wisdom of it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate resolution.

The resolution was ordered to a third reading; and having been read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF ALLOTMENTS ON CROW RESERVATION, ETC.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 10193 and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls from the Speaker's table and asks to concur in the Senate amendments, a bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10193) extending time for allotments on the Crow Reservation; protecting certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes; relief of Indians occupying certain lands in Arizona, New Mexico, and California; issuing patents in certain cases; establishing a revolving fund on the Rosebud Reservation; memorial to Indians of the Rosebud Reservation killed in the World War; conferring authority on the Secretary of the Interior as to alienation in certain Indian allotments, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from New York if any objection has been made to the amendments?

Mr. SNYDER. No. I have conferred with members of the committee on the other side and there is no objection. These amendments simply clarify the language in the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SNYDER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. FISH rose.

NATIONAL HOME FOR JEWISH PEOPLE IN PALESTINE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. FISH. I desire to call up from the Speaker's desk House Joint Resolution 322.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York calls up from the Speaker's table House Joint Resolution 322, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 322) favoring the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman to explain the change that has been made in this resolution by the Senate?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Senate amendment simply struck out the preamble—not all after the preamble.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All of the preamble.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Then the resolution remains exactly the same as when passed by the House?

Mr. FISH. Yes; except the preamble.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL FEDERAL JUDGES.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay on the table Senate bill 1288, for the purpose of clearing the calendar. I have a number of them that I would like to lay on the table, because they are embodied in the general bill which has just been passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1288) to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I also move to lay on the table the bill S. 2089.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2089) authorizing the appointment of an additional judge for the district of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I also move to lay on the table Senate bill 1254.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1254) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I also move to lay on the table the bill H. R. 2261.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2261) providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I also move to lay on the table the bill S. 395.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 395) providing for an additional judge for the district of Arizona.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I also move to lay on the table the bill H. R. 6648.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6648) authorizing the appointment of an additional judge for the district of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the bill lie on the table. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

SUBPŒNAS FOR WITNESSES.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 3917 in lieu of the bill H. R. 12355, reported by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, being a similar bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3917) to amend section 876 of the Revised Statutes.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 876 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 876. Subpœnas for witnesses who are required to attend a court of the United States, in any district, may run into any other district: Provided, That in civil cases no writ of subpœna shall issue for witnesses living out of the district in which the court is held at a greater distance than 100 miles from the place of holding the same without the permission of the court being first had upon proper application and cause shown."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, am I correct in understanding that this bill, if the House proceeds with its consideration, will be open for amendment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is open for amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. There is at least one important amendment that ought to be adopted. With that understanding, I shall not object.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think we have the right under the rule to bring it up, anyhow.

Mr. Speaker, the only change that is made in this bill from the present law is found in the last two or three lines, with respect to permission to bring a witness more than 100 miles, provided the court gives consent. Heretofore you could only get them across the district line if the district was within 100 miles of the trial court. This bill gives discretion to the trial court to determine whether he shall be brought or not. It is not an arbitrary power given, but it is to be controlled by the court.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. I assume that the permission can be granted by the court, on an ex parte examination, to the party desiring it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That may be true on proper application on cause shown. Of course, that would be within the discretion of the judge, if he would require the witness. It naturally would have to be granted on notice to the opposite party, I presume. There are two parties to the suit—that is, if the defendant has appeared.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The danger of this kind of legislation, as I understand it, is that some court trying a case, I do not care where, may make an order holding that some prominent man in New York is a material witness, and that he should be brought from New York to some distant State. I will not name any State. There is a great deal of prejudice against the power to take a man out of his State an unconscionable distance to be kept until the trial is over. This is not being done by unanimous consent, is it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think this is a dangerous bill in its present form. There ought to be consent of the court in the jurisdiction from which the man is to be taken as well as of the court in the jurisdiction to which he is to be taken.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is asked for by the Attorney General for the purpose of enabling him to try these war-fraud cases.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It will be used in ordinary small civil cases. It is one of the most dangerous powers in the world to allow a judge who wants to make a reputation to summon all the big bankers of New York to attend his court.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The gentleman is afraid for New York, is he?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No; I do not come from New York. I will take it from the gentleman's own State. Suppose all your big millers were ordered to come to some other State.

Mr. LONDON. Why not confine it to actions where the Government is the plaintiff? That would do what you desire.

It would give the power to the Attorney General in the cases that he wishes to apply it in. If we confine this extraordinary right to cases where the Government is a plaintiff, that will satisfy the Attorney General.

Mr. YOUNG. To cases where the Government is a party, either plaintiff or defendant.

Mr. LONDON. Where the Government is a party.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Did not the gentleman from Minnesota ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. TILSON]. The gentleman from Minnesota called up the bill for consideration.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I object.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The gentleman can not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota called up the bill as a matter of right.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The gentleman had on the calendar his own bill. He moved to substitute the Senate bill for it. That has to be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I called up the Senate bill because it is substantially the same as the House bill that has been reported and is on the House Calendar.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. But that can not be done except by unanimous consent, and I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule is clear that bills of similar substance may be considered in this way. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Is there no difference in the bills?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; except that the word "trial" is stricken out; but it must be the trial court anyway. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, this bill embodies part of the provisions that were in the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] the other day, to suspend the rules and pass a bill which he made up by adding together parts of two bills, as I recall.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. All of two bills.

Mr. WINGO. Two bills. I objected to that procedure at that time because I thought a serious matter like this ought not to be passed by suspension of the rules, but that it ought to be passed only after full consideration and with the right of the House to amend the bill.

Here is what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] wants to do. He wants to give the Attorney General the right in the war-fraud cases to subpœna witnesses and bring them to Washington, although they may be more than 100 miles away. Of course, I do not think this bill is going to do that without the amendment which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] will suggest or offer. I think he has got to amend his bill by referring specifically to the courts of the District of Columbia; but, anyway, that is what he was trying to do. Now, it not only does that for this extraordinary purpose, but it makes it permanent law, and I do not think it ought to be made into permanent law. But we all hate to be put into the attitude of doing anything that will stand in the way of the Attorney General prosecuting these war-fraud cases. My candid judgment is that what the House ought to do is to give the Government the special right for 12 months, in these civil cases, to subpœna witnesses, upon the approval of the court, where the distance is more than 100 miles, and to bring the suits here in the District of Columbia, as the gentleman seeks to do in the other bill. That would give the Attorney General this extraordinary remedy in order to meet this extraordinary situation. But the gentleman does not do that. Let me say a word to my Democratic friends. We all appreciate the danger of this, just as I do, but we are up against this proposition, that from the standpoint of the Government we do not want to put one stone in the way of the Attorney General in prosecuting these war-fraud cases. He has made first one excuse and then another for not doing it now for nearly two years. You remember in the last campaign, two years ago at this time, gentlemen upon the Republican side went upon the stump and led the voters to believe, "If you will just put us in power and give us charge of the Department of Justice, we will have these war-fraud criminals in Federal jails so thick that their feet will be hanging out of the windows." Time has passed on, and where are they? Name the men that they have put in prison. They have offered first one excuse and then another.

Finally, Republicans upon that side, patriotic men, got after their own Department of Justice some months ago and threatened impeachment, and then Mr. Attorney General got busy, and he said, "Oh, yes; just give me an extraordinarily big fund. Let me employ a whole lot of lawyers and I will get busy." The House said, "All right; we will let you do that." So he stuck upon the pay rolls a bunch of high-priced lawyers. Then next he said, "Give me a special grand jury and I will carry out the pledge we made." We gave him the special grand jury, and now here in the closing hours of this session, just before the campaign, he comes along and says that the United States Government can not afford to use the ordinary processes, even in these civil cases of war frauds, but that the United States Government is so discredited in the outlying districts of the United States that he proposes to bring the suits in the District of Columbia, and that you must give him the right to bring witnesses from any part of the Nation. That is what is proposed by this bill. Then going further, he says, "We desire not to bring suits in any other district in the United States, but we want the right to join two or more citizens of the United States in a civil war-fraud action, and not to bring the suit in the domicile of either one of them, not to bring it where you may find them, but to bring it where the cause of action may have arisen on the war contract, in the District of Columbia." That is what the Attorney General of the United States now says. That is his last excuse. I think it is extraordinary. I have told representative Republicans, "If you will limit this to 12 months or even to 3 years, I will be willing to stand out of the way." I am going to stand out of the way. I do not want any excuse for this Attorney General. Give him what he now asks. For two years he has played ping-pong with this matter. It is a disgrace to you as well as to us. I know the humiliation of good Republicans. You have got to give him this extraordinary remedy; but let us hope that when we give it to him he will do more than he has done so far. [Applause.]

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not yield for that purpose. What is the amendment?

Mr. LONDON. I want to offer an amendment to include after the words "civil cases" the words "in which the Government or any officer thereof is a party."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That would limit it beyond the present law and as to anybody else.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me a few minutes?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes. Will five minutes be sufficient?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am not antagonizing this legislation. I suppose if the Attorney General believes he needs additional power in order to carry on this business of his office, we ought to give it to him. I do agree, however, with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] that it would be very unwise to pass the bill without attaching a time limit to its operation. I think, furthermore, that it would perhaps be proper to amend the bill so as to vest in the courts discretion as to the allowance of compensation to witnesses from a very great distance. But there is a further matter to be considered. The hearings on the bill have not been printed, but I have read the typewritten report of the hearings, and the confessed general purpose of the bill is to locate proceedings in the District of Columbia. I think it is fairly clear from the provisions of existing statute that to pass the bill in its present form would not serve that purpose. The bill should be amended, and a very simple amendment will accomplish what I have in mind, so as to make it relate specifically to the District of Columbia. It is true the bill refers to "districts." That means judicial districts, and while the District of Columbia is a geographical district it is not a judicial district within the meaning of the Judicial Code. In order to clear up any doubt and surely effect the purpose in view, I am going to suggest to the gentleman that this language be added as an independent sentence at the end of the bill:

> The word "district" and the words "district court" as used herein shall be construed to include the District of Columbia and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

If that is done, no doubt will exist. If that is not done, the provision will be left open to construction upon the question being raised by counsel in the cases that will be brought here.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Will the gentleman hand his amendment to me?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I offer the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the gentleman will give the amendment to me, I will offer it. I do not want to yield the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will hand the amendment to the gentleman.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 1, line 12, after the word "shown" and the period insert a comma and the following sentence: "The word 'district' and the words 'District of Columbia' as used herein shall be construed to include the District of Columbia and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker I understood when the bill was first brought up the gentleman from Minnesota made the statement that the bill would be open to amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is, just the same as any House bill is open to amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman think it would be well to put a time limit of three years on this, so that it will not be enacted into permanent law? After the war-fraud cases are disposed of it will be a serious matter to require witnesses to cross the continent in general civil cases. I do not see any provision made for payment to witnesses outside of the usual fees. Are they to pay anything for the extra travel of a witness coming from San Francisco?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, they have got to be paid their fees; you have to tender them the money.

Mr. JONES of Texas. You do not have to tender them mileage in advance; you do have to tender them the fees for attendance, but you are not compelled to tender them the mileage. Unless they make affidavit of their inability to pay they can not collect the mileage in advance. I think the gentleman should consent to this being limited to a three-year term. I understand the Department of Justice does not object to a time limit. I would like to see them begin on these fraud cases and prosecute them to the limit. It may be that such a limitation will cause them to begin sooner, and the sooner the better.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. What form of an amendment does the gentleman suggest? It does not seem to me that this proposition is at all dangerous, and I see no reason why we should cover it up with any such amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Let me make this suggestion. After this has run along a while and it becomes a customary thing to take a witness across the country and application is made to have a witness brought from a certain place, the witness will not be there to show why he can not attend. The attorney that represents the litigant will go to the court and show that it is an important case and that here is a witness in Montana, or California, or Wyoming, or Colorado, and they would like to have him in attendance. They present one side of the case and the court makes the order and the witness is dragged clear across the continent. I am in accord with the stated purposes of the gentleman's bill, but I do think there ought to be this time limit.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have not heard any complaint in regard to these things.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman has heard complaints of witnesses being dragged great distances and forced to leave their business and attend court, and at any rate if he makes a permanent law, applying to all civil cases, he will hear many complaints.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Suppose there is an ordinary patent litigation in the district of Maryland, if this act is passed could a witness be summoned from any district in the country?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I presume so.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose a citizen of Minnesota was summoned to attend a Federal court to be held in El Paso, Tex., and he did not obey the subpœna. Suppose he was under a contempt charge and punished as seriously as a Federal judge can punish a witness who refuses to obey a summons. Does the gentleman from Minnesota want his constituents to be punished down in El Paso, Tex., for refusing to obey a civil subpœna?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, you can apply that to a person inside the district. You do not want him punished any more than you do a man outside. If the man has not got the money to go to Texas, he could show that and probably he could get out of it. The same argument applies to every summons, it makes no difference whether it is one district or another or the distance traveled. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the motion to recommit. I move to amend the motion by recommitting it to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: At the end of the second section insert the following:

This amendment shall be effective for a period of three years after the date of the passage of this bill, after which time section 876 of the existing law shall be and remain in full force and effect.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have not the amendment reduced to writing, but will do so immediately.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield while the gentleman from Texas is reducing his amendment to writing?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. As I understand the gentleman's motion to recommit and the amendment he has offered, it is simply that this extraordinary right shall exist for a period of three years, at the expiration of which time the present existing law shall be revived and be in full force and effect?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; and I have no objection to it. I do not think it is necessary, but I have no objection.

Mr. WINGO. And the gentleman will accept the amendment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will accept it.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. This is one of the bills which the gentleman embodied in his motion to suspend the rules the other day. The other bill is S. 3918, that passed the Senate on Saturday. Is it the gentleman's intention to call that up to-morrow?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I intend to call it up immediately.

Mr. WINGO. But it has just been reported.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. WINGO. I doubt if the gentleman can call it up to-day, but I may be in error about that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the motion to recommit offered by the gentleman from Texas, Mr. JONES.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JONES of Texas moves to recommit by inserting that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report the same back forthwith, with the following amendment: "This amendment shall be effective for a period of three years after the date of the passage of this act, after which section 876 as it exists in the present law shall be and remain in full force and effect."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. On that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the motion to recommit.

The amendment to the motion to recommit was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit as amended.

The motion to recommit as amended was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I report the bill back with the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill as amended.

The Clerk read the bill as amended.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, as reported is it in order to offer an amendment to this bill?

The SPEAKER. It is unless the previous question is moved.

Mr. HILL. I therefore offer the following amendment——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. HILL. Add to the last line——

The SPEAKER. Of course the gentleman from Minnesota is entitled to prior recognition if he demands it.

Mr. HILL. I thought I was recognized.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must always recognize the gentleman in charge of a bill if he desires it. The gentleman from Minnesota talked so low the Chair could not understand just exactly what he said.

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he would object to an amendment limiting it to these war-fraud cases.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I shall object because it is impossible to distinguish between classes of cases and other cases. I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the bill as amended was passed.

On motion of Mr. VOLSTEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar House bill will lie upon the table.

There was no objection.

RETIREMENT OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 11212 and ask that it be sent to conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11212, to disagree to Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11212) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman consulted with the ranking member on the committee?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I have.

Mr. WINGO. And this meets the joint wishes?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. It is the joint wish that it shall be sent to conference.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, still further reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state briefly what are the points of difference between the Senate and House?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. The House fixed the age at 60. The Senate fixed the age at 55 as the age at which the employee might be able to have the benefit of compensation under the retirement act.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As I recollect, that was the main question of the subject of debate in the House when the bill was up here.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. The bill as originally introduced contained the age of 50. The committee amended it and raised it to 60. The Senate has put the age at 55. That is the only material amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk announced the following conferees: Mr. LEHLBACH, Mr. FAIRFIELD, and Mr. BLACK.

VENUE IN CASES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3918), the Committee on the Judiciary having reported a bill substantially the same which is now on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up the bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3918) to amend section 51 of chapter 4 of the Judicial Code.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. I may be in error, but I understood the gentleman from Minnesota to say the bill was "substantially" the same. There is a "substantial" difference in the bills, and I am going to raise the question and state to the Speaker there is a very substantial point of difference, and if I am in error I desire the gentleman from Minnesota to correct me. In the House bill authority is given for joining the parties bringing suit in any district where the defendant or any one of the defendants may be found. That is not in the Senate bill. That is the most substantial change that is made in the law.

One of the substantial objections to the bill the Senate cut out. Now, would the Speaker hold that a Senate bill which changed in some other minor ways a law would be substantially the same as a House bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota stated they were practically the same.

Mr. WINGO. As I say, I challenge the accuracy of the judgment of the chairman. Page 2, lines 14 and 15, these are the words that are stricken out in the Senate, as I understand—or in any district wherein the defendants or any one of the defendants may be found.

And the Senate inserted this language—being a necessary party, or being jointly, or jointly and severally, liable.

But I do not know that the latter language would make any difference. But the substantial major change that was proposed in the law, or one of them, was left out of the Senate bill.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The entire proviso, from line 7, on page 1, down to the end is the same in the two bills. And the only change occurs in lines 13, 14, and 15. It is one of the provisions as to the place where a suit may be brought. Now, it seems to me clear that the entire purpose of this legislation is the same in both bills. Now, some years ago—quite a number of years ago—a bill was brought in for the purpose of limiting immigration, and in the Senate bill, which was put upon the Speaker's desk and was taken from the desk and considered, there were quite a number of changes; changes, it seems to me, that were very much more material than this change would be. I think it is referred to in fourth Hinds, and the Speaker can refer to it. There are quite a number of minor changes of this kind. There are three or four different provisions here as to where a suit may be brought, and we have simply stricken out one. And the object of the Speaker at that time was to advise the House as to things that would likely be brought up. Our bill advises as to all of it, every item, including the thing that was stricken out, because we put upon the calendar a bill in exactly the same form as the Senate bill, with the exception of these changes.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question? And I would like to ask the Speaker to follow me. Under the existing law it is covered by the part before the proviso:

No civil suit shall be brought in any district court against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant.

Now, the House bill proposed several substantial changes. One of them was that you might bring it where any one of the defendants might be found, or wherein the cause of action, or any part thereof, arose. In other words, that part of it with reference to being an inhabitant is now in existing law. The substantial change is to bring the suit wherever he may be found or where the action arises.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. In any district where one or more of the defendants may be found. Under the old law you can only bring it where he is an inhabitant.

Mr. WINGO. The House bill permits you to bring a suit where you may find either one of the several defendants that are joined, and it makes a substantial difference and leaves in the words—any district wherein the cause of action or any part thereof arose—whether they are inhabitants there or have been in that district.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is in both bills.

Mr. WINGO. In the Senate bill the Senate cuts out—or in any district where the defendant or any one of the defendants may be found.

If you will examine at the desk you will find the Senate adopted the amendment of its committee. Is not that true?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The amendment of the committee, on page 2, line 14, strikes out the words—or in any district wherein the defendant or any one of the defendants may be found.

The Senate cut that out, but the House bill has it in. In the minds of some people it is the one substantial change.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The only change that is in this bill is this, that you can bring the suit against two or more persons living in different districts. That is the real substantial change made in this bill. The Senate has only cut out a part of what our House bill provides for. We are asking to the extent at least that we have reported it.

Mr. WINGO. My contention is that that is a substantial point.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. And we ought to be permitted to take up the Senate bill and pass it, because it seems to me it is substantially the same thing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] moves to pass the Senate bill as it stands?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that that is in order. Speaker Reed stated that the purpose of the rule that they should be substantially the same, was in order that the House might not be taken by surprise; that a bill shall not be brought in under the guise of being the same and yet have matter in it which the House would have no reason to expect. In this case it seems to the Chair that the Senate amendment restricts instead of enlarging the operation of the bill.

Mr. WINGO. There is no doubt about that.

The SPEAKER. Therefore anybody who objected to the House bill would object less to the Senate bill. A person might oppose the House bill and support the Senate bill, but a person could hardly oppose the Senate bill without opposing more earnestly the House bill. There can therefore be no surprise, because the Senate bill does not accomplish as much as the House bill does. It seems to the Chair that it comes within the rule that it is substantially the same.

Mr. WINGO. I never did appreciate that decision of Speaker Reed, to the effect that a party to a suit should not offer a demurrer because he was not surprised by the allegation of the complaint.

I ask for the bill to be reported in full, because it is not printed.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, for the sake of accuracy, the gentleman from Minnesota referred to this bill, when he called it up, as S. 3917. Should it not be S. 3918?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3918) to amend section 51 of chapter 4 of the Judicial Code.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 51 of chapter 4 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 51. Except as provided in the five succeeding sections, no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a district court; and, except as provided in the six succeeding sections, no civil suit shall be brought in any district court against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant; but where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different States, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant: Provided, however, That any civil suit, action, or proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States, or by or on behalf of any officer of the United States authorized by law to sue, may be brought in any district whereof the defendant is an inhabitant, or where there be more than one defendant in any district whereof any one of the defendants is an inhabitant, or in any district wherein the defendant or any one of the defendants may be found, or in any district wherein the cause of action or any part thereof arose; and in any such suit, action, or proceeding process, summons, or subpœna against any defendant issued from the district court of the district wherein such suit is brought shall run in any other district, and service thereof upon any defendant may be made in any district within the United States or the territorial or insular possessions thereof in which any such defendant may be found with the same force and effect as if the same had been served within the district in which said suit, action, or proceeding is brought."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, this is the companion bill I referred to in the consideration of the other bill. Now, here is what the House understands you are proposing to do. Up to 1885, I believe it was, you permitted, I think, this kind of a proceeding by either the Government or by individual citizens. It was so abused, especially by citizens, that Congress changed the law.

Now, here is what is proposed by this bill: That the Government of the United States may join two or more citizens who live in different districts in the United States in these civil actions, these war-fraud cases, for that is what it is. You by this bill authorize the Government to bring the suit, not necessarily in the district where one or both of the defendants reside or of which they may be inhabitants, not necessarily where you may find one of the defendants, but you may bring the suit in a district where the cause of action arose. That means in these war-fraud cases that the Government intends to make this litigation take place right here, under the control of the Federal Government and under the eye of the Federal Government, in a territorial jurisdiction that is strange to the citizens who will be haled into that court, and the Government, under the bill you have just passed, will have the power to bring witnesses from Maine to California, from Florida to Oregon, and keep those citizens here in the District of Columbia.

What is the necessity for that extraordinary change in the law—a permanent change? The only plea that was offered was that in these war-fraud cases the Attorney General finds himself helpless, confessing that this Government had sunk to such a low estate that it dare not sue a citizen of Philadelphia in the State of Pennsylvania; that it dare not sue a citizen of Tennessee in the city of Nashville; that it dare not sue a citizen of San Francisco in the courts of California; but the Government of the United States can trust itself only in its own courts here. Nowhere on earth can it trust itself except within the shadow of the Capitol dome and aided by the prestige and the power and the influence that go with the seat of government. That is what you propose.

You Republicans may do as you may. We Democrats do not care to be put in the attitude of standing in the way of these war-fraud cases, but I regret that you feel the necessity, and I suggest that this be limited to one or two or three years and that it be provided for the Government's use alone in these war-fraud cases. I accept the conditions, that the Attorney General says the only way that he can do anything is in this way. I agree to give him that temporary power, although it is violative of the very spirit of our institutions. He has had one excuse after another for two years past. Now his last excuse is this. You have given him hundreds of thousands of dollars. You have given him a barn full of lawyers. He has raked and scraped the highways of the country, and you have given him a special grand jury; and now, forsooth, he says you have got to give him a special jurisdiction, in which none of the defendants reside. If that is the only way for the Attorney General to commence action, much as I regret it, we will have to stand for it, but I hope you gentlemen will limit it to a specific period of years. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] will offer an amendment limiting the time.

Another limitation, it seems to me, should be adopted, and I have drafted it in the form of an amendment, and I would like for the gentleman from Minnesota to give consideration to it. That is to provide at the end of the bill, "Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to income-tax levies, suits, and assessments." As the bill is drafted, the Government in an income-tax matter might force a man to cross the continent to defend a tax claim, thus entailing great expense and hardship upon him.

For instance, just to give a personal illustration, I have a cattleman living in my home town who sometimes ships his cattle to Kansas for fattening just before finally shipping them to market. He has other men to work for him there, and he finds he can get better work from them by paying them a percentage of the profit on the cattle rather than specific wages.

They are simply employed by him in Kansas. When they rendered income-tax reports the Government took the attitude that these men were all partners of this man, and it threatened to file proceedings at that time. Of course, if this bill passes, they would probably in such a case file suit in Kansas, where these men were working, whereas the real party at interest would live in Texas, and would be forced to go up in Kansas to defend the suit.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman think it would be proper to add to this bill a provision to the effect that it will apply only to war-fraud cases?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I thought of offering an amendment to that effect, but the department has suggested that that would raise another question of fact requiring proof on the part of the Government and would make it very difficult. That a man prosecuting the case would not only have to prove the facts ordinarily necessary to sustain his contention but would also have to prove that it was a war-fraud case, which would be a difficult thing to do. I do not want to do anything to interfere with the prosecution of war-fraud cases. On the contrary, I want them prosecuted most vigorously. Now, I think the only other cases that the United States is likely to be interested in to a very great extent, or very extensively, are income-tax cases. Then, by saying that it will not apply to them, it will not put the burden of proof on the Government to show that it was a war-fraud case. In this particular case that I speak of, an income-tax matter, there were two men in the State of Kansas working on a commission or percentage basis. They did not share in the losses. If there were any losses, he paid the losses, and he rendered a return as an individual. When it came to reviewing the income-tax claims the Government levied an additional assessment, because they claimed he was a partner with these other men. The thing ran along for about three years and finally they held that they were not partners; but if they had held that they were partners, and this act had been in force, unamended, as I have suggested here, they could sue the man in Kansas and make him go all the way to Kansas to defend the suit. I do not think that is right. I simply wish that this shall not apply to income tax levies and assessments. This would leave the full machinery of the law as at present provided for handling income-tax matters.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. In the case of the Government proceeding to collect income taxes it does so in the form of an assessment, and the process for the collection of it is placed in the hands of the marshal. The Government does not bring the suit. If the person taxed wishes to relieve himself he must invoke the law, and this statute would have no application.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Oh, no; when it comes to the final analysis, if the man refuses to pay, it practically means a suit on the part of the United States Government or on the part of the officer. The proposed statute applies not only to an action brought by the United States, but by or on behalf of any officer in any civil suit, action, or proceeding. It is not confined to any suit. It applies to "any civil suit, action, or proceeding," and even the instance the gentleman recites would be a proceeding or an action if brought by the United States or by or on behalf of any officer of the United States. It is just as broad as the earth. I think it ought to be made broad if we are going to pass this law, in order to give the Attorney General full power, and I simply went into this by the back way so as to relieve the man of the burden of proof. In other words, I want to eliminate these tax levies and assessments from the operation and purview of the bill, thus leaving the present law intact in that regard.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. In the case the gentleman cited it all hinged on the question of whether the parties were partners?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That was decided under the law of Kansas or Texas, was it not?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. In neither of those States would the parties be partners under those facts; but the gentleman realizes that in some States there are individuals who are so powerful politically and otherwise that it is hard to get a judgment against them. Now, under such a state of facts as that does not the gentleman think it would be proper for the Government to bring even income-tax suits against individuals?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Most assuredly; if a man owes a tax which he is able to pay and refuses the Government should make him pay, but I think the present law gives the Government the full power to do it in any place where it is interested. I simply do not want them to have the privilege of running all over the country and taking these men away from their homes.

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if this bill affects any suit except suits in which the Government is a party?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The Government has got to be a party in one form or another, either as a corporation directly or through an officer who brings a suit on behalf of the Government.

Mr. HILL. It would not affect any cases between private litigants?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Are there any cases now under the general law where the Government can bring a suit at the place where the cause of action arose if that place is not the residence of some one of the defendants?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have not examined those statutes lately, but under the law in reference to trusts and monopolies you can bring suits just about the same as they are authorized in this bill. The Government has been doing that for many years.

Mr. BLACK. But that jurisdiction is conferred specifically, is it not—in specific language?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; it is a general statute.

Mr. BLACK. This general statute, as I understand it, would open up the way for the Government to bring any kind of a suit upon the allegation that the cause of action in the suit arose in the jurisdiction where the Government was seeking to bring the action.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. In a criminal suit now the Government has jurisdiction to bring the action where the offense was committed, and under the trust law and under the railroad law you can bring suits in this fashion.

Mr. BLACK. Very well. Speaking of criminal cases, where the indictment alleges that the man has violated the antilottery law the Government has the choice of several jurisdictions in which to prosecute him, one where he mailed the letter and another where the letter was delivered, but that is set up specifically in the law.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Under the conspiracy law you may be able to reach him in a good many different places.

Mr. BLACK. That is probably correct; but it occurs to me that you are going a very long distance when you open up an avenue by which the Government can bring any kind of a civil suit against any citizen, and bring it upon the allegation that the cause of action arose wherever the suit is brought.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Of course, that is a provision in a great many States that you can bring the suit where the cause of action arose. Unless they get the power to do specifically what is provided for here a good many of these claims will fail completely. The Government is completely barred by this statute which we seek to amend from effectively prosecuting these parties.

Mr. BLACK. The fault that I have to find with the gentleman's amendment is that it is too all-inclusive.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is almost impossible to make it less inclusive and still reach the situation.

Mr. BLACK. It occurs to me that it is going a very long way.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 2, line 25, after the word "brought" and the period, add the following sentence: "The word 'District' and the words 'District of Columbia' as used herein shall be construed to include the District of Columbia and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 2, line 25, after the amendment just adopted, strike out the period and insert a comma and add the following: "Provided further, That this act shall be effective for a period of three years only, after which said section 51, chapter 4, as it exists in the general law shall be and remain in full force and effect."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Now, will the gentleman permit me to offer the amendment which I was talking about awhile ago?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; I am going to oppose that amendment, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe the other amendment the gentleman has suggested ought to be offered or included. It seems to me that the question whether these parties paid their income taxes or paid the excess-profits tax is a question that ought to be left open and ought to be reached if possible. My understanding is that they are going to prosecute cases of that kind. I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not object, particularly after the three years' limitation has been put in, anyway.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. VOLSTEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PINEY BRANCH ROAD.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 1066) relating to the closing of Piney Branch Road.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no right to recognize the gentleman for that.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the coal distribution in Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on coal distribution in Minnesota. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday I called the attention of the House to the report I had received to the effect that the people in the towns and villages in Kittson County, Minn., who had early last spring ordered a sufficient supply of hard coal for their needs had failed to receive any, but that right across the Canadian line they had received not only a sufficient supply for their own use but sufficient to enable them to sell at profiteering prices—$23 per ton—to the people on this side of the line. The letter I received was from Mr. P. H. Konzen, a leading citizen of Hallock, and was as follows:

HALLOCK, MINN., September 4, 1922.

Hon. H. STEENERSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to call your attention to a condition that exists here and which I think ought to be investigated with a view to ascertaining the reason for its existence.

The coal shortage, as you understand, is a serious menace at this time to this section of the country. It begins to look very doubtful that we are going to get an adequate supply to prevent great suffering here the coming winter. Many carloads that were ordered by the dealers early last spring have not been furnished yet, and we are informed can not be had owing to the miners and railway employees' strike, and stress seems to be laid on the fact that if furnished at all it will be at an excessive price. This looks to me like an attempt to bolster up the price beyond the ability of all but a few to pay. At Emerson, just across the Canadian line, they apparently have an ample supply of Pennsylvania anthracite coal, and are supplying not only their own customers on that side of the line but are selling or offering to sell to St. Vincent, Pembina, Humboldt, and other near-by American towns, and only on Saturday, last, one of the dealers was here at Hallock taking, or trying to take, orders for coal and, I understand, promised any quantity desired at $23 a ton. This coal comes to Emerson from Lake Superior ports, and the thing that is mystifying about the situation is that they are able to get it and we are not.

In the fall of 1919 we had the same situation here. We were unable to get coal here except in small quantities, from a few hundred pounds to half a ton at a time, while Emerson was supplying St. Vincent, Pembina, Humboldt, Northcote, and even some at Hallock, in any quantity desired. Now, to "a man up a tree"—and we are sadly up a tree in this section of the country regarding the coal situation—it would appear that the whole coal situation is being deliberately managed and engineered by the coal barons with a view to excessive extortion and profiteering.

Now, friend STEENERSON, if you have any explanation to offer for this situation that is compatible with honest dealing upon the part of the coal barons as well as a "square deal" to the people of this section of the country, I would be very grateful for same. If not, do you not think the situation would bear investigation?

Very sincerely yours,

P. H. KONZEN.

I immediately telegraphed Mr. Ivan Bowen, head of the Minnesota Coal Commission, as follows:

SEPTEMBER 8, 1922.

IVAN BOWEN,
Governor's Coal Commission, St. Paul, Minn.:

P. H. Konzen, of Hallock, Kittson County, Minn., is my informant and can give you the names of those offering to sell coal at Hallock and other Minnesota points from Emerson and other Canadian points.

Congressman STEENERSON.

I received this reply:

ST. PAUL, MINN., September 7, 1922.

HALVOR STEENERSON,
Washington, D. C.:

Please supply me with names of parties selling coal in question. Need this information in order to trace the coal to source before answering your inquiry. I have been receiving reports of dock company of daily shipments, and same do not disclose hard coal shipped in any considerable quantity to Canada. Very little hard coal on dock at Duluth. Will be glad to trace shipments if given dealers' or consumers' names to start on. Can not understand what law is evaded by consigning to Canada.

IVAN BOWEN.

I also notified the Federal Fuel Administration and wrote to the Interstate Commerce Commission and got this reply:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
BUREAU OF SERVICE,
Washington, September 9, 1922.

Hon. HALVOR STEENERSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of September 7, inclosing copy of a letter from Mr. P. H. Konzen, of Hallock, Minn., in regard to the movement of coal to Minnesota points:

As you know, the anthracite mines have not yet opened, but it is expected they will do so early next week. Arrangements are being made to distribute the anthracite coal in the most equitable manner possible. Special consideration will be given to the movement of such coal to the upper Lake Superior ports.

The information offered by Mr. Konzen will be placed in the hands of Mr. H. B. Spencer, Federal fuel distributor, for his information and consideration.

Very truly yours,

J. C. ROTH, Director.

The Minneapolis Journal for the 8th instant contains the following:

AMERICANS VICTIMIZED IN REBUYING COAL DIVERTED TO CANADA, IS CHARGE—KELLOGG READS LETTER ALLEGING FUEL SHIPPED TO LAKE PORTS IS SENT NORTH OF BOUNDARY AND RESOLD IN UNITED STATES AT PROFITEERING PRICE—BOWEN DISCREDITS REPORTS.

Hard coal shipped to Lake Superior ports is being diverted to Canada and resold to northern Minnesota counties at profiteering prices, according to a letter received by Representative HALVOR STEENERSON from P. H. Konzen, of Kittson County, dispatches from the Pioneer Press Washington bureau Thursday night disclosed.

Mr. Konzen's letter follows:

"At Emerson, just across the Canadian line, they apparently have an ample supply of Pennsylvania anthracite coal and are supplying not only their own customers on that side of the line but are selling, or offering to sell, to St. Vincent, Pembina, Humboldt, and other near-by American towns, and only on Saturday last one of the dealers was here at Hallock taking, or trying to take, orders for coal, and I understand promised any quantity desired at $23 a ton.

CANADIANS GET COAL.

"This coal comes to Emerson from Lake Superior ports, and the thing that is mystifying about the situation is that they are able to get it and we are not."

After calling this situation to the attention of the House and the Federal authorities, Mr. STEENERSON sent the following telegram to the governor's coal committee in St. Paul:

"Complaint has been received from citizens of Kittson County that Emerson and other points across the line in Canada are receiving large supplies of anthracite coal from Duluth and that they are now offering it for sale at $23 a ton to the near-by towns in Minnesota, such as St. Vincent, Noyes, Humboldt, and Hallock. An investigation is requested to ascertain why coal operators are supplying the Canadian points when none can be obtained for American points. Apparently it is simply a course adopted to evade the law so as to enable them to profiteer on coal. Please investigate."

Charges made in the letter were disputed by Ivan Bowen, State fuel administrator, Thursday night.

Mr. Bowen declared that he has not heard from Representative STEENERSON directly regarding the charges, but that he will investigate them as soon as any official complaint is made.

"It does not seem reasonable that any operator would ship the coal to Canada and then try to sell it to Minnesota consumers for reshipment, standing the expense of high freight rates both ways," Mr. Bowen said.

SOME CANADIAN SHIPMENTS.

"There is nothing to prevent the dealer from selling it directly on the Minnesota market at high prices, or at least holding it for high prices.

"It may be that some small Canadian dealers have foreseen the shortage in anthracite coal and have laid in a supply which they now are trying to sell at a large profit. It also is possible that this coal was shipped to them from the Duluth docks. A great deal of coal goes to Canada from the Duluth docks annually."

ORDERS ARE RECHECKED.

A recheck of the orders filled by Minnesota dock operators in the last 30 days was made by Mr. Bowen's office, but no record could be found of shipments from the head of the Lakes to Emerson or any other Canadian town. The only Canadian shipments were of coke and coal to Winnipeg, the transactions being between operators in Minnesota and their regular customers in Winnipeg.

V. E. Smart, traffic expert of the North Dakota Railroad Commission, arrived in St. Paul Thursday to represent that State on the Northwest central coal committee. Frank Milhollan, chairman of the North Dakota commission, who has been serving on the committee, will return to his offices in Bismarck.

It will be noticed that Mr. Bowen, without waiting to investigate, questions the report and tries to explain why the Canadians might have received anthracite coal from Duluth, and says "It may be that some small Canadian dealers have foreseen the shortage in anthracite coal and have laid in a supply which they now are trying to sell at a large profit. It is also possible that the coal was shipped to them from the Duluth docks. A great deal of coal goes to Canada from the Duluth dock annually." But the fact is that the dealers on the American side also have foreseen the shortage, and ordered supply in ample time but failed to get a single pound. This is distinctly stated in the Konzen letter, and also that they had the same situation there in 1919, when the town across the line in Canada got ample coal supplies not only for their own use but sufficient to enable them to sell to the people on the American side at advanced prices. Let us hope that in the future the authorities of the United States and of the State of Minnesota will see to it that this will not occur again. This American coal should first be supplied to our own people.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on railroad legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on railroad legislation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, in 1912 the railroads of this country were furnishing the best and cheapest transportation that has ever been enjoyed by the American people. That condition had been developed under Republican legislation and administration extending through a period of nearly 50 years.

In 1913 the Republicans were retired from both legislative and executive branches of our Federal Government.

Between 1915 and 1921 the Democratic Party under the leadership of Woodrow Wilson enacted legislation and adopted executive policies that resulted in the advancement of railroad rates to the highest point ever known in American history. The peak was reached in 1920. Under those conditions the people not only paid the highest transportation charges but they have also been required to pay billions of dollars into the National Treasury through taxes and loans to discharge the financial obligations which the Wilson administration imposed upon the country by guaranteeing net returns to the railroads by the Federal control act of March 21, 1918.

According to the terms of that act, that guaranty was to extend 21 months beyond the date of the issuance of a proclamation of peace with the Central Powers. That proclamation was issued July 2, 1921. Thus the McAdoo-Shallenberger guaranty carried in the Federal control act would have extended to April 2, 1923. The transportation act of 1920, however, repealed that guaranty to take effect on September 1, 1920, 31 months earlier than the termination of the McAdoo-Shallenberger guaranty, thus releasing our National Treasury from an additional liability of $1,937,000,000.

The Railroad Labor Board, appointed by President Wilson, advanced wages to their highest point in 1920, and in the same year the Interstate Commerce Commission, also appointed by President Wilson, advanced railroad rates to their highest point. Crown Prince McAdoo did not, however, increase railroad rates sufficiently to balance the increase of wages made by him during his control of the roads as director general. Consequently the Labor Board made a larger increase in wages in 1920 than would have been required if the crown prince had discharged the duties of director general properly.

The Republican administration at Washington has been gradually developing plans during recent months for the restorations of the transportation business of the country to a normal peace basis. The most serious difficulties encountered in that effort are results of the Democratic policies established under the former crown prince, William G. McAdoo.

Every dollar that has been taken from the National Treasury to pay those guaranties to the railroads was levied by the Wilson administration under the Federal control act of March 21, 1918.

Some critics assert, however, that the transportation act of 1920 (sometimes called the Esch-Cummins Act) originated and adopted the principle of guaranteeing railroad rates. That idea is wholly incorrect. The transportation act of 1920 repealed the rate guaranty of the Federal control act to take effect September 1, 1920. While my opponent, Mr. Shallenberger, voted for the guaranty provision of the Federal control act, I voted for its repeal.

When driven into a corner on this point they declare with gasping breath that section 15a of the transportation act of 1920 guarantees rates of 6 per cent net. That section came into the law as a Senate amendment. While I voted against that amendment, it does not do what the opposition alleges. I was confident that it would convey a false impression to the country and give the Interstate Commerce Commission an excuse to assume control of certain intrastate business that should be left exclusively with the State commissions. For this reason I am supporting an amendment to repeal that section. Of course all well-informed persons know that the so-called 6 per cent provision of that section expired on the 1st day of March, 1922, by virtue of its own limitations.

Under that section any road that earned 5½ per cent net was authorized to retain such net gain and apply it on stock dividends. If it earned 6 per cent net it could retain the additional one-half of 1 per cent and apply it on improvements of the road. If it earned more it was required to divide the excess over 6 per cent equally with the Federal Government. A report from the Interstate Commerce Commission, however, shows that the average net earnings of all the roads approximated 3.27 per cent annually under the terms of that section. If within that period of time a particular road earned only 1 per cent net, the Government did not make up the shortage to 5½ per cent or 6 per cent. Every road was left to carry its own shortage or net gain, as the case might be, within those limitations.

Thus it will appear that the Federal Treasury has not and will not be responsible for the payment of a single dollar to the roads under the terms of that section. These facts completely explode the propaganda that section 15a of the transportation act of 1920 guarantees net rates of 6 per cent from the National Treasury to the railroads of the country. Now let our opponents bring on another scarecrow.

All guaranties mentioned in the transportation act of 1920—sometimes called the Esch-Cummins act—are reproductions of like provisions of the Federal control act, and were thus allowed to continue for a period of six months to avoid a financial collapse and general strikes throughout the country.

The McAdoo-Shallenberger guaranties have cost the National Treasury over $2,000,000,000 already, and if the law had run its course to April 2, 1923, they would have created additional liabilities approximating $1,937,000,000.

These facts clearly demonstrate two distinct propositions, namely:

First. The principle of guaranteeing net gains to the railroads of the country was adopted and enacted into law by the Wilson administration at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States.

Second. The repeal of that legislation and the emancipation of the people of the country from those unjust burdens of taxation were secured through the wise action of the Republican Party.

Here, again, Republicanism has demonstrated its superiority over Democracy in the wise management of national affairs.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the soldiers' compensation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the soldiers' compensation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE M'NARY AMENDMENT TO THE ADJUSTED COMPENSATION BILL.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, the bill providing for adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War as it passed the House contained under title 8 a provision for land settlement which was stricken out by the Senate Committee on Finance and a provision inserted in lieu thereof under the same title which simply provides for the re-enactment of existing law giving preference right of entry to men who served in the War with Germany, and 25 per cent additional of the amount of his adjusted compensation to be used in making payment on the purchase price of the land selected or for the improvement thereof. No provision whatever is made for the reclamation of land, and inasmuch as all of the public land that is susceptible of cultivation has been exhausted the provision for land settlement in the bill as it was reported to the Senate would be of little or no benefit to the returned service men who desire to secure a farm.

There are millions of acres of arid and swamp lands throughout the country which can be reclaimed for less than one-half of the actual worth by the construction of reservoirs and dams for the watering of arid land or by the building of ditches and dikes for draining swamp land which would afford the returned service men an opportunity to secure a farm home at nominal cost.

The amendment adopted by the Senate, introduced by Senator MCNARY, which embodies the provisions of the Smith-McNary bill, which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Arid Lands in both the Senate and House, will make available to the returned service men in the near future millions of acres of the most fertile land in the country and which will enable the returned service men who secure homes thereon to become independent.

The proposed legislation provides for the creation of a fund to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the building of reclamation works, the Government to be reimbursed with interest at 5 per cent.

As an underlying capital for the building of reclamation works, Congress is asked to authorize an advance, over a period of years, of $350,000,000, which is to be appropriated from time to time upon estimates made by the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill contemplates that the Secretary of the Interior shall contract with a reclamation district, organized under State laws, having power to contract with the Government and possessing authority to issue bonds with which to pay for reclamation works, the bonds to be a general charge upon all the land within a district. The Secretary is to investigate proposed projects, one-half of the cost of the investigation to be advanced by the district or those interested in the lands of the district and one-half by the Government, which expenditure is to form a part of the cost of the project. If a project is found feasible by the Secretary he may agree to build it, conditioned upon the district depositing its bonds with the Federal Farm Loan Board in ample amount to cover the estimated cost of the project, the bonds to bear interest at a rate not exceeding 5 per cent per annum and to run for a period not exceeding 40 years. The bonds deposited with the Federal Farm Loan Board are to be held by the board until the property within the district amounts to twice the value of the outstanding bonds, when they are to be sold at private or public sale by the board, and the proceeds used to discharge the contract between the district and the Government, or placed in the national reclamation fund, to be used by appropriation in the construction of other reclamation works, as Congress may determine. It is believed by your committee that there will be a ready sale of the district bonds and that from this source a very large sum will be derived for reclamation purposes.

Before the Secretary agrees to build a project the farm unit must be fixed by him, of sufficient size for the support of a family, ranging from 20 acres in a fruit district or one adapted to intensive cultivation to one not exceeding 160 acres in a general farming section. The lands owned by private parties in excess of the farm unit are classified as excess lands; and these lands as well as all public lands within a district may be acquired by ex-service men under a preference right of entry. Ex-service men are also to be given the preference right of employment on all project works.

The pending measure does not modify or interfere with the operation of the irrigation law of 1902, although it involves the general principles of that law. The purpose is that the proposed law shall operate in a broader field than the general reclamation law and provides a plan to more rapidly reclaim the waste lands of the country.

The reclamation fund under the present irrigation law is derived from special sources, namely, the sale of public lands and royalties on coal, oil, etc., taken from public domain.

There was much opposition to the passage of the irrigation law of 1902, the operation of which has proved the wisdom of its enactment. Its opponents in the committee in a minority report to the House declared, among other things, that "the scheme was unwise and improvident"; "if workable it would add millions of acres of productive land to the national possession which would diminish the value of farm lands throughout the Union"; "it would open up new areas in the far West to compete with production on the farms in the South, East, and West"; "no sane man desirous of promoting the growth and prosperity of our whole country would consent to the placing of a great sum per annum at the disposal of one man"; "in the mad scramble for the fund, corruption would run riot"; "the Secretary of the Interior has not the time to see to the honest distribution and application of the money, and the whole matter will necessarily be left to the management of irresponsible subordinates"; "the bill is unconstitutional, as Congress has no power to provide for the irrigation of the public lands"; "the plan of turning operation of projects over to the water users is impracticable and dangerous."

None of the dire predictions of the opponents of the original irrigation bill came true.

On the contrary, the prophecy of Hon. Thomas B. Reed, the able Speaker of the House of Representatives, in a speech delivered at Pittsburgh in 1894, in which he spoke as follows, has been more than fulfilled:

> Mighty as has been our past, our resources have just been touched upon and there is wealth beyond the Mississippi which in the not distant future will astonish even the dwellers on the shores of Lake Michigan. From the time my eyes first rested on the great uncultivated plains which lie between the Mississippi and the Pacific Ocean my waking dreams have been filled with visions of incalculable wealth. The touch of living water will bring life to those voiceless deserts. Their wealth can only produce wealth and man, single and alone, might as well try to subdue the Himalayas as to cope with these wastes, but the hand of united and associated men is already reaching forth to grasp the great results.
> The same power which wastes millions on the Mississippi can be utilized to make the desert blossom with the homes of men for whom, and for all of us, the now blighted soil will bring forth the fruit of the Garden of Eden.

The operation of that law has demonstrated that public money can be judiciously expended and that even subordinates of a department can be relied upon to act honestly and with skill.

The best possible argument in favor of the continuance and enlargement of the Government's plan to make land available for settlement is afforded by the splendid record of the United States Reclamation Service since its organization in 1902. During the 20 years the service has been in operation much has been accomplished in reclamation of the arid lands and in increasing the food supply and the national wealth.

Twenty-six projects have been undertaken in 16 different States and many of them have been completed. Nearly 2,000,000 acres of land have been placed under a permanent water supply and nearly 1,000,000 additional acres will soon be supplied with water from storage reservoirs. Forty thousand families have established homes on these lands and are happy and prosperous. Cities and towns have sprung up on these projects, and the national wealth created amounts to about $600,000,000, nearly five times the amount expended by the Government in reclamation work. The reclamation fund which is represented by the receipts from sales of public land, leases, and repayment charges is far inadequate. Nearly $50,000,000 is required to complete projects now under way and $100,000,000 to construct new projects which have been approved.

Many people who have not investigated the importance to the whole country of reclaiming the waste lands appear to regard the question as a local one, and that the only people benefited are those who may make homes on the land or those living in the section of the country where the land is reclaimed. As a matter of fact, every section of the country is benefited by land reclamation. Every acre of waste land that is placed under cultivation creates a market for merchandise, building material, staple food products, clothing, and every other kind of manufactured article which generally come from the central and eastern sections of the country.

The adoption of a broad and comprehensive plan to reclaim the waste lands of the country would go far toward giving work to those out of employment in construction work on projects, or by reason of the need of labor on account of the increased demand for commodities manufactured in the industrial centers.

While the work of the Reclamation Service is of the highest order, those who have carried it forward have labored under many trying circumstances. At no time have there been sufficient funds with which to promptly complete and put into operation the irrigation projects undertaken; and this want of funds has entailed a very heavy carrying charge. And even now, for want of funds to complete projects, some of the works in which much money has been expended are unused.

There has been no disposition in the West to wholly rely upon the Federal Government for funds with which to reclaim lands. Fifteen million acres of arid land have been reclaimed in the public-land States, of which amount the Federal Government has reclaimed less than one-fifth. In the last 10 years, according to official census, the amount of arid land reclaimed by private enterprise is over 3,000,000 acres.

There is a significant factor favorably affecting the general welfare in irrigated districts which is practically absent in farming communities in humid sections. Sir William Willcocks, formerly director general of reservoir studies in Egypt and consulting engineer to the Turkish Government in Mesopotamia, outlined this factor, as follows:

> The lessons of order and method are taught so thoroughly by irrigation that it is not to be surprised at that all the ancient civilizations of the world had their birth in the irrigated valleys of the great Old World rivers. Uncivilized men could live in woods and partially civilized ones on desert oases, but to exist in the country needing irrigation, men had to be disciplined and amenable to laws and regulations. When hundreds of thousands of families had at first to learn the laws of nature, then apply them, and then live in accord with one another in order to insure the irrigation and drainage of their individual holdings, true civilization took its birth.

Is it too much to assert that cooperative marketing in the far West, which the Middle West is now copying, is traceable in no small degree to the necessarily cooperative efforts of irrigationists? And who can believe that in the absence of cooperative marketing the superior pack of western fruits and western products would ever have taken place, with the result that these products, in spite of distance from the market and excessive freight rates, successfully compete with what is produced under more favorable conditions?

It may be said that now is an inopportune time in which to press legislation the result of which will be the creation of more farms. The progressive thought of the world has always acted upon the maxim "Competition is the life of trade." Running counter to this has been the voice of those who have had an abiding faith in monopoly, either partial or complete.

A survey of the activities of the Caucasian race for the hundred years immediately prior to the World War may not be amiss. It may be that we and those who follow us must look back to this hundred years as the Golden Age, the acme of human achievement. During this period the Caucasian race overran and reduced to private ownership a greater area than ever before in any 1,000 years of its history. During this time this race increased in numbers more rapidly than ever before in its existence. Strange indeed, as hundreds of millions of acres of lands in different parts of the world came under the plow, farm products not only increased in value but land values had a corresponding rise. In the United States, from 1860 to 1900, over 400,000,000 acres of land of the public domain fell into private ownership, or at a rate of 10,000,000 acres per year; and from 1875 to 1914 there was almost a continuous rise in values in every field of activity, general farm values in the United States per acre being as follows:

1860	16.35
1870	18.26
1880	19.02
1890	21.31
1900	19.82
1910	39.60

We hear a great deal about the exodus from the farm to the city, and unthoughtfully we say it is social. In the main it is not social; it is economic, and it always has been economic. We must not overlook the fact that in the growth and development of nations there has always been three stages—agriculture, manufacturing, and commerce. No new country was ever settled through either manufacturing or commerce. Pioneers first till the soil. As the population increases and produces a surplus of food and raw material, the excess laborers enter into manufacturing, the products of which are at first consumed locally and later the excess enters outside trade; thus a commerce is developed.

It would be folly to account for the movement of the Caucasian race into Australasia, South and North America by reason of a mania to leave the homeland. Migration has always been an element in human nature more developed in some races than in others. What gave it impetus with the white man was first his ability to navigate the seven seas and later the invention of the steam engine. The building of the railroads practically revolutionized economic conditions. Cheap transportation had the effect of taking manufacturing away from the farm and placing it at centers having advantages in competitive transportation facilities. It was soon discovered that plows could be made more cheaply at some centrally located competitive point than on the farm or at the four corners; and the same was found true in regard to shoes, which the farmer had been in the habit of making for members of his family; and such was the case as to cloth and the making of garments, which the housewife had been accustomed to weave and fashion for those under her care. In fact, it became apparent that the farmer and his wife and the members of the household could be more profitably employed in agricultural pursuits than in manufacturing at home. As manufacturing ceased on the farm it went to rail centers, and in going there it released men and women from the farm and they found employment at the manufacturing points. Not only this, but as transportation developed to carry the raw material from the farm to the factory and the manufactured articles from the factory to the consumer, a large number became engaged in transportation itself.

But inventive genius was not confined to transportation and communication. It reached into other fields. In a large way it reached the farm. There was a time when people spoke of the farmer and his tools. To-day it is the farmer and his machinery. By the use of machinery the farmer of to-day produces many times more than the farmer of 50 years ago, and this in turn has released laborers from the farm, and they have gone to the city for profitable employment. Had they remained upon the farm and been idlers or only partially employed, farming would present a sorry spectacle. Had they remained upon the farm and all labored assiduously, it stands to reason that there would be such a surplus of farm products that their value would be almost nil.

What shall be our national policy from now on? Shall we rely upon the betterment of the land under plow, or reclaim virgin sections? Is there not grave danger in departing from a policy which has been so successfully pursued during the last 100 years? In looking over the industrial statistics of our country we find that the products of our farms have been a wonderful factor in the creation of our national wealth. This is well stated by the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture in his report of 1912, wherein he says:

> During the last 16 years the wealth production on farms, according to the census items, reached the grand total of more than $105,000,000,000. This stream of wealth has poured out of the farmer's horn of plenty, and in 16 years has equaled about three-fourths of the present national wealth.

If we are not to reclaim our waste lands, we must, in order that our agricultural production shall keep abreast of agricultural production elsewhere, rely upon a more intensive farming of our present cultivated areas. Intensive cultivation of the soil always meant and always will mean the use of a large amount of manual labor. It almost excludes the idea of the use of machinery. In the thickly settled portions of Europe, as well as those of Asia and Africa, where intensive cultivation is practiced, there is almost a total exclusion of machinery upon the farm, and the efforts of the husbandman are largely directed to the elimination of weeds in the growing crops; and gardening as practiced in those sections is unheard of where machinery is used for harvesting. If we limit ourselves to more intensive farming, we may rest assured that such will not be the practice in the still-to-be-reclaimed areas of South America, Siberia, Canada, and Australasia. In those sections it is probable that farm machinery will be more extensively used in the future than in the past, and that cereals and other farm products from these localities will, if we lag, take the place of ours in the markets of the world.

Some of our farmers seem to be happy in the thought that when our farms shall not yield all the food that the Nation consumes they, in the nature of things, will receive more for their products. The fallacy of this idea has been demonstrated several times in the history of the world. Through its adoption Grecian husbandry failed and the glory of the State departed. Its perfect absurdity was demonstrated in Italy when Rome became the mistress of the world. The Romans insisted that they must have cheap food. The farmers of Italy did not produce it. Rome went abroad for her supplies, and agriculture in Italy decayed. England had her corn laws. The artisans and poor of the cities cried out against them. It was asserted that England's hope was in manufacturing, not farming. The corn laws were repealed; manufacturing thrived and agriculture dwindled.

In the last few years in the United States the value of manufactured articles has far outreached the value of agricultural products. Should manufacturing reach a stage where it must depend upon raw material—not the output of mines—and food products from abroad, who can doubt but that our national policy will be to foster manufacturing rather than agriculture? Thus, is it not wise to add to the number of our farms and by degrees increase the productivity of the old ones, to the end that at all times there shall be a surplus of farm products as well as a surplus of manufactured articles to enter into our foreign trade? There is no necessity of changing from the old order of things, that there may be a surplus in many lines for export. There is to-day under plow in the United States in the neighborhood of 400,000,000 acres of land. There are yet susceptible of reclamation some 20,000,000 acres of arid and semiarid land, 80,000,000 acres of swamp land, and 200,000,000 acres of cut-over land, or a total of 300,000,000 acres. The arid and semiarid lands are very inviting in character. They have never been leached of their plant-life elements. When moistened they readily give up their properties to vegetation. They lack only one ingredient to a perfect agricultural soil. They are deficient in nitrogen. This, however, can be readily supplied by the growing of legumes. Swamp lands in the main are wonderfully productive when drained, for they have received the fertilizing properties of the centuries. If we were to place on an acre of sterile land the nutritive elements contained in an acre of arid land or an acre of swamp land, it would probably cost over $2,000. Thus, in the reclamation of the arid and swamp lands within the country we will tap a reservoir of wealth which is almost inexhaustible.

As communication and transportation have revolutionized industrial conditions and have made all sections of our country interdependent, and what aids one district necessarily aids all, no land which is now waste can be put into a state of productivity without exciting activity in a multitude of places. Even to build an irrigation or drainage ditch, a dike, or a reservor means the utilization of manufactured articles gathered from a great radius; and every agricultural community under present conditions draws from the manufacturing centers large quantities of products essential to the life and well-being of the farmer.

There are attached hereto data showing the extent to which the people of the reclaimed areas of the West are purchasers of articles which are not produced within such districts and are supplied in a large measure even by industrial plants several thousand miles distant.

We have spoken of the danger of manufacturing far exceeding in importance agriculture. Our political institutions are more likely to be perpetuated if a proper balance shall be maintained between manufacturing and agriculture, and let foreign commerce be a feature of each of these. The surest way of maintaining a proper relationship between manufacturing and agriculture is to increase the number of farms, and this necessarily means the reclamation of waste lands.

While the movement from the farm to the city has been economic, it involves some very serious social problems affecting the national life. When the farm was not only the seat of agriculture but of manufacturing, the members of the family as a rule remained at home until marriage separated them from the parental roof, and when this took place it only meant the establishment of other homes. There is no escaping the conclusion that not only is the family unit essential to farm life but it is here that we find it at its best, and the family in its own home is the sheet anchor of the ship of state. Those leaving the farm for the city are as a rule single people of both sexes, and too often in reaching and engaging in the activities of the city they find that the marriage state is, individually considered, less essential and less desirable than in the country, and too often a vicarious existence is the result. It is in the city rather than in the country that the girl finds employment which either postpones or defeats her marriage, and each single woman means a single man, and from this source springs much social evil and much crime, it being estimated that a very large per cent of all crime in the United States is traceable to unmarried adults. Occupation prior to commitment was reported for 374,988 male prisoners and juvenile delinquents committed in 1910, as shown by the Federal census, of which number only 28,009 were farmers and farm laborers. The necessity of rural life and the cultivation of the soil, in the growth and welfare of a nation, have been often voiced by far-seeing men, and we quote from a recent article by O. C. Stine, Office of Farm Management, United States Department of Agriculture:

Webster said: "Let us never forget that the cultivation of the earth is the most important labor of man." By the demoralization of rural life Greece was deprived of the means of rejuvenating her city life. The farmers constituted the most prolific portion of her population, but the Hellenic element was almost entirely removed from the farms. In the city the population declined in virility. Polybius tells us that in his time Greece was suffering childlessness and general depopulation, the cities were becoming deserted, and the fields were not yielding, though they had known neither war nor plague. The people became greedy idlers. They did not care any longer to marry; if they did marry they did not care to bring up more than one or two children that they might inherit the individual fortune of their parents. The leading cities of Greece became absolutely dependent upon foreign supplies of food. Cato thought highly of a man engaged in commerce, but he says: "It is from the tillage of the soil that spring the best citizens and staunchest soldiers." Varro, in his introduction to a book on live-stock husbandry, writes: "Those great men, our ancestors, did well to esteem the Romans who lived in the country above those who dwelt in town." When the barbarians from the north invaded Rome they found but a feeble resistance from the State which was dying of dry rot through the disintegration of its agricultural life. The dawn of our modern civilization came with the revival of commerce from the surplus of the products of a reorganized agriculture. Macaulay, writing to an American correspondent 50 years ago, points out in a striking way the problems that would be faced by this country when our free land was exhausted. He says: "As long as you have a boundless extent of fertile and unoccupied land your laboring population will be found more at ease than the laboring population of the Old World; but the time will come when wages will be as low and will fluctuate as much with you as they do with us. Then your institutions will be brought to the test. Distress everywhere makes the laborers mutinous and discontented and inclines them to listen with eagerness to agitators who tell them that it is a monstrous iniquity that one man should have a million and another can not get a full meal. * * * The day will come when multitudes of people, none of whom has had more than half a breakfast or expects to have more than half a dinner, will choose a legislature. Is it possible to doubt what sort of legislature will be chosen? There will be, I fear, spoliation. The spoliation will increase the distress; the distress will produce fresh spoliation. Either civilization or liberty will perish. Either some Caesar or Napoleon will seize the reins of government with a strong hand, or your Republic will be as fearfully plundered and laid waste by barbarians in the twentieth century as the Roman Empire in the fifth." The importance of the country as a training ground for citizens can not be overestimated. Former President Roosevelt has said: "If there is one lesson taught by history it is that the permanent greatness of any State must ultimately depend more upon the character of its country population than upon anything else. No growth of cities, no growth of wealth, can make up for a loss in either the number or the character of the farming population." The rural birth rate of native Americans is about 40 per cent higher than the urban. Farm people marry younger than urban people. The farm home consequently has a longer life than the city home. The family is the corner stone of civilization and on the farm the family forms a stronger unit than anywhere else. Professor Warren, of Cornell University, has well said, "No higher civilization can endure that is not based on the type of citizenship on the farms." To quote James J. Hill: "It is as clear as any future event can be that the farm is the only hope of our national salvation." Abraham Lincoln, in his address to Wisconsin farmers, said, "Let us hope, rather, that by the best cultivation of the physical world, beneath and around us, and the intellectual and moral world within us, we shall secure an individual, social, and political prosperity and happiness, whose courage shall be onward and upward, and which, while the earth endures, shall not pass away."

The Aryans were the tillers of the soil. They had fixed habitations; they recognized individual rights in property, which necessitated law, order, and government. To them, and to them only, are we able to trace civilization.

We have inherited from the World War many grave problems. At the present hour the number of unemployed is between three and four million, many of whom are ex-service men. There is no economy in unemployment. Four million men out of useful employment means a tremendous national loss. If there is any way of restoring these men to useful pursuits, it should be done. Putting them to work on internal improvements, particularly in the reclamation of waste lands, will excite activity to a wonderful degree. It will cost our people as a whole less to furnish them employment than it will to support them in idleness. There is no possible way in which the lands to be reclaimed will immediately produce crops to increase the surplus of farm products already within our country.

We should not be unduly alarmed over the present surplus of farm products in the United States. As has well been said by Dr. E. D. Ball, director of scientific work, United States Department of Agriculture:

If some one possessed a magic wand that would restore the world to normal conditions we would suddenly be confronted with the fact that there is no overproduction; that what the world is suffering from is underconsumption. There is not enough food in the world at present to provide for normal consumption. If buying power could be restored to-morrow the surpluses would almost instantly disappear.

And he further states:

The peak of agricultural production per capita of population in the United States was passed in 1898, nearly a quarter of a century ago. Agricultural production almost kept pace with the populational increase for some little time after that date, but in the last decade it has steadily and even more rapidly fallen. Statisticians have estimated that our population at the close of this century will be more than 220,000,000, and have placed the probable time in which we shall begin to import the staple foods at from 15 to 30 or more years. Even if it should turn out to be the longer period, it is time we should be considering the problem not only from the national standpoint but from its effect on agriculture.

The reclamation of land by aid of the Federal Government is not a new idea. Wherever seriously considered it has been indorsed by thoughtful men. The platforms of the two national parties in the last campaign declared in favor of a Federal system of reclamation, and both candidates advocated such a policy. The Chamber of Commerce of the United States at its annual meeting at Atlantic City in July last, by unanimous vote of the whole convention of some 3,000 delegates, indorsed land settlement in aid of the war veterans. Within the last few days this chamber of commerce, through a referendum to its members—these being the leading commercial manufacturing organizations of our country—by over a two-thirds vote indorsed land settlement for soldiers. President Harding, faithful to his pre-election declarations, in his annual message to Congress strongly urged national aid for reclamation, and lately he restated his position before the farmers' conference. Organized labor is back of this great movement. Those in opposition seem to be limited to a class who fear competition; and, strangest of all, competition not foreign, but at home.

The venture of the Federal Government in 1902 into the irrigation field has been highly beneficial. The proposal to take a further step and aid in the reclamation of the swamp lands of our country is not a plunge into the dark, neither is it a character of work which has been shunned by foreign nations. Putting money into reclamation projects in our country is far less hazardous than it was for the British Empire to put millions of money into Egypt, India, and Mesopotamia in the reclamation of land there. Most European Governments have found it profitable to reclaim their waste areas.

The law under consideration is not paternalistic. It is not asking the Government to do that which can be done by the individual or group of individuals. The work is of such character and magnitude that it can only be successfully prosecuted through some governmental agency.

So far as the public-land States of the West are concerned, they find themselves financially handicapped through the withdrawals from sale and settlement of extensive areas of public land rich in timber, coal, oil, shale, phosphate, and other minerals. The Secretary of the Interior in his late report has called attention to the vast wealth of the West and of Alaska withdrawn by the Federal Government from settlement or sale for the benefit of future generations, which has an intrinsic value of $150,000,000,000. None of this vast wealth bears any part of the expense of government of those States, and in the nature of things can not be pledged by the citizenship of those States to raise money for reclamation purposes. The people of the older States of the Union have no conception of this handicap upon western development.

Looking at our Nation as a whole, we can not cast aside the necessities of the South. There is an industrial plight there which should be remedied by Federal cooperation. The reclaiming of the great swamp districts, particularly those skirting the Atlantic Ocean from New Jersey to the southern point of Florida and then following the Gulf into Texas, is an improvement of such magnitude as to be national in character. It is only by reclamation of large tracts that the mosquito can be eradicated and malaria successfully combated. Their settlement will mean the social and political evolution of the South, and it will tend to harmonize political differences.

When our swamp and dry lands are reclaimed we will have a country far more attractive, productive, and wealthy than at the present time, and we will have a better distributed and more homogeneous people. It is the belief of your committee, based upon what has been accomplished by the present irrigation law, that in a short time after a reclamation project has been built the land within the district and the improvements thereon will have a value several times as great as the construction cost; consequently, there should be a ready sale of district bonds and a rapid turnover of the amount invested. If such proves true, it should not be many years before the dry and swamp land worth while would be reclaimed and occupied by millions of prosperous and contented citizens.

If such a great work can be accomplished it will be a crowning achievement in our national life.

This bill under consideration makes provision for service men and women. In the past those who have served us in war have been remembered in the allotment of land from the public domain. The records of our Government show that some 75,000,000 acres of the public domain have been allotted to soldiers and sailors of wars prior to our entering into the World War. If the veterans of our late war are to receive land for homes, it must first be reclaimed, for there is scarcely a tract left for the public domain which would justify a soldier in endeavoring to make his home upon it. Already upward of 200,000 ex-service men have signified a desire to acquire land for a home. Should this bill be enacted into law and operate as your committee believes it will there will, in a reasonable length of time, be enough land reclaimed to accommodate all soldiers who may wish to become agriculturists.

Acknowledgment is hereby made to thoughts expressed in an article written by John E. Thompson, Esq., on the "Away-from-the-farm movement."

The following statistics with reference to two reclamation projects in the western country should convince the most skeptical that the benefits of the reclamation of waste lands are national in their scope and not local.

The Yakima project in Washington is a fair example of what reclamation has accomplished. This project is about 10 years old. The city of Yakima, in the center of the project, contains a population of nearly 20,000. Over 300,000 acres of the irrigated land are tributary to the city, the trade of which is dependent almost entirely upon the products of the soil, with the exception of one lumber mill.

It is important that consideration should be given to the last item in the above table, that of insurance. Practically all of the insurance companies operating in this section have their headquarters in the East, and several million dollars leave this valley each year to build up eastern industry and commerce, all of which would be impossible were it not for irrigation. As a matter of fact, all of the aggregate productive wealth of this section, now amounting to above $40,000,000 annually, with the exception of lumber as above stated, is the product of water scientifically applied to rich volcanic ash soil. The annual total lumber output does not exceed $1,500,000.

BOISE PROJECT, IDAHO.

Boise, the capital of the State, is a city of less than 25,000 people, and is near the center of the project. The origin of many commodities which the Boise merchants receive in carload lots per annum clearly demonstrates the interdependence of far-separated districts in practically every State in the Union and indicates the market developed in one city on the Boise project is largely the result of reclamation.

The foregoing data is but an index of what the manufacturers of the East and South sell to the irrigationists who are engaged in intensively farming irrigated land in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast States. There are 20,000,000 acres of arid lands yet to be reclaimed.

For the past 100 years the best thought and energy of the world have been devoted to the building up of an industrial system which now seems top-heavy. It is the view of the most thoughtful minds in the world to-day that sweeping changes of far-reaching effect will have to be made in our present system in order to prevent its collapse. There are few who fail to realize the menace to our national security which results from the steadily increasing congestion of humanity in our large centers of population. Without doubt our social and economic stability could be most readily strengthened by the development of our latent land resources, converting them into living means of production. The most valuable of all our undeveloped resources is the vast acreage of now unproductive land. Its development and settlement would establish the economic independence of hundreds of thousands of our citizens, whose stability and character would be assured by their foothold on the soil.

Phoenix, Ariz., is served by two railroads—the Santa Fe and the Southern Pacific. The latter road has furnished a statement showing that the number of carloads of manufactured products received at Phoenix over its line for the calendar year 1920 amounted to 2,492 cars from Maine, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, and many other States. For the same year, over the same road, there were received at Phoenix manufactured products in less than carloads a total tonnage of 5,734 tons, in which the manufacturing States east of the Mississippi River shared in large part. The tables furnished by the Southern Pacific Railroad as to carload and less-than-carload lots of manufactured products received at Mesa, a city only a short distance from Phoenix, shows a volume not much less than that of Phoenix.

The Union Pacific system has furnished interesting data with reference to the number of cars of live stock and tons of commodities shipped from towns located on the Twin Falls irrigation tract in southern Idaho, one of the most successful in the entire West, and which prior to 1905 was a great expanse of desert country on which there lived but a few hundred people.

During the year 1921 there were shipped from the Twin Falls project 822 carloads of stock, 15,617 tons of potatoes, 78,672 tons of wheat and flour, 4,822 tons of fruit, and 5,905 tons of hay and straw.

There were received on this tract during the year 1921, 166 tons of automobiles, 278 tons of agricultural implements, 13,210 tons of building material, and 8,646 tons of merchandise, all of which came from the industrial centers in the central and eastern part of the United States.

Number of tons of specified commodities and the total tons of all commodities; also the number of cars of live stock forwarded, and the number of tons of specified commodities and total tons of all commodities received at stations on branch lines south of Minidoka and east of Bliss, during the year 1921.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the work of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the work of the Sixty-seventh Congress. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles:

H. R. 12493. An act amending the act of June 30, 1922, making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes;

H. R. 2866. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent to parties named herein certain lands in Louisiana;

H. R. 10361. An act authorizing the sale and patent of certain alleged public lands in Louisiana;

H. R. 1948. An act for the relief of Virgil O. McWhorter;

H. R. 1274. An act for the relief of Maude H. Mosher;

H. R. 11901. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River to connect the city of Benwood, W. Va., and the city of Bellaire, Ohio; and

H. R. 11590. An act to amend sections 34 and 40 of the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

S. 3618. An act to amend the Judicial Code in reference to appeals and writs of error;

S. 2199. An act to provide for the marking of anchorage grounds in waters of the United States;

S. 2460. An act to extend the provisions of section 18a of an act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stats., p. 437), to certain lands in Utah;

S. 3659. An act to create the White House police force, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 23. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to grant revocable licenses for the quarrying and removal of stone from the Mariveles Military Reservation, P. I.; and

S. J. Res. 156. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to erect and maintain a hotel upon the Fort Monroe Military Reservation in Virginia.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. ARENTZ (at the request of Mr. CABLE), on account of important business.

To Mr. VINSON, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MCPHERSON, indefinitely, on account of severe illness in his family.

To Mr. ROSSDALE (at the request of Mr. SIEGEL), for five days, on account of investigation of Veterans' Hospital No. 81.

To Mr. LINTHICUM, for to-day, on account of important business.

WORLD POULTRY CONGRESS.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 2251) authorizing an appropriation for the World's Poultry Congress be laid on the table. The bill provides for exhibits at the World's Poultry Congress to be held at The Hague, Holland, on September 6 to 13, 1921.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman's purpose is merely to clear the calendar?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Pending that will the gentleman indicate as far as he can what the program is for to-morrow.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am unable to say what will be up to-morrow. There will be a session of the House and matters of some importance may come up.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What does the gentleman say will be before the House on Wednesday?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have no doubt that the conference report on the tariff bill will be before the House on Wednesday.

HOUSE BILL 12356 LAID ON THE TABLE.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill H. R. 12356, a similar bill to S. 3918, just passed, will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, September 12, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12436) granting a pension to James McDonough, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, September 12, 1922.

(Legislative day of Monday, September 11, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edge	McCumber	Sheppard
Ball	Fletcher	McLean	Shields
Borah	France	McNary	Simmons
Broussard	Glass	Moses	Smoot
Calder	Gooding	Nelson	Sterling
Cameron	Hale	New	Sutherland
Capper	Harreld	Nicholson	Swanson
Colt	Harrison	Oddie	Trammell
Culberson	Heflin	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Warren
Curtis	Kellogg	Ransdell	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	King	Rawson	Watson, Ind.
du Pont	McCormick	Robinson	Willis

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is detained by reason of illness in his family.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH.]

Mr. KING. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Add at the end of the joint resolution a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That to expedite the completion of Government reclamation projects heretofore begun and extensions thereof and to take up new projects under the national irrigation law, being the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. p. 388), and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, upon request of the Secretary of the Interior, to transfer the same or any part thereof from time to time to the credit of the reclamation fund created under the said act of June 17, 1902.

The said sum of $20,000,000, or so much thereof as shall have been transferred to the reclamation fund, shall be reimbursed to the general funds of the Treasury by transferring annually the sum of $1,000,000 from the reclamation fund to the general funds of the Treasury, beginning July 1, 1940.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, during the debate last evening some question arose as to credits which had been extended to other nations upon the same basis as the credit to the Liberian Government. I stated at the time that I was of the opinion that a number of credits had been extended and that the moral obligation, so called, obtained with reference to those credits the same as to the Liberian credit. I find upon examining the record that there was a credit extended to Russia of $450,000,000.

Mr. STERLING. To what record does the Senator refer?

Mr. BORAH. I am examining the hearings before the House Committee on Expenditures in the State Department and reading from the testimony of Mr. Polk, Secretary of State.

Mr. STERLING. I wonder why it is that the Secretary of the Treasury in two reports has stated that a credit of only $187,000,000 was extended.

Mr. BORAH. There were some withdrawals afterwards which I presume justified the Secretary of the Treasury in stating what he did, but those withdrawals were no different from the withdrawal under the Liberian loan.

Mr. STERLING. The question then is, What was the net credit given to that Government?

Mr. BORAH. Then, the fact is that there was no credit given to Liberia beyond the $26,000 to enable the Liberian representatives to take a junketing trip to Paris.

According to Mr. Polk, this was a complete Treasury statement. The statement referred to was set out in the hearings, and it discloses the following facts: Credits established, May 16, 1917, $100,000,000; May 17, 1917, $75,000,000; August 23, 1917, $100,000,000; October 12, 1917, $50,000,000; all of which make $325,000,000.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator is reading the credits extended to Russia?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. Then, on page 19 of those hearings, Mr. MCFADDEN said:

Mr. Polk, as I understand, the total credits established amounted to $450,000,000?
Mr. POLK. Yes.
Mr. MCFADDEN. And out of that we paid in money how much?
Mr. POLK. $187,729,750.
Mr. MCFADDEN. That was the amount of the advances in cash by this Government to Russia?
Mr. POLK. Yes, sir.
Mr. MCFADDEN. The balance of the credits have been turned back?
Mr. POLK. Turned back into the Treasury.
Mr. MCFADDEN. You say that $187,000,000 was paid to Russia?
Mr. POLK. It was paid in installments, as I have them here, from July 6, 1917—

And so forth.

What took place was precisely the same thing that took place in the instance of Liberia. At a certain time Russia was notified that the credits were withdrawn, as in this case Liberia was notified that the credits were withdrawn; but Liberia was notified that the credits were withdrawn before Liberia had complied with the conditions which were prerequisite to the obtaining of the loan.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, there is this difference between the two reports of the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to Liberia and Russia, and especially is the report different in regard to Liberia: The first report of the Secretary of the Treasury, that of 1920, gives the entire credit established for Liberia, namely, $5,000,000, with a withdrawal, I think, then of $26,000; but the two reports give the credit established for Russia as being $187,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that is true so far as the reports are concerned; but in order to know what was done we must go back to the correspondence, and the correspondence of the Secretary of State was to the effect that Liberia had a credit of $5,000,000 provided she complied with certain conditions. Those conditions were specified in the notice of the credit, but the conditions were not complied with. Later, however, the entire credit was withdrawn. So, Mr. President, while a greater space of time was occupied in the transaction as to Liberia, the transaction was precisely similar in the one case as in the other.

Mr. President, I also find from the record, according to my calculation, that the following credits were made: To Czechoslovakia of $61,000,000, that is in excess of any amounts paid. These credits all rest upon the same moral obligation at the time that the war ceased. Nobody regarded them as binding upon the Government after the cessation of war except with reference to Liberia, and there different circumstances and conditions arose, matters to which we shall come later. A credit was due to Czechoslovakia of $61,000,000; to Serbia of $14,000,000; to England still of $330,000,000; to Rumania of $20,000,000; to Italy of $45,000,000; and to Greece of $48,000,000. The nations named had been notified that they had those credits in excess of the amounts drawn. Any claim to those credits, according to the figures which I have given here, if my investigation of the record be accurate and correct, rests precisely upon the same basis as the claim of Liberia, except that the basis of the Liberian loan is weaker by reason of the fact that Liberia never did comply with the conditions which are prerequisite, while these other nations did comply and drew a part of their credit and ceased to draw only when the war ended; in other words, it was understood that the credits were extended during the progress of the war, and that no nation had any right to claim the excess amount after the war had closed. The only exception which is attempted to be made is in regard to Liberia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. If there is a moral obligation to extend this credit now to Liberia, is there not a moral obligation to extend the credits which they have not drawn and to respect the credits which have not been drawn as to Greece and other nations?

Mr. BORAH. A precisely similar situation, as I understand, existed.

Mr. KING. Have we not declared by some affirmative action that none of these unexhausted credits should be respected; in other words, that no further payments should be made by the Treasury to any of the governments as to which it was urged there was a moral obligation to extend their credits?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know whether the Senate has passed a resolution in reference to this matter; but I think when the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Houston, was before the Committee on the Judiciary when this matter was under investigation, and was asked if he proposed to recognize any of these credits, he said that he did not, and gave the committee the assurance that no advances to these nations would be made in the future.

Mr. KING. I think, perhaps, the Senator from Idaho is correct in his statement. I recall the matter was before the Judiciary Committee, and, upon that assurance, some of us who had contemplated introducing a resolution that would prohibit any further payments did not press it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand the department held that no further advances could be made except by the sanction of Congress.

Mr. BORAH. Yes. The same moral obligation, however, is there upon which to base the action of Congress if any action is to be had.

Mr. President, there was another feature of this question which arose on yesterday as to which I desire to read part of an editorial from the New York Nation. I presume if there is any one journal in the United States which may be credited with having advocated the cause of the colored man, in season and out of season, and upon all occasions, it is that journal. The proposed loan is supposed to be for the benefit of the people of Liberia, but I do not think that it will benefit the masses of the people of Liberia at all. I read a portion of an editorial from the New York Nation:

> This arrangement, signed at Washington last October by Mr. Hughes and by plenary commissioners of the Liberian Republic, makes Liberia in fact a servile American colony, ruled by a financial commissioner to be named by the President of the United States. This financial commissioner will collect and disburse all Liberian revenues; he will determine the size of the Liberian police and military force, which will be commanded by American Army officers; he will have power to veto any item in the Liberian budget, to order any financial legislation passed which he may desire, to dismiss any employee of the Liberian customs, tax, or treasury services at will; he will limit the annual expenditures of Liberia to a total of $560,000, almost a fifth of which, $109,700, must go to pay the salaries of 22 American officials, and more for their expenses. He will himself receive a salary 25 per cent larger than that received by the Secretary of State of the United States. In short, he will be the well-paid dictator of Liberia, subject to no Liberian control and only in a very distant manner to control by the United States.
> Incidentally one of his definite instructions will be to apply a part of the $5,000,000 "lent" from the Treasury of the United States to the payment of approximately $1,650,000 to repay the present foreign debt of Liberia to "J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the National City Bank of New York, and First National Bank of New York, acting for themselves and for Robert Fleming & Co., Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas, M. M. Warburg & Co., and Hope & Co., and for others." These bonds have been, according to the testimony of Harry A. McBride, of the State Department, before the House Committee on Ways and Means, selling at 98, approximately par, "since the $5,000,000 loan was first announced to Liberia. Before that, I think, they were selling for about 75 or 80." In other words, the bare announcement that Uncle Sam was about to lend this $5,000,000 at one leap increased the value of the holdings of these bankers by at least $330,000.

So, view the situation as you will, Mr. President, the carrying out of this "moral obligation" will not, in my judgment, result in any moral benefit to the people of Liberia.

I called attention yesterday to the fact that I had been advised—and I have been advised to the same effect since yesterday—that all the floating indebtedness of Liberia which is to be taken up, amounting to some $500,000 or more, has been purchased by speculators at a very low rate, and the fact that that indebtedness is now to be taken care of out of the $5,000,000 proposed to be advanced to Liberia has resulted in an increase in the value of the securities representing that indebtedness amounting to several hundred thousand dollars. We now find that the $1,650,000 indebtedness which was rated at 75 or 80 cents is now to be taken care of at par.

Then it is proposed to add onto the people of Liberia a bureaucratic form of government which is a model of complete bureaucracy. I want the Senate to think about that again for a moment and to consider what we are doing to help the people of Liberia and the way we are proposing to do it. I read again from the agreement negotiated by the Secretary of State.

> The financial commission shall be composed of a financial commissioner, at a salary of $15,000 per annum—

For what? To administer the balance of the $5,000,000, amounting to something over two and one-half million dollars, possibly less and possibly more.

> A deputy financial commissioner, at $10,000 per annum—

Here are two officers who are imposed upon the people of Liberia at $25,000 a year, and, as stated by the editorial in the New York Nation, the powers conferred upon them are dictatorial, unlimited, uncircumscribed, so far as the Liberian people are concerned.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Are the members of the financial commission to Liberia to be appointed by the President of the United States?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Are they to be confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not so understand. I will not be certain about that, but it is my understanding that they are not to be confirmed by the Senate. Their appointment is provided for merely in an agreement with Liberia, which does not take the form of a treaty, and I do not discover anywhere in it that it is provided that the appointees shall be confirmed by the Senate. Then additional officers are provided for, as follows:

> An auditor, at $6,000 per annum; three administrative assistants of class 1, at $6,000 per annum, to be assigned, respectively, as controller general of customs, commissioner general of the interior, and director general of sanitation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator does that mean $6,000 each, or $6,000 for the three?

Mr. BORAH. Six thousand dollars each.

Mr. FLETCHER. Eighteen thousand dollars in all?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. Then, there are provided—

> Ten administrative assistants of class 2, at $4,000 per annum—

That represents $40,000, in addition to the $18,000 for the three administrative assistants of class 1, and $25,000 for the financial commissioner and the deputy financial commissioner.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, has the Senator figured it up so as to give the aggregate of salaries paid?

Mr. BORAH. No; I have not.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it amounts to about $95,000, as I figure it in my mind—from $95,000 to $100,000.

Mr. BORAH. Three controllers of customs, three district commissioners, two technical advisers, an accountant, an agricultural adviser, two administrative assistants of class 2, at $3,000 per annum, one postal revenue officer, and one clerk assistant.

Mr. President, when we take into consideration those that are provided for in the agreement itself, and the salaries, and contemplate what they will be after they have got all their clerks and assistants into their control or under their appointment, we can imagine the size and the weight and the consuming effect of this bureaucracy which we are placing upon Liberia. How long will it take Liberia to pay this debt under that kind of an expense?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. May I ask the Senator what possible relation any of these administrative activities which have been mentioned by him have to the security of the United States or to the prosecution of the war against Germany?

Mr. BORAH. I do not see any immediate connection.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator knows very well that the only authority on earth for establishing credits and making loans was in behalf of the security of this Nation and the prosecution of the war. Upon the question of moral obligation, it is distinctly shown by Mr. Secretary Huges, in his letter to the late Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Penrose, that he himself gravely questioned the propriety of making this loan now proposed to relate to the war, so that the "moral obligation" talk is idle. It has no relation in the world to the consideration of this question. If we propose to make an independent loan to Liberia in consequence of somebody's obligation to somebody else long after the war, that is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think the debate in the House discloses very clearly upon the part of the advocates of this measure that, as the Senator from Virginia says, the moral obligation proposition has dropped out. For instance, the able Representative from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], in presenting this matter, presented it almost entirely upon the proposition of a commercial loan upon the theory that we ought to build up our commerce over there; that it would give us a foothold, as it were, to enable us to do so; and I have here somewhere a statement of his, which I think I can turn to readily, which will show precisely what is in the minds of those who are advocating this measure at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, while the Senator is looking for that, if he will allow me to interrupt, I call attention to the fact that the report submitted in support of this measure refers back to 1909: It says:

In a letter to Congress, dated January 19, 1909, advocating legislation proposed to aid Liberia, President Roosevelt said—

And then—

President Taft, in * * * 1910, said—

So and so. So, evidently it is not claimed now that his proposition is based upon the emergency growing out of the war.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes; the report itself bases it upon some declaration of Mr. Secretary Lansing that there was some moral obligation involved and that this Nation was in honor obliged to make this loan, and yet Mr. Secretary Hughes, in his letter of June 22, 1921, to the late Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Penrose, uses this language:

In view of the time which has elapsed since the establishment of the credit and the questions which might well be raised as to the propriety at this time of advancing money to Liberia as a war measure, it is hoped that Congress—

Will take some independent action. Who ever heard of there being any question of propriety of complying with a moral obligation if the moral obligation really exists? There is no moral obligation or any other sort.

Mr. FLETCHER. I quite agree with the Senator. I am simply reinforcing his position by referring to the report, which, as I say, goes back for argument to support it to 1909, and the position taken then that we ought to help Liberia.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, of course the Senator knows that that was referred to simply to show the relationship which has existed between this country and Liberia ever since its organization.

Mr. GLASS. Does the Senator from Kansas mean that we are to go ahead and loan money to every nation with which we are on cordial terms simply because they want to borrow money?

Mr. CURTIS. No, Mr. President; and that was not what I said. I said that the reference to Roosevelt's attitude and Taft's attitude was simply to show the relationship between the two countries. I am supporting this bill because the Secretary of State under the former administration, Mr. Lansing, and the present Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, say it is a moral obligation upon the part of this Government.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Hughes distinctly says that the question of propriety might well be raised as to the payment of this money with respect to the statute under which the credit was established.

Mr. CURTIS. Here is what he said in his testimony, if the Senator from Idaho will permit me:

I think it a point of honor that this loan should be made, and I shall briefly endeavor to explain why I think that the question of primary importance.

Then he goes on and states:

Liberia had entered the war, you may say, at the instance of the United States——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let me pause there and ask the Senator a question.

Mr. CURTIS. Let me finish this.

Mr. BORAH. I want to pause right there and ask the Senator to indulge me. That is constantly being brought in here by Mr. Hughes and by other parties as an element creating a moral obligation—because they entered the war at our suggestion. They did enter the war because they were in a condition where they needed relief, and we told them we would give them relief, to wit, by protecting their ports, and they entered the war, and we gave them the relief.

Mr. CURTIS. How much protection did we give their ports?

Mr. BORAH. We gave them all they had.

Mr. CURTIS. They did not have any.

Mr. BORAH. They proceeded to do business just the same afterwards.

Mr. CURTIS. No; I beg the Senator's pardon. They did not do any business at all, and their ports were attacked by German submarines. They were at the mercy of German submarines.

Mr. BORAH. The ports were closed at the time we made that promise to them, and after that they were opened. Of course, we were not able to control the German submarines on the instant. If we had been, we would have put an end to the war; but, as a matter of fact, their entering into the war had nothing to do with the creation of this loan.

Mr. GLASS. What did they enter the war for? Why, two Washington policemen could have captured their whole force.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I started to answer the Senator's question, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I will permit the Senator, but Mr. Hughes's statement on that proposition seemed to me an erroneous one.

Mr. CURTIS (reading):

Now, what is the basis of a moral obligation?

The Secretary said:

I take it to be a promise on which another has acted. We told the Liberian Government that, assuming that the proper provision for the protection of the loan was provided, this credit was open.

We went further than that. And now I must refer to a confidential paper, which I hope—

And so forth.

This was all read yesterday, and these confidential papers were referred to—some of them read by the Senator from Idaho and some of them referred to by me. They have all been put in the RECORD, and, of course, there is no use in going over them again.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let us analyze Mr. Hughes's statement a moment.

Now, what is the basis of a moral obligation? I take it to be a promise on which another has acted.

Then he leaves you to infer that a promise was made upon which Liberia acted; and there he discloses his great adroitness as a lawyer, letting the reader assume that to be true which is not true.

We told the Liberian Government that, assuming that the proper provision for the protection of the loan was provided for, this credit was open.

Liberia did not comply with the conditions which were prescribed and made precedent. So Liberia did not take any steps upon our promise at all. Upon the other hand, she refused to take any steps.

What has Liberia lost? What has she forfeited? What step did she take that she can not retrace? The United States is the only one that has lost anything. It has lost $26,000; but Liberia has not parted with any money. Liberia has not parted with any property. Liberia has not taken any step that she can not retrace; but Mr. Hughes leaves us, as the only basis of his moral obligation, the assumption that Liberia has done something by reason of our promise, which I must controvert upon this record.

Mr. GLASS. And then he pulls up his "moral obligation" argument by the roots by stating himself that questions of propriety may well be raised against it.

Mr. BORAH. And he goes further, and says that the real reason for this loan, as I quoted yesterday from his own language, was a commercial proposition for the future.

Now I will read what the able Representative from Ohio, [Mr. BURTON], in discussing this matter, said:

Mr. Chairman, it is about time for us to depart from that selfish policy which I have often heard advocated on this floor and to maintain a larger degree of altruism. The nations of Europe are criticizing us because we are gathering in great hoards the gold of the world.

I suppose if he had read Kipling in the last day or two he would feel more keen than ever to take care of the situation in an altruistic fashion:

If I may again stray into consideration of what I think a selfish policy, we had better utilize that gold in making advances to other countries, not in the way of Government loans but in dividing up that great surplus which is not beneficial to this country and unnecessary for its credit.

In other words, we want to get rid of our gold surplus; we want to divide it up, and instead of sending it West to build irrigation projects and make homes for the American people we propose to loan it to Liberia, and create a bureau which will have the effect, sure enough, of dividing up the gold of the United States.

It has a tendency to increase the high cost of living—

This gold of ours, in our possession—

because of the immense stock of money in this country. I especially oppose the idea that we should build up this great hoard like that of Midas. Let us cooperate in the development of the rest of the world; let our people make advances to them for their rehabilitation and growth. This will not only be our duty as a member of the great family of nations, but will be for our own interest as well, and especially does that apply when this promise has been definitely made that we would make a loan and the money has been set aside.

I am not in favor of making any more loans like this to foreign governments.

Why stop with Liberia?

I am not in favor of this Government making further loans to other countries. There is plenty of money in the country, however; our investors loaned $100,000,000 to Canada and the loan was oversubscribed. Gentlemen speak of destitution. If you want to relieve the destitution, let us aid other countries in their development and let them buy of us. Here is Liberia, with her splendid resources, almost unlimited, without roads, without harbors, without improvements; and this loan, or the largest share of it, would be applied to building up that country and giving them an opportunity to come nearer to the rank of civilized nations of the earth.

The President of Liberia, Mr. King, in his letter dated January 11, 1918, discloses clearly the real purpose of this loan. It was not to enable them to carry on the war or to take part in the war. He said:

The financial dangers at present threatening the Republic, as foreshadowed in the inclosed memorandum are, in the opinion of the President, so imminent as to warrant his excellency's firm conviction that a strong and candid appeal should be immediately made to the Government of the United States to come to the relief of the Republic without delay by:

1. A loan of not less than $5,000,000 to enable the Republic to cancel the refunding loan of 1912 and to establish a receivership under American control alone; to take up our internal floating indebtedness; to stimulate education, agriculture, and industry, and to inaugurate such public works as will operate for the complete financial and economic rehabilitation of the country.

This is the object of the loan, not war; not to make us more secure or more powerful in our fight, but purely a commercial proposition, to rehabilitate Liberia, and to pay off her debt. He continued:

2. By the loan of additional American agents to assist the Government in perfecting its desires and plans for effective administration and control, both in the several departments of government and in the administration of our hinterland.

To this end, therefore, does the President desire this memorandum to be laid before the Government of the United States through your legation. Knowing as he does your warm interest and concern in the welfare and prosperity of Liberia, his excellency feels justified in relying upon your support and indorsement of this appeal now being made to your Government.

Mr. President, there is not a word in that, not an intimation, in connection with the question of the prosecution of the war. There is no suggestion that if this loan is made they will declare war, and turn their vast armies and navies loose upon the German Empire. It is just the same as if we would make a loan to-day, if there were no war, and should discuss the proposition of a foreign loan; it is simply a commercial transaction, a commercial proposition.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, bearing out the Senator's thought in this connection, the report says that the Government of Liberia declared war against Germany on August 4, 1917. It was not until Septemebr 24, 1917, that the second Liberty loan act was passed.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely.

Mr. FLETCHER. So it was not by reason of any promise on our part that Liberia declared war on Germany. She did that on August 4, prior to the time the act was passed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to say a word now with reference to the amendment. The situation in the West with reference to reclamation has been very discouraging for a number of years. The Government indicated its purpose of opening up certain large tracts of land, and so arranged affairs that homesteaders were permitted to go upon those tracts and undertake to secure homes. Of course, nothing can be raised upon those tracts without irrigation. The settler went there in the belief and with the understanding, sometimes direct and sometimes implied, that the Government would within a reasonable time reclaim those tracts of land.

In a number of instances the settlers have been upon those tracts for all the way from 5 to 10 years, sometimes a longer period of years. They have suffered and sacrificed pretty nearly everything a human being could suffer and sacrifice in order to get a home. They have undertaken to hold out against most adverse circumstances in order to maintain their homes, in order to secure them, but the Government has not been able or willing up to this time to take care of many of those tracts. The result is that the settlers are being forced off of those lands because the Government does not complete its contracts and does not reclaim the lands.

There is not sufficient money in the reclamation fund at this time to complete those projects. There is only one way by which the work can be completed, and that is by a loan from the General Treasury to the reclamation fund. That loan is provided for, to a limited extent, by this amendment. The loan provided for is not a large one, but in my opinion it would assist in taking care of those tracts where the settlers are actually in possession of the land where they have located and initiated their interests. I know of no other way by which those people can be taken care of.

I understand from the press reports this morning that the conferees on the bonus bill have eliminated what is known as the McNary amendment. If that amendment had been left on the bill, with the chances of its becoming a law in case the bill itself should become a law, I think in all probability I should have withdrawn this amendment this morning. But it is now very clear that by no other means and in no other way can the western settler be aided at this session of Congress except in this way.

I feel that it is the solemn duty of this Government to carry out those contracts. If the Government does not desire to initiate new enterprises, that is a wholly different question. If the Government desires to end the reclamation policy and program with the projects which are now begun, that is a wholly different proposition. But I undertake to say that where settlers have gone upon the land, where the projects have been initiated, where the settlers are there, where they have made an effort and made every sacrifice, the Government is under the highest obligation, if not legal, certainly moral, to complete the contracts and to enable those people to acquire their homes.

If I may refer to another matter, one of the specific promises made in the last national campaign was that these projects would be taken care of, and that the party, if given power, would go forward with the completion of this work. That was put out in the midst of the campaign, particularly in the West. So, as a party and as a Government, we stand to-day under the highest moral obligation to make some arrangements for the completion of this work.

If, as is said by the advocates of this bill, we are in a position to loan money to rehabilitate Liberia, what possible excuse can we give to our own settlers when we say we have not the money to complete the projects upon which we invited them 5 and 10 years ago? When we say we have the means to go 3,000 miles away and take up a half-civilized country and expend our means upon it for the same purpose precisely, that of improving agriculture, that of reducing the land to cultivation, what possible explanation can we make to our own citizens when we say we have not the money to loan from the General Treasury to the reclamation fund in order to take care of their claims?

So I say, Mr. President, that while we are discussing the question of moral obligation to a people, while we are considering the question of improving agricultural lands and making homes, it is quite proper to take into consideration a condition in our own country which has been neglected for too long a time.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator takes his seat, may I make a suggestion?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator has made reference to the party obligation, and to the declaration of the party in favor of reclaiming arid lands. I am afraid the Senator overlooks the fact that an election is approaching. It looks as though the Republicans in the North would be defeated in many States. It is alleged that there are a great many Republican colored voters in the North. Has the Senator taken into account the fact that the Republican steering committee, perhaps with an eye to political considerations rather than to justice, conceive that a loan to Liberia and the passage of the antilynching bill will help the Republicans in the North, and that it is mere partisanship and opportunism rather than moral obligation, or a regard for international obligations that prompts the steering committee and the Republican Party to project this legislation and the antilynching bill at this time? Is not that something the Senator has failed to enlighten the Senate about?

Mr. BORAH. That is something I have not enlightened the Senate about; but I called attention to the fact that we have as a party made a specific promise to the settlers of the West. If there is another promise out, then I want the two promises to be fulfilled together.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I judge from the question asked by the Senator from Utah that he has not read the returns from Maine.

Mr. KING. Oh, yes; I have.

Mr. CURTIS. The election there would indicate that the North is going Republican, as it has been going for years. But that is outside of this question, and I am sorry the Senator brought it up. I should not have referred to it had he not done so.

It seems to me, from the arguments, that the Senator from Idaho and gentlemen on the other side of the aisle are trying to place the Secretary of State in a wrong position. He clearly stated, as I have read here several times, that he based this recommendation, first, upon the ground that there was a moral obligation. He referred to the other considerations, and that is how the commercial question was brought in. The Secretary of State said:

I also wish to say this, that to which I have already adverted, I will say for the record that the consequences of a failure to give this authority from my point of view, which, of course, with all deference, I merely submit to your consideration, would be lamentable, in the first place, with respect to the position of the United States before the world, not only before Liberia but before the world.

Now, next, and this is where the question of commerce comes in, and is the only reference to it—

Next, it would be most lamentable for Liberia; and, third, it would forfeit to the United States an opportunity which ought not to be held as the chief motive in entering into this enterprise, but which we can very properly consider, an opportunity which confers without prejudice to the interests of the people of Liberia certain natural advantages from the association which the making of this loan would create.

But, as I stated yesterday and again this morning, the main basis for the Secretary's recommendation was the moral obligation which he claims exists, as did Secretary Lansing.

I hardly think it is necessary to refer to the part of the argument of the Senator from Idaho as to what effect our taking over the affairs of Liberia might have upon the people. It would depend entirely upon the character of the men sent to Liberia. It would depend upon the management they gave to the affairs of that country.

I dislike very much to oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho, but the Senator clearly realizes that the amendment is not germane to the joint resolution. Of course, there is no use of raising the question of germaneness, because that must be submitted to the Senate, so if we can have a vote the matter can be settled that way. Since I have been in Congress I have voted for the various reclamation measures, feeling that the Government owed an obligation to aid the settlers who had gone out to the West and Northwest to develop that country, and I feel that all the obligations and promises made to those people should be fully kept. But I desire just for a moment or two to present the other side of the question. I do not believe our people fully realize what has been done for irrigation in that country, nor do they realize that some of the people on the irrigation projects have failed to appreciate what has been done for them by the Government. It must be remembered that the Government has already advanced on irrigation projects $132,000,000, of which——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator on reflection would feel disposed to modify that statement. The original appropriation, as I recall it, was in the aggregate about $20,000,000. There is a revolving fund, and only $20,000,000 has come out of the Treasury. The residue has come from the sale of public lands and upon the contracts made with settlers upon the irrigation projects.

Mr. CURTIS. I was just coming to that and will come to it if the Senator will rest easy for a moment or two. The Government has advanced or there has been paid out on irrigation projects upon public lands $132,000,000, of which there has been returned to the Government the sum of $12,000,000. There has been expended upon Indian lands for irrigation purposes the sum of $23,000,000, of which there has been returned to the Government only about $1,800,000.

I am referring to this regretfully because I would not discuss the matter if the Senator from Idaho had not offered the amendment, but in the State of Idaho one project cost the Government about $20 an acre; the water rights were given to the settlers at $6 an acre, and they have returned but little if any of the money.

Mr. BORAH. That was an Indian proposition.

Mr. CURTIS. It was given to the white settlers.

Mr. BORAH. But it was an Indian proposition.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; but the money was paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. The Congress of the United States enacted the law.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. And the white settlers complied with the letter of the law. Who is to blame, the Congress or the settlers?

Mr. CURTIS. The white settlers were to pay and they have not paid. The matter went so far that a year or two ago an amendment was proposed to an Indian appropriation bill, which I offered myself, and afterwards eliminated upon the promise of the Senator from Idaho and his colleague that the settlers would enter into an agreement with the Government that the settlers should pay the Government the amount agreed upon. That agreement has been made. I am glad to say they have entered into it, and I hope the money will soon be repaid.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire of the Senator how much was involved in that project?

Mr. CURTIS. Nearly $2,000,000 was advanced. I believe that some of the projects where they have raised such large crops should pay back to the Government what the Government has advanced and let the Government then advance that money to new settlers and to those who have not been aided.

In Arizona we have the Salt River project, where the cost of construction was $10,000,000. The crops raised upon that project in the last 10 years have amounted to $111,000,000 and yet they have only returned to the Government $609,000.

On the Yuma (Arizona-California) project, which cost $8,000,000, the crops raised were valued at $25,000,000, and they have returned to the Government $800,000.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I have been trying to think of the name of the project in Kansas where the settlers never paid anything back.

Mr. CURTIS. No; and the Senator from Kansas refused to ask for an appropriation to continue it.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. I am not attacking the Senator from Kansas. I am speaking about the settlers in Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. That project was started, and when the Senator from Kansas came to this body and an additional appropriation was asked for, the Senator from Kansas told the committee that he did not want the appropriation because it was not doing the Government any good nor was it doing the settlers any good. It would be better for the Government and for the settlers if some Senators from the irrigation States would take that position in regard to some of the projects in their States.

The Orland (Calif.) project cost $1,000,000; crops raised, $4,000,000; paid back to the Government, $168,000.

In Colorado the Grand Valley project cost over $3,700,000; value of crops raised, $20,000,000; paid back, nothing.

The Uncompahgre project cost $6,000,000; crops raised, $22,000,000; paid back, nothing.

In Idaho the Boise project cost $12,000,000; crops raised, $30,000,000; paid back, $1,099,000.

King Hill project cost $1,400,000; crops raised, $652,000; paid back, nothing.

Minidoka project cost $6,000,000; crops raised, $31,000,000; paid back, $2,000,000.

In Montana the Huntley project cost $1,400,000; crops raised, $5,600,000, returned to the Government, $340,000.

Milk River project cost $6,500,000; crops raised, $1,900,000; returned, nothing.

Sun River project cost $3,900,000; crops raised, $1,700,000; returned, $124,000.

Montana-North Dakota, Lower Yellowstone, cost $3,000,000; crops raised, $3,600,000; returned, $41,000.

Nebraska, North Platte, cost $12,000,000; crops raised, $24,000,000; returned, $1,000,000.

In Nevada the Newland project cost $6,000,000; crops raised, $10,000,000; returned, $484,000.

In New Mexico the Carlsbad project cost $1,300,000; crops raised, $6,000,000; returned, $300,000.

New Mexico and Texas, Rio Grande, cost $11,000,000, crops raised, $25,000,000; returned, nothing.

North Dakota pumping project cost $400,000; crops raised, $200,000; returned nothing.

In Oregon, the Umatilla project cost $2,700,000; crops raised, $2,700,000; returned $300,000.

Oregon-California, Klamath cost $3,500,000; crops raised, $5,000,000; returned $450,000.

Utah, Strawberry Valley cost $3,000,000; crops raised, $9,000,000; returned $300,000.

Washington, Okanogan cost $1,000,000; crops raised, $6,000,000; returned $40,200.

Yakima cost $10,000,000; crops raised, $7,700,000 in 10 years, and paid back $2,000,000.

In Wyoming, the Shoshone project cost $7,000,000; crops raised, $7,900,000; paid back $558,000.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator has not given South Dakota. I would like to have the figures for that.

Mr. CURTIS. The South Dakota project cost $3,500,000; crops raised, $7,900,000; returned to the Government, $456,000.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRELD in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. SHIELDS. As the Senator seems to be familiar with the subject, I would like to ask with reference to the immense crops which have been raised, evidently upon projects which have been successful, why more has not been paid back to the Government?

Mr. BORAH and Mr. McNARY addressed the Chair.

Mr. SHIELDS. Let me finish my question. Is that because the law did not require it or because the law was not enforced?

Mr. CURTIS. I think, in the first place, it was because the law put a limit upon the time of payment that should be made and afterwards Congress extended the time from 10 to 20 years. But that does not answer the question. Those people have raised the crops. Their neighbor gets an extension on the irrigation projects. They have raised crops to the value of millions of dollars more than the projects cost, and they have not paid back as much as I believe they could have and should have.

Mr. BORAH. Before the Senator leaves that point, let me ask him where does he estimate the value of those crops? Is it on the project?

Mr. CURTIS. I take the statement from the Reclamation Service—the department of the Government which gives the value of the crop, as I understand it, at the place of production.

Mr. BORAH. Let me give an illustration. We have a project in Idaho which was very successful this year in raising a certain crop—that is, potatoes. It is now costing the potato raisers more money to dig and ship their potatoes to Omaha than they can get for their potatoes when they get there, to say nothing at all about the expense of raising the crop to the point of digging. That is the situation. I saw a statement the other day in a New York paper about the vast value of this crop, but it was estimated at its value upon the ground. After it gets to the place where it can find a market the crop raiser is indebted to the party to whom he must pay his shipping expenses.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Kansas has not insisted that in the last two or three years the farmers on the irrigation projects have made money any more than have the farmers in other sections of the country. I know it has been a bad time for them all, and they have not made money. What I am talking about are the years when they did make money.

Now let us come back to the Indian project.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire of the Senator whether the law does not require annual payments on those projects? If Congress extends the time of final payment, that does not necessarily relieve them of the payment.

Mr. CURTIS. Under some projects we have year by year extended the time by resolution of the House and Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Year by year, but that was the annual payment. They are required to make certain annual payments on account of these projects, I understand.

Mr. BORAH. Before the Senator from Kansas leaves that point, to what resolution does he refer by which we extended the limit?

Mr. CURTIS. I say that resolutions have been passed from time to time extending any yearly payments that may have become due under any project.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is in error.

Mr. CURTIS. I may be in error; if so, I withdraw the statement.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. That statement was not made to mislead——

Mr. CURTIS. It was not.

Mr. McNARY. But it was entirely erroneous.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not know whether the resolutions had reference to irrigation projects or to public-land settlers.

Mr. McNARY. I am certain it was not the irrigation projects. About a year ago I offered the first and only resolution of that character which permitted the Secretary of the Interior, after thorough investigation and in special cases, to extend the time for payment of maintenance and operation charges.

Furthermore, the Senator from Kansas is in grievous error about defaults being made in the payment of those sums. It is less than 3 per cent. One hundred and thirty million dollars has been covered into the reclamation fund from the sale of public lands and royalties on oil lands, and of that $15,000,000 has been paid. The law declares a default when it is made. Payments have been made more promptly and in larger amounts upon irrigation projects than under private contracts between individuals. Furthermore, with those large crops the Senator must remember that the projects are not finished from year to year, but certain units in each project are finished, and no one is yet a complete project. These sums have been paid out over a period of 21 years. It takes a good many years after a project is started before it produces anything in the way of crops, and it is unfair to say to those who are administering the great irrigation service that they have been guilty of neglect in the collection of the money due for maintenance and construction charges.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not think any Senator who has studied the question on the Appropriations Committee or elsewhere will say for a moment that they have not been neglectful of their duty so far as collecting moneys due. They have been neglectful of their duty. I do not believe they have tried to collect payments as diligently as they should have done.

Mr. McNARY. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that he is not at all familiar with the record.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Kansas has been upon the Appropriations Committee and has asked the representatives of the Reclamation Service questions and has received their answers.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that the Senator from Kansas has been on the Appropriations Committee, but that does not mean that he understands much about reclamation.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not claim to be an expert on reclamation, but I claim to understand what a man says in answer to questions——

Mr. McNARY. I say that it is most manifest that the distinguished Senator from Kansas does not know anything about the proposition which he is discussing.

Mr. CURTIS. It is too bad that some other Senators do not know more about it. Now, let us take the reclamation projects on Indian reservations. I suppose the Senator from Oregon will say that I do not know anything about them.

On the Blackfeet (Mont.) project they have raised crops of the gross value of $860,615; the net cost of the construction has been $1,444,360,60, while the repayments to the Government have only been $2,142.75.

On the Flathead (Mont.) project crops have been raised of a gross value of $3,486,763; the net construction cost has been $4,491,586.70, while the repayments have been but $13,694.29.

On the Fort Peck (Mont.) project the gross crop values have been $146,818; the net construction cost has been $866,121.14, while the repayments have been but $497.24; and they returned but a small amount until a provision was put in the appropriation bill requiring the Bureau of Indian Affairs to collect the money.

I am not here to attack irrigation projects. As I have stated, I have voted for such projects and I should like to see the country developed. I think the Government has reserved too much land in the State of Idaho and in other States in the Northwest and West; that it has tied up too many acres; but that does not excuse the people who have settled upon these projects, who have produced good crops, and who have received a fair profit for them from making their payments to the Government, so that their neighbors might have the benefit of such repayments in the revolving fund.

As I have stated upon this floor a number of times, I will vote for any appropriation to carry out the contract of the Government with the people who are upon the irrigation projects. We had this question up a number of years ago, when the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] presented their side. In that debate I stated that as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I was ready to vote for every dollar which was required to carry out the promise of the Government; and I now stand ready to do that, whether the project is a success or a failure. If the Senators from those States would be fair, however, they would stand up here and admit that some of the irrigation projects ought to be abandoned.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. GOODING. Speaking for Idaho, I desire to say to the Senator from Kansas that it is not necessary to abandon any irrigation project in my State, and it will be nothing less than a crime to do so. If the Government had not increased the freight rates 73 per cent in my State it would be possible for the settlers on reclamation projects there to pay what they owe the Government, but unreasonable freight rates have been exacted and made possible by a Government agency. Is it strange, therefore, that a farmer can not meet his obligations? In not many of the projects in my State will the products raised bear the freight rates to market this year.

Is the Senator from Kansas going to hold the farmer responsible for that condition over which he has no control at all, and that, too, when the railroads did not need the increase, when their dividends have been greater year by year than they were during pre-war times?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Kansas said a few moments ago—I judge the Senator from Idaho was absent from the Chamber at the time—he would not hold those people responsible. I know what the conditions have been for the last few years; but I contend that some of those people did not make their repayments before the freight rates were increased.

Mr. BORAH. I assert that that statement is without foundation.

Mr. CURTIS. I have given the figures taken from official reports, and I would like to see the senior Senator from Idaho give the figures to prove the contrary of what I have stated if he can.

Mr. BORAH. I do not care anything about the figures which the Senator brings down here from the department. I assert that these men did pay whenever they could pay. Of course, the department itself passed upon the question of whether or not they could pay, and the department concluded that they could not pay.

Mr. GOODING. With the exception of the Boise-Payette project, in which there has been controversy between the settlers and the Government, generally the settlers have paid in my State.

Mr. CURTIS. On that project they were only required to pay $6 for what cost the Government twenty-odd dollars.

Mr. GOODING. I imagine that when that controversy shall have been settled the people of the Boise-Payette project will pay; and, without any exception, in my State the time is coming when we shall be able to pay.

Mr. CURTIS. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. GOODING. But it is impossible for them to pay with the present freight rates.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator why it is that land which cost the Government $20 per acre, as he says, was sold for $6 per acre?

Mr. CURTIS. I did not mean to convey the impression that the land cost $20 an acre, but that the construction of the project and putting on the water cost that amount. The House and Senate, in 1907, passed a law directing that the water rights be sold to the settlers at $6 an acre, but as yet they have not been paid for.

Mr. President, I do not like to make this kind of a speech here, but I think the people——

Mr. GOODING. In that very case the Senator knows that there has been a controversy all the time between the settlers and the Government and, so far as that is concerned, Congress passed an act which gave the settlers their water rights at $6 an acre, and then immediately the Government tried to increase that price without any authority.

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, no.

Mr. GOODING. That is what the Indian Bureau did, as the Senator well knows.

I wish to state to the Senator that there are no more honest people on the face of God's footstool than in the State of Idaho——

Mr. CURTIS. I agree with the Senator on that point.

Mr. GOODING. And I think that is true of all the western States.

Mr. CURTIS. I agree with the Senator fully as to that.

Mr. GOODING. Many of them are men who have been pioneering and making possible the settlement and development of that great section of the country.

Mr. CURTIS. I agree with the Senator as to that, but I want the Senator to remember that it was not until an amendment was proposed to be attached to the Indian appropriation bill that the junior Senator from Idaho and the senior Senator from Idaho joined and took the matter up with the Indian Bureau, as a result of which an understanding was reached to the effect that if that amendment was left out the settlers would enter into an agreement to pay back the money owed to the Government. I have here in my possession a copy of that agreement.

Mr. President, I am not here to attack the settlers on irrigation projects who have not been able to produce crops. They have my sympathy. Do we not have crop failures in Kansas, and do not I know what a crop failure means? I would extend the time of payment year after year as long as necessary in order to relieve the people suffering from such disadvantages, but the point I make is this——

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, the Senator has reflected very seriously upon the citizens of my State.

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, no; I have not and have no intention of doing so.

Mr. GOODING. The Senator says they did not pay when they could pay, and in that statement I take issue with the Senator from Kansas. It is not true.

Mr. CURTIS. I have not said what the Senator seems to think I said. What I say is that the men who have land under these projects, and who have raised crops and who have earned sufficient money to enable them to repay the Government, should repay the Government, so that the payments might go back into the fund and thereby help those under projects where help is needed. That is my contention, and the only contention I make.

As I have said, this amendment is not germane to this bill, but the only way to settle the question is to have a vote, and, so far as I am concerned, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that so far as the Government, through the Reclamation Service, is concerned, it has not given the settlers of the West anything at all. It is the only branch of the Government for the maintenance of which those proposed to be benefited are taxed. Every item of expense in administration is charged up to a project. There is no other department of the Government of which that is true. So I want the Senator to understand that, so far as the Reclamation Service is concerned, the Government is not giving the settlers a single penny.

I wish further to say that in time all the money advanced by the Government in connection with reclamation projects will be paid back, when conditions are such that the settlers on the projects may market their products without paying all their profits in freight rates. Last year the farmers of my State paid in freight rates 78 cents out of every dollar they received for the potatoes they sold, and this year they can not market their potatoes at all, and have stopped digging. Will it be possible for them to market their fruit crops unless they receive better freight rates than they have now? For wheat the farmer is receiving from 65 to 70 cents a bushel, and after he pays the freight rate, what is there left for him? Nothing except poverty. It is merely a question where industry and thrift are paid back in hardship and privation; that is all. I wish to say to the Senator from Kansas that the Oregon Short Line and the Union Pacific Railroads never needed the increases in freight rates given to them during the war, and their dividends show very clearly that to be the fact.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is no mistaking the import of the speech of the Senator from Kansas. I have known for some time that the leaders upon this side of the Chamber propose to kill the reclamation policy. There has not been an effort here or a move made that has not been checkmated by these gentlemen. The Senator from Kansas has been perfectly frank in announcing to the country that the policy is at an end so far as the leaders of the Republican Party in this Chamber are concerned.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I will state to the Senator that I never talked with any other Senator upon this question; I have not talked with the department or any branch of the Government about it. I merely gathered this information, in addition to some information previously obtained from my service on committees, since the Senator offered his amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that does not relate to the subject I am discussing at all, and that is that the reclamation program or policy no longer receives favor at the hands of those who are directing affairs here in the Senate upon the part of the Republican Party. All I need to do, Mr. President, is to refer to the record. The steering committee determines what bills are to be passed at this session, and, instead of taking up any measure which has to do with carrying out the solemn pledge made by the party in the last campaign, it puts upon the program a joint resolution proposing to loan $5,000,000 to Liberia.

When the Senator from Oregon offered his amendment to the bonus bill and it passed into conference it was immediately throttled; it was not even given an opportunity to die a respectable death in case the bill itself should die. It received the disapproval, the condemnation, of the leaders of the party itself and by itself rather than permit it to have a chance with the bill on which the Senate passed it.

Now, when we come to the pending joint resolution and offer an amendment to it, which is germane because it has to do with the loaning of money for the purpose of building homes in our own country, the Senator from Kansas, the whip of the Senate, denounces the men who are trying to build homes in the West practically as dishonest and unwilling to pay their debts. If that is not a condemnation of the whole scheme, a pronouncement from one in authority that the settlers of the West may look elsewhere, I do not know what would constitute such a pronouncement.

What are the facts, Mr. President? These men have gone out upon these projects and with great sacrifice, under conditions of adversity which human language can not describe, have built up homes, have built communities, have built churches, have built schoolhouses; and there, where th desert was 15 and 20 years ago, are now communities, are all the things which make a community in our country of to-day. They have fought under most adverse circumstances. They have met every obligation which it was possible for them as a financial proposition to meet, and no man has failed to pay without sacrificing his home, just the same as a man who has a mortgage upon it, until he had the approval of this Government that he was unable to pay.

You would draw the inference from the statement of the Senator from Kansas that these men have refused to pay when they were able to pay, thereby indicating that they were dishonest with the Government, when, as a matter of fact, the only authority which has ever been given the Secretary of the Interior to pass upon these matters was to take up each individual, particular case, and if that individual, particular case seemed to be a case of a man who was acting in good faith and he could not pay the Secretary could extend the loan. There has been no wholesale extension. There has been no blanket ordinance authorizing them, and when a man does not pay he loses his farm, unless he has the acquiescence of the Secretary of the Interior; so there has been no chance for these men to make anything. There has been no chance for them to refuse to pay and still hold the benefits of the Government. They have met the situation as pioneers always meet it, with integrity of purpose, with honesty, and with good faith; and thus they have built up their homes in the West. I think it ill becomes the great Republican Party, having made its pledge to these people here upon the floor of the Senate, to brand them as recreants and as citizens unworthy of further confidence from the Government.

We get greatly excited here if the farmer of the West, under the adverse circumstances which have surrounded him, fails to meet his obligation upon the day named, and yet what have we been doing all this time? We have been loaning uncounted millions to irresponsible governments and other governments, thereby adding taxes to those farmers of the West, and making it doubly difficult for them to pay; but do we become disturbed with $187,000,000 in the hands of Russia? Are we disturbed when we propose to loan $5,000,000 to Liberia, and to create positions with salaries of $15,000, $10,000, $6,000, and innumerable smaller amounts to administer $2,500,000? Are we disturbed with our loans in Europe to-day? Are we not preparing to postpone for an indefinite time our loans to even such nations as France and England? Can we not postpone for six months or a year or for 10 years our loans to these men who have gone out upon the desert and made homes for the American Republic? Have our affections all been transferred to foreign people? Have we no concern, no sympathy, for our own people?

Why, Mr. President, we appropriate here year after year uncounted millions and pour them into the rivers and the harbors and the duck streams where no ship ever floated nor ever can, and not a dollar of it ever comes back; but the man who goes out upon the prairie and builds a home on the desert, if he fails to pay for six months or a year, is told from the floor of the Senate that he is no longer worthy of the trust of the Government of the United States!

Mr. President, if no one else desires to speak upon this amendment, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I want to say just a word on this subject.

I have always felt a very keen interest in this general scheme of reclamation. I have always felt that the reclamation act was a deserved, everlasting monument to one of the great statesmen of this country, the late Senator Newlands. I have felt all along—and I have heard lectures on the subject, and I have seen illustrated pictures of what has been going on in the West—that, in the main, the whole great enterprise was a tremendous success. It may be, as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has said to-day, that mistakes have been made here and there. It may be that some of the projects which have been undertaken ought to be abandoned. I have no particular instance in mind; but I can see that in a great development like that, spreading over a vast area of the country, mistakes might creep in here and there. Even admitting that, however, the general plan and scheme and purpose and the general results, I think, have been most commendable and gratifying; and I believe a great future is ahead of us, showing the permanent development of these projects, and we ought to continue that policy, which was evidently a very wise one when originally initiated.

I regret that it is impossible to amend the Senator's amendment so as to include reclamation by drainage. I wish it were possible to do that; but of course the amendment refers to this particular act, and to existing undertakings, and settlers now on the ground, and so forth. It can not be broadened in such a way as to include reclamation by drainage. I think the whole system ought to be extended to the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands, as well as embracing arid lands.

I regret exceedingly to hear that the amendment to the bonus bill known as the McNary amendment has been rejected in conference. I think it was a very important and valuable amendment, and it ought to have been included.

Speaking with reference to reclamation by drainage, I say that field is wide open, and is broad and susceptible of almost infinite development. There is the opportunity of very great constructive work, and the reclamation of these overflowed lands, these wet lands, would add immensely to the national wealth. We have had nothing in the way of governmental aid in the reclamation of those lands, although thirty to sixty million acres of those lands, the most fertile in the world when the water is taken off, can be made available for production.

I have in my hand a clipping from a newspaper in Florida which indicates what has been going on there under one project of reclamation. It says:

From Moore Haven to Clewiston—

Two towns located now where five years ago there were 4 to 5 feet of water—one is nearly always in sight of a cultivated farm now, where two years ago it was an unbroken jungle.

Then the account goes on to state that hundreds and thousands of acres of land are now producing enormous crops, three and four a year, where five years ago there was nothing but a watery waste. That could be continued in Florida to the extent of four or five million acres of land. That is being done, however, without any sort of Federal governmental assistance; and, as I said, I should be glad if we could extend this whole scheme of reclamation so as to include and embrace in the plan the muck lands or the swamp and overflowed lands.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, by way of showing conditions in Florida, a statement issued by the Barnett National Bank, of Jacksonville, compiled by L. M. Rhodes, commissioner of the State marketing bureau. It is an authentic statement, not very long, and I ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE MATERIAL PROGRESS OF FLORIDA FROM 1911–12 TO 1921–22, AND OTHER INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT THE STATE.

Florida is a State of great dimensions and sparsely populated.

It is as far from Key West to Pensacola by rail as it is from Jacksonville to New York City. Key West is 500 miles south of Jacksonville.

Florida is as large as New York, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island. Those States have a population of 15,000,000; Florida has 1,000,000.

The population of Florida has increased an average of 4¾ per cent annually since 1880. The United States has increased in population 2¾ per cent annually since 1880. Florida is growing twice as rapidly as the United States.

The northern boundary of Florida is farther south than the southern boundary of California.

The average temperature in Jacksonville, the State's northernmost city, is 55° in January and 82° in July—the coldest and hottest months.

You need less fuel and clothing in Florida than in any other State in the Union.

There are many beautiful hills and fertile valleys in Florida. It is not all flat.

The total shipments to points outside the State of farm products, fruits, live stock, and poultry products for 1922 will exceed $100,000,000.

The total acreage of improved Florida farms in 1912 was 1,854,594. The total acreage in 1922 is 2,346,457, an increase of 26 per cent.

The State has 20,000,000 acres of unimproved land available for farm use—but, as in other localities, the land should be inspected before purchase.

The value of all crops and live stock in 1912 was $63,823,297; 1920, $148,226,091. Estimated 1922 to be $156,500,000, an increase since 1912 of 131 per cent.

The live stock, dairy, and poultry products of Florida increased from 1912 to 1922 132 per cent.

The increase in crop and live stock value of the United States for the last 10 years has been 9 per cent per annum, while the crop and live stock value of Florida for the last 10 years has shown 13 per cent per annum increase

The assessed valuation of Florida property is $423,906,718. As this is based on a 40 per cent valuation, our real wealth has a value of over $1,000,000,000. With a few years of real development this could easily be raised to $5,000,000,000.

Tax-assessment rolls have increased in totals 100 per cent since 1912.

The State has no bonded debt.

The banking resources of Florida have increased 410 per cent in 10 years.

Seventy-six per cent of Florida farmers are white, 72 per cent of the farms are operated by owners.

No State in the Union has better natural advantages for growing cattle and hogs than Florida. We can grow some kind of feed crops every month in the year.

In July, 1922, a progressive farmer, near Jacksonville, gathered 105 bushels of corn from an acre of land.

With a mild climate and plenty of grass, Florida is the natural home of the dairy cow. So far as dairying is concerned we can do in Florida anything that can be done in Wisconsin.

We never have sunstrokes to man or animal and no one freezes in Florida.

In Florida you can swim in the surf, pick strawberries, and wear roses in December.

Florida has 2,635 common schools, 272 high schools, 4 State schools for higher education, 16 denominational colleges, and 2 industrial schools, one for boys and one for girls.

There are 100 ice factories in the State. Incidentally, artificial ice was first manufactured in Florida. A statue of Dr. John Gorrie—perhaps humanity's greatest benefactor—is Florida's contribution to the Hall of Fame in the National Capitol.

The State has 10,000 miles of good roads, some of the best in the world, and is rapidly building more.

Adding lake and river fronts to the 1,100 miles of seacoast, Florida has 9,500 miles of beautiful water front, enough to accommodate 1,000,000 homes and have 5,000,000 people dwelling comfortably on the margin of our waters.

Florida has the finest sea beaches in the world—many of them 500 to 1,000 feet in width.

The State has 5 trunk-line railroads, 11 steamship lines, and a half dozen year-round ports on the ocean and Gulf.

There are a score of navigable rivers and thousands of lakes, bays, and inlets.

Some of the largest springs in the world are in Florida. One of these has a daily flow of 10,000,000 barrels of water, is 80 feet deep, clear as a crystal, and large enough to float a steamship.

There are many giant trees in the State. A live oak in the suburbs of Jacksonville measures 25 feet in circumference and has a spread of 142 feet.

Florida produces the best oranges and grapefruit on earth.

Florida trees supply fruits, nuts, oils, sweets, dyes, drugs, chemicals, tar, pitch, rosin, turpentine, gum, lumber, creosote, and moss, all marketable and of use to man.

It is not an uncommon thing to grow $1,000 worth of produce on a Florida acre.

There have been 10,000 quarts of strawberries grown on an acre of land in Florida.

Florida produces 80 per cent of the watermelon seed planted in the United States. We ship watermelon seed in car lots.

Tampa and Key West factories send out to the smokers of the world 500,000,000 cigars annually.

The fish, oyster, and shrimp industry is one of great proportions.

Florida is a hunter's paradise. There is much wild game in the State—even bear and deer. In winter geese and ducks abound.

Florida sawmills turn out 1,000,000,000 feet of lumber annually, counting finished product. The State has sufficient building material to build comfortable homes for 20,000,000 people.

The average annual production of turpentine in Florida is 120,000 barrels; average rosin per annum, 390,000 barrels. Not less than $50,000 per day drips from our pine trees in summer.

Florida mines 80 per cent of the total output of phosphate in the United States. Its value in 1920 was $19,000,000.

The State production of manufactural forest, mineral, and sea food products reaches $200,000,000 annually.

There are 250 different varieties of crops, fruits, nuts, and vegetables grown in Florida, and shipments out of the State average one car every six minutes day and night the year round.

Florida is building sugar mills which can produce sugar from cane in 36 hours. A ton of cane will make 190 pounds of sugar. There are 3,000,000 acres of everglade land that should average 30 tons of cane. An acre often produces 60 tons.

Sugar cane grows well in all parts of the State. Florida could be made the sugar bowl and sirup barrel of the United States.

Florida has 10,520,000 acres of flat woodland, 8,640,000 acres of pineland, 3,840,000 acres of hammock or hardwood land, and 3,840,000 acres of muck land. The other 6,876,000 acres are divided among rivers, lakes, and lowland prairies.

The State has 10,000,000 acres underlaid with red clay subsoil.

Nine oil wells are being drilled, but only slight traces of oil have been found.

Florida leads all States in diversity of food products, in variety of crops, fishes, birds, trees, flowers, and herbs. It excels in number of growing days, in production of phosphate, naval stores, fuller's earth, in fishing industry, in surface water, in length of coast line, in area of standing timber, in winter-grown truck crops, in annual rainfall, in coconuts, bananas, camphor, sisal, and sponges, in muck soil, in drainage of rich lands, in variety of hay crops, in equable climate, and leads all Southern States in increase of population and in value of crops per acre.

Florida has an invigorating atmosphere, cooled, warmed, and cleansed by ozone from pines and by breezes from silvery lakes and tropic seas. It has sublimity of landscape, beautiful water scenes, and an open air, health-giving climate which often grants marked increase in years to those in poor health. It is nature's sanitarium.

Florida is in the most ideal latitude and longitude on earth, the warmest in winter, the coolest in summer. We are in the same latitude with the land which the Lord said would flow with milk and honey and in which Jesus Christ and the Christian religion were born.

Florida is a Commonwealth wherein every worthy person from every clime is welcomed, whether as a new citizen or visitor; where millionaires with the whole earth to choose from come and build their stately mansions; where professional men and men of industry find recreation; where an intelligent, hospitable, energetic, and patriotic citizenship live, labor, and love.

Florida is the playground of the western continent, the garden of the United States, where babbling brooks, rippling lakes, silvery rivers, and crystal seas blend in eternal melody with stately palms, gorgeous magnolias, flaming poinsettas, and myriad song birds; where generous sunbeams, salt sea breezes, and mellow moonlight make one forget his troubles and his enemies, and where amid climatic luxury, incomparable beauty, and the fragrance of flowers, he may hear nature's seductive invitation, "abide with us forever."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, if there ever was a time when this Government intended to put a stop to the unconstitutional and unbusinesslike way of becoming the money lender of the whole world, it seems to me we have reached that time. During the war there was a state of feeling throughout the country which was naturally different from that which existed prior to the war and which should now exist, after the war has been over for so long a time.

The President of the United States said that the Government and the people should come back to normalcy. No doubt he meant that they should; but when are we to come back to normalcy—to-day, to-morrow, next year, or 10 years from now? Have we the constitutional right to tax our people in order to lend money to every nation on earth that wants to borrow it? From what source do we get such authority? What line of the Constitution authorizes it? Among the purposes of taxation, who will say that we have been given power to take the tax money of the people, which in our custody is a trust fund, and misappropriate it by lending it to nations that we know will never pay and that never intend to pay?

Much talk has been indulged in here about moral obligations. Do Senators on this floor owe no moral obligations to their own constituents? Do they owe no legal obligations to them?

This appropriation of $20,000,000 for the reclamation of arid lands in the West has been linked by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] with the Liberian loan, and you can not consider one without thinking of the other. At this time the one can be defended as easily as the other, in my judgment.

How often have we heard the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] say that the expenses of the Government should be reduced; that the Army should be cut down; that the Navy should be cut down; that all the expenses of the Government should come down? In every one of those positions I have taken my stand with him, because I honestly believed that during the war period our Government almost ran mad with extravagance; but everybody expected that when the war was over the expenses of the Government would be reduced, that the burdens of the taxpayer would be lightened, and the door of hope opened to the people who were almost in despair on account of their financial condition.

I hope I will not be understood by the Senate or the country as having any feeling of hostility to the great West. From my very childhood that part of our country has held me with a fascination which still holds good. But there should be some sanity, some reason, some moderation, some wisdom, in our expenditure of the money which is placed in our control. If there is any one thing of which this country has a superabundance now, it is cultivatable land, land ready for the plow, land ready for the man who can cultivate it, the man with the means to operate it.

There is the abandoned farm in New England which says so. There are abandoned farms in New York which say so. There are abandoned farms all over the South which say so. At this time we do not need to have any swamp lands drained. Give us the wherewith to till the uplands which are already in cultivation and the lowlands which have already been drained. What is true of the South is true of other sections. There is land enough for every man who wants to put his hand to the plow or to the hoe and make crops.

The irrigated farm is the rival and the menace of the farm that is not irrigated. Let the Government furnish its money, empty the Treasury onto the arid lands of the West, build colossal dams, send out irrigating ditches, and let the farmer have moisture whenever he wants it, not too much and not too little, but just enough; and in the long run that farmer will be the ruin of the farmer who has to depend upon the passing clouds and the uncertainties of climate. These irrigated farms are the rivals of the East, the North, the Middle West, and the South.

Not on that account would I vote against any reasonable proposition for the reclamation of arid lands, but here at the heel of the session, when we have voted money with a recklessness which has astounded conservative observers, when we have taken more than half a billion dollars a year in taxes off the richest people, off the people who made billions of dollars out of the blood of our soldiers who were fighting abroad, while with a tariff bill which will soon come back here we are placing almost unbearable burdens on every necessary of life, it seems a crime against our people and recreancy to our trust to be putting out $20,000,000 more to irrigate arid lands.

As to this Liberian loan, who expects that it would ever be paid? I really would like to see what Senator on this side or the other would venture to rise in his place and say that he honestly expected that Liberia would ever repay that loan. Nobody ever expects it to be repaid. What is more, Liberia will not get enough of that money as, invested in bacon, would make a frying pan smell across this Chamber.

Of what does Liberia consist? In a book which I sent for yesterday and got from the Library, chapter 65, page 138, it is said:

> The approximate total coast population of civilized Liberia, mostly Christians, and of mixed American and indigenous negro races, amounts to 50,000.

We are going to lend or give $5,000,000 to 50,000 negroes in Liberia. I would rather give it to the negroes in Washington City. I would rather give it to the negroes in Alabama or the negroes in Georgia, whose needs for it are much greater. In Liberia the negro does not have to wear anything in particular, except, perhaps, a pleasing expression of countenance. He can live on the natural products of the soil. He does not have to build a house to live in unless he wants to put on style. He can live on the broad bosom of nature and draw his nourishment from it as a child would from the bosom of its mother.

Five million dollars to be given to 50,000 negroes! That is a hundred dollars apiece for every negro man, every negro woman, and every negro child in Liberia, and what, in the name of God, could they do with the money if they got it? Suppose a negro family in Liberia consists of an average of five; there would be a gift of $500 to every family. Oh, what a jubilation there would be in Washington City if we made a present of $500 to every negro family in the District of Columbia. We would doubtless have to submit to the affliction of serenades for a week or so.

Mr. President, I think there has been a general misapprehension about the origin of Liberia. In the report of the committee apparently an attempt has been made to impress the Congress and the country with the idea that Liberia was founded by the Government of the United States; that it is a kind of an adopted child of this Government; that we hold it by some sort of trusteeship or guardianship; that we are responsible for its maintenance.

Nothing could be further from the truth. Liberia was a dream of philanthropists long before the Civil War. Those men who dreamed that if the free and intelligent negro were just taken away from corrupting contact with the white man and given a government of his own, given land of his own, given freedom which nothing but the horizon bounded, he would achieve a civilization, established Liberia. The colonization societies of this country and of England sent over the freedmen, selected the most intelligent, the men of the highest character. Henry Clay lent to that scheme and that dream the marvelous power of his eloquence in this very Capitol.

From that day to this there never has been a time when Liberia could stand alone. There never was a time when she could support herself. She was always, from year to year, supported and maintained by the colonization societies, and when the societies, in despair, exhausted in patience and in funds, ceased to send money to Liberia, she went into debt to European nations and to American financiers, and the real essence of this so-called Liberian loan is to pay off her debts and to pay them to American and European financiers.

If we set this example it will become a precedent, and every lawyer here knows that a precedent, once set, has almost the power of a statute. If we begin it, we will never end it. Liberia will be our tar baby and we will never get loose from it.

Mr. President, if it had been proposed to lend Liberia $5,000,000 out of what England owes us, the proposition might have been more attractive. If it had been proposed to lend to Liberia $5,000,000 out of what France owes us, then the proposition might have been more warmly welcomed. But England has not paid us a cent and apparently is not making any motion like a nation that intends to pay its honest debts.

During the Revolutionary War, when our struggling colonies were maintaining against overwhelming odds a long struggle for the glorious privilege of being independent, we were loaned money by Holland, France, and Spain, and almost before the smoke floated away from the last gun that was fired we had paid those debts. In 1917–18 our money and our men saved England and France. The war has been over since November, 1918, and not one dollar that crossed the seas has recrossed them. We paid the freight on the soldiers who went to England's relief and we probably paid the freight on the gold that we loaned her, and she has not paid the freight either way.

In the Washington Post of Sunday, September 10, 1922, there appeared a leading article signed by the writer whose nom de plume is "Ex-Attaché." He speaks of the almost unlimited wealth of France. He says that France to-day is paying a pension to the King of Sweden, the lineal descendant of Bernadotte, who betrayed Napoleon, led armies against France, and stood guard around the scaffold while the head of Queen Marie Antoinette was being struck off by the guillotine. If there is any debt that might be confiscated or declared obsolete and no longer binding, especially upon this generation, that seems to me to be one of them—and there are others equally farcical. The other debts that France is paying are given by the writer of the article. Then he goes on to tell how rich France is, what are her assets, and said:

> Yet those assets are enormous, in many respects incalculable. Thus, what can one say of the colossal phosphate resources of Algeria and Tunis?

How did France get Algeria and Tunis? By conquest. Every square mile of the land which France wrested from those natives was soaked with the blood of natives who were defending their independence just as our ancestors defended ours.

Again:

> Of the apparently inexhaustible potash fields discovered last year in Morocco, which properly exploited are in themselves sufficient to pay off the entire national debt of France.

What do you think, Mr. President, of a country that inspires a special writer to tell the whole world that her potash beds in Morocco would pay off her entire national debt, when she will not pay one single franc on the enormous debt of principal and interest that she owes us?

Is this the time to take more money out of the people's Treasury and give it to a foreign country, white or black, little or big? What will they say to us back home? What excuse can we give when we go back to those who sent us here and tell those who have in their houses little to eat, and in whose wardrobes there is little to wear, and in whose soul there is little hope for the future? What will they say to us when we tell them that one of the last things we did was to give $20,000,000 to bring in some more desert lands on the other side of the continent and give $5,000,000 to a lot of buccaneering financiers, European and American, who loaned money to Liberia?

RIVER AND HARBOR PROJECTS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the other day while I was absent I understand that the bill (H. R. 10766) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was taken up for consideration and passed. I conceive the bill to be a very imprudent one, to use a mild expression, at this time, and to contain many items wholly unjustified and unjustifiable. I desire to enter a motion for a reconsideration of the action of the Senate by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The Chair desires to suggest to the Senator from Utah that a motion to reconsider must be made by a Senator voting on the prevailing side. The Senator prefaced his remarks by stating that he was not present when the bill was passed.

Mr. KING. I do not understand that the rule excludes a Senator who was an absentee from entering the motion. If that were true no one might be able to enter a motion to reconsider who happened to be absent. I know the question was raised some time ago. I am not sure whether it was raised in open session, but the views of those with whom I conversed at the time were adverse to the position just suggested by the Chair.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, there can be no harm done by a slight delay that we may look into the question, if there is any doubt about it. Why not let the matter rest for an hour or two so that we may go on and dispose of the pending amendment?

Mr. KING. I have no objection to that. I want to say that certainly there ought not to be any objection to the motion prevailing, or rather the opportunity being given to enter the motion, because a bill which involves nearly $50,000,000 directly, and perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars indirectly, ought to be fully considered and there ought to be an opportunity for a full discussion of a subject so momentous. But I shall accept the suggestion of my friend from Kansas and bring up the question a little later.

TRADE WITH CHINA—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I want to give notice to all who are interested in the subject, that immediately after the completion of the routine morning business to-morrow I intend to ask the Senate to consider the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 4810) to authorize the incorporation of companies to promote trade in China. I think every one should know that the conference report is coming up at that time.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States Government for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before proceeding to a brief discussion of the bill before us, I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution and I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent to present a resolution which he asks to have read by the Secretary. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 348) was read, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that the chairman of the Shipping Board has announced in the newspapers that the board intends, in the event that the impending ship subsidy bill be enacted into law, to advance to private parties $25,000,000 to finance the construction of a ship of 70,000 tons burden and that the board desired to expend at least $400,000,000 of public moneys to finance the construction of additional ships by private parties; and

Whereas it is reported that officials, agents, and employees of the Shipping Board, under the guise of hearings and otherwise, are carrying on a propaganda in favor of the ship subsidy bill, and are spending large amounts of public moneys in various ways in the furtherance of such propaganda: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the chairman of the Shipping Board be required and directed to report to the Senate whether or not the board intends to finance the construction of additional ships by private parties and if so, to report to the Senate the details of such plan and the money it intends to advance for such purpose, and further to report the amount of any and all moneys that have or are being expended for newspaper articles, in advertising, traveling expenses, hearings, lectures, addresses, or other means of propaganda to promote the passage of said ship subsidy bill, together with a statement of the activities of the officials, agents, and employees of the Shipping Board with respect thereto.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution may be printed and lay upon the table. At an early date I shall present it to the Senate and ask its adoption. May I submit a few words respecting the resolution?

The Shipping Board and its activities have been the subject of discussion in Congress for a number of years, and I have no doubt but what for a number of years to come they will be the subjects of discussion. I feel sure that Congress has not felt any antipathy toward the Shipping Board, but upon the contrary has desired to find its virtues and discover whatever it has done that might be deemed worthy of commendation. But candor compels me to say that the Shipping Board from the beginning has failed to measure up to its responsibilities or to perform the important task assigned to it. Its record has called for censure and criticism, and the investigations made have justified many of the charges which have been laid at its door—charges of inefficiency, incompetency, waste, and extravagance.

It was hoped that when the reorganization occurred, under what is known as the Jones Act, reforms would be effectuated and measures adopted that would speedily give to the country a satisfactory merchant marine. I think there is general disappointment over the work of the Shipping Board, and a feeling that the situation of the board is as hopeless now as it has been in the past. I have felt, and I know that [illegible]ew has been shared by others, that the present Shipping Board, [illegible] at least some of the members, and particularly the president, have been too much concerned in advertising and in carrying on a propaganda in behalf of the passage of a ship subsidy bill. For months the press has been filled with statements in favor of the ship-subsidy bill, many of which have emanated from Mr. Lasker or others connected with the Shipping Board or those who would benefit by the terms of such bill. It would appear that some of the officials of the Shipping Board are more interested in carrying on a propaganda to secure a ship subsidy than they are in executing the law and discharging the duties which rest upon them.

They seem to forget that their duty is to carry out policies declared by Congress and enacted into law. They exhibit the faults of other executive branches of the Government and devote much of their time to securing legislation and molding public sentiment—time which should be expended in performing the duties which the law lays at their doors. Mr. Lasker, as we all know, is engaged in the advertising business, and it would seem as though he has employed many avenues to exploit his views concerning the ship subsidy bill and to carry on a nation-wide campaign in behalf of the bill which, it is understood, he helped to frame, and then "wished" on the present administration.

If reports are true, Mr. Lasker is spending much of his time in writing articles in favor of the ship subsidy bill, or making addresses upon the same theme, or visiting various parts of the country and seeking to secure the approval of business men and business organizations, of the scheme to take millions and hundreds of millions out of the Treasury of the United States, to be paid as subsidies to shipping interests of the United States. And it is also currently reported that other members of the Shipping Board, as well as employees and agents of the board, give a portion of their time to a similar propaganda. I have been advised that some members of the board who have been conducting hearings under one particular section of the act have been quite interested in advocating the ship-subsidy plan and have obtained testimony in support of that view. I deny the right of the Shipping Board or any of its members to employ their positions to procure this legislation. They were not invested with executive authority and appointed to executive positions in order to conduct a nation-wide campaign in favor of some shipping scheme.

They have become interested in a plan which does not meet the approval of millions of the American people. Mr. Lasker has not been employed to carry on a campaign for the shipping subsidy bill. With the record of the Shipping Board, it will be, in my judgment, a long time before it will obtain further appropriations for shipbuilding purposes.

I regret that the board and those controlling it have not brought reforms and worked improvements which were promised and which the public were led to believe would be forthcoming.

The present course of the Shipping Board, in my opinion, compels continued loss, if not waste, which will culminate in irretrievable loss, if not disaster. I am informed that the board, in its operations, is perpetuating the condemned M. O. 4 contracts, which were devised several years ago and under which great losses to the Government resulted, and indeed under which frauds were perpetrated. The Shipping Board is losing millions of dollars annually under its present plan of operation. It permits rate contests to continue which result in enormous losses to the Government. Having the power to discontinue these contracts, it does not do so, and having the authority to prevent some of the evil results of the present intercoast rate warfare, which take millions monthly out of the Treasury, it complacently permits the evils to continue. It pursues a course which will inevitably result in most of the pioneer contracts for the sale of ships being abrogated or destroyed, thus causing great hardships and losses to bona fide purchasers, and the ultimate transfer to a very limited number of huge corporations or syndicates of practically all of the ships title to which is claimed by the Shipping Board.

As Senators know, many ships were sold by the Shipping Board a few years ago at war level prices, or slightly below such levels. Part payment was made by the purchasers, who in most instances have endeavored to operate the ships for the purpose of developing an American merchant marine. With the great slump in world prices for ships, and with the great shrinkage in ocean traffic, they have encountered most serious difficulties. It will be impossible for them to pay for the ships according to the contracts entered into.

In my opinion, it is not only imprudent and unwise, but unjust for the Shipping Board to attempt to enforce these contracts. They should be rewritten and the purchase price scaled down, and fair and just terms offered to the purchasers. It is of no benefit to the Government to destroy these contracts and deprive the purchasers of the ships, and then sell them for from $25 to $30 per ton to some syndicate which may be formed for the purpose of controlling or attempting to control our merchant marine.

There is a general feeling that the policy being pursued by the Shipping Board will result in practically all of the ships passing into the hands of some shipping combine on the Pacific coast and a limited number of shipping organizations constituting a combine upon the Atlantic coast, who will be the beneficiaries of any shipping subsidy bill that may be driven through Congress. I protest against any policy that will bring about such a result. The ships ought to be sold to as many purchasers as possible, and those who have purchased and have acted in good faith and are attempting to operate the ships purchased should be treated with consideration and a policy adopted that will enable them to retain the ships.

Mr. President, I shall have more to say upon this subject at a later time, but I want to add that I can appreciate the wisdom of the steering committee of the Republican Party in not attempting to push through the subsidy bill at this session of Congress. President Harding, we are told, is very anxious for the passage of this bill. Mr. Lasker, who seems to run the Shipping Board and determine the administration's policy with respect to the operations of the Shipping Board, desires the shipping subsidy. He not only desires a subsidy, but as the resolution which I have offered indicates, wants a large appropriation in order that other ships may be built. I think the Republican leaders are beginning to hear from the people and to learn that the present subsidy bill can never be passed. The American people are not for it. They perceive that it is a sinister measure and will not be promotive of the best interests of our country.

Mr. President, I shall now briefly discuss the Liberian loan bill before us and the amendment thereto which has been offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

My first inclination was to support the bill under consideration. I had been told that there was a moral, if not a legal, obligation upon the part of our Government to consummate a contract which had been entered into by the former administration with the Government of Liberia. I have investigated the question and have examined all the facts presented by Secretary Hughes in support of this bill. I have reached the conclusion that there is no moral obligation, nor indeed is there any obligation whatever, resting upon the United States to loan to Liberia $5,000,000 or any sum or amount whatever.

Liberia entered the war and in so doing performed an act which entitled her people to great credit. There was no promise of financial payment as an inducement to secure her accession to the cause of the allied nations and the associated powers.

It is true we are profoundly interested in the welfare of Liberia and desire that it shall be so governed as to bring happiness and prosperity to its people. The American people are deeply interested in the welfare of all Republics and particularly such as have emancipated themselves from imperialistic rule and established policies calculated to bring freedom to all within their borders. Liberia particularly excites not only the interest but the sympathy of the American people. That country is inhabited by members of the Negro race. It is unnecessary to refer to the great obstacles which this race has encountered and which it will encounter in the future. Where any considerable number of the Negro people associate themselves together and seek to maintain an independent and enlightened government, they should have the sympathy and the moral support and, indeed, the material support of all Christian nations. Speaking for myself, I wish the Liberian Republic success. I hope that it will meet every problem with courage and success and that the people within its borders will enjoy increasing prosperity and that freedom and independence which will justify the appellation of the "Liberian Republic."

I have no doubt that a loan of $5,000,000 to the Liberian Republic would be of some benefit to it at this particular moment. However, I think there would result some evils which in the end might overshadow all benefits. It is a policy not to be commended or followed except under peculiar and unusual conditions of powerful nations; that is, of taking over the fiscal control of small and weak nations. And, of course, when a loan is made by a strong nation to a weak one, particularly where the latter is regarded as being incompetent to exercise absolute control over its internal and fiscal affairs, the creditor nation accompanies the loan with imposed conditions which interfere with the autonomy and the independence of the borrowing nation. In other words, the debtor nation puts itself more or less under the control of the creditor nation, and this very course tends to imperialism, to the establishment of such relations as lead to imperialistic policies and the subjugation of defenseless people.

Countries have been exploited by powerful nations through the extension of credits and the making of loans. Great international syndicates have been formed and exist to-day to loan money to weak and impoverished countries. Too often the terms imposed are onerous in the extreme; indeed, they are indefensible in morals. Sometimes concessions are demanded or high rates of interest are exacted or benefits and privileges are wrung from the borrowing peoples and countries which are not only humiliating but are oppressive and result in their exploitation. It seems to be a policy in these days for rich corporations or large financial interests to extend credits and make loans to small States that are rich in undeveloped resources, with a view of obtaining concessions and benefits which will prove financially of enormous advantage to the creditors extending the credits and making the loans. Of course, there are occasions that warrant nations and weak peoples obtaining credits and financial help from strong nations and peoples. No doubt Yugoslavia and some European countries have been benefited by loans recently made to them. Loans were made by Holland and Germany and France to many Americans, and important industries were developed in the United States by means of foreign capital.

But what I am particularly protesting against is the policy, which has too often been followed, of strong nations extending credits to feeble nations under terms which gave to the creditor nations dominating influence in the political and financial affairs of their debtors.

I have not approved of the course of our Government in entering Haiti and Santo Domingo, nor have I approved of the efforts which have been made by officials of our Government to induce, if not compel, Haiti to negotiate a loan in the United States of between twenty and thirty millions of dollars. The Haitian people are opposed to the occupancy of their territory by our military forces, nor do they desire the United States to interfere in the affairs of their Government. We are now imposing taxes, collecting duties, and directing the political affairs of the Haitian Republic. Indeed, it is no longer a Republic. We have also interfered in the affairs of the Republic of Santo Domingo and have provoked the antagonism of the people of that country.

Our course in dealing with both of these nations has provoked criticism in most South and Central American countries, and has aroused the fear of the people in some of these countries that the United States contemplates entering upon an imperialistic policy which will be a menace to the independence of Latin America.

Mr. President, this Republic must deal with all nations in a manner so just and so fair as to command not only the admiration but indeed the affection of fair-minded people throughout the world. We can not afford to encourage the exploitation of any country or any people, nor must we adopt a course that will lead capitalistic forces in the United States to believe that they will be supported by this Government in any enterprise or policy that is calculated to exploit the people of any country or secure for them any unfair advantages or illegitimate profits.

There is something in the Liberian record before us which seems to indicate that by means of this loan to Liberia we are to get some commercial advantages in that country. Certainly, if the loan is made, the United States will have more or less control over the Republic of Liberia. Americans will supervise her customs, control in part, at least, her expenditure, and direct her internal policy. These activities will mean more or less of control over the political life of Liberia.

Mr. President, it is a dangerous thing to be brought into such close relation with another nation. The relations which begin in friendship, or at least grow out of the supposed necessity of an impoverished people, will probably end in animosity and deep-seated resentments.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator from Utah has probably not forgotten that the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York and the associated firm of Morgan & Co. have recently made loans to three of the South American countries for 50 years, and have obtained financial control of their resources?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am somewhat familiar with the transactions to which the Senator refers, and his view seems to corroborate the position which I have taken. I have no doubt but what some of our South American friends require capital for their development, and there can be no wrong in their seeking credits here or in other countries. I have no objection to American capital being employed to aid other countries and the people of other countries. However, I do look with some little degree of apprehension upon policies which result in loans being made not imperatively needed by small or weak countries, or where they are made under conditions that are oppressive or lead to the belief that the benefits to be derived, or that will be derived, by the borrowing country are entirely disproportionate to the obligations passed to the creditors. We hear of cases where the borrowing nation got but a small part of the loan, and where concessions, commissions, and evaporating or sinkhole places consumed a considerable part of the fund. Unfortunately there is a disposition upon the part of some international bankers or of capitalists who make international loans to raise international questions which may involve the countries in serious controversies in the event of any dispute arising over the loans made or the collections attempted to be enforced.

I have no objection to American financiers and capitalists making loans to Liberia or to any other country if they desire. I do not want them, however, in the event of their extending credits to other countries, or to the people of other lands, to attempt to have the Government of the United States perform the functions of a collecting agency. I do not mean that our Government should refrain from discharging whatever obligations rest upon it, including the protection of American citizens and American rights in all parts of the world. Americans must not, however, seek to exploit weak and defenseless people or to take advantage of the pecuniary necessities of impoverished nations, and then expect the Government of the United States to guarantee their investments or to enforce usurious contracts.

Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho has offered an amendment which in effect provides that $20,000,000 shall be placed in a reclamation fund to aid in the development of new reclamation projects. He has told us that certain measures were agreed upon by the steering committee of the Republican Party, which were to be considered before the adjournment of Congress. I do not recall the entire personnel of the Republican steering committee. I congratulate, however, the astuteness exhibited by this committee in the selection of some of the measures which it has brought to the attention of Congress. However, I express my surprise at what I was about to call the stupidity of the committee—but perhaps that word is not parliamentary, and I therefore withdraw it—at its selection of other bills to be acted upon this session. The Liberian loan bill is one of the preferred bills. The steering committee, in my opinion, showed no sagacity in insisting upon the passage of this bill. However, upon second thought, it may be said that there was political wisdom in this selection. It is known that there are a great many voters in the North who are reputed to be Republicans and who belong to the Negro race. They have not been satisfied with Republican policies and with the administration of President Harding. Perhaps the steering committee that controls Republican legislation in the Senate believes the Republican cause would be helped in the coming election if the colored voters could be placated. Doubtless, that is the reason for the attempt to force this bill through Congress, and, undoubtedly the same reason prompted the steering committee to give priority to what is known as the Dyer antilynching bill. There are many important and vital measures upon the calendar and before the committee—measures affecting the welfare and the prosperity of the American people. These measures are not found upon the preferred list. The Republican steering committee relegates them to the rear, but in its partisanship, in its efforts to play politics, it holds Congress in session for the consideration of the two measures which I have just mentioned.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edge	McCumber	Sheppard
Borah	Ernst	McLean	Shields
Broussard	Fletcher	McNary	Smoot
Bursum	France	Moses	Sterling
Cameron	Glass	Nelson	Sutherland
Capper	Gooding	New	Swanson
Colt	Hale	Nicholson	Trammell
Culberson	Harreld	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Harrison	Pepper	Watson, Ga.
Curtis	Heflin	Phipps	Willis
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Rawson
du Pont	McCormick	Robinson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and the following Senators answered to their names when called:

Ball	Simmons	Warren	Watson, Ind.
King

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. KING. I asked the Senator from Idaho a few moments ago if he had not failed to assign as one of the reasons for the the passage of this bill the supposed benefits to the Republican Party from its enactment. I called his attention to the fact that there were a large number of colored voters in the North; that undoubtedly the Republican leaders desired to strengthen their party and hoped to do so by leading the colored voters to believe that the Republican Party was their friend, and as proof of such friendship it proposed to loan $5,000,000 to the Republic of Liberia.

But the Republican steering committee did not place any reclamation bill upon its program. The development of the arid lands of the West apparently is of no interest to Republican leaders. They are too intent upon passing tariff bills that will rob and plunder the American people, and increase the wealth of predatory interests in our country, to think of irrigation or the real and vital interests of the Republic.

Various reclamation bills have been offered during this session, but it is apparent that none will be passed. Several months ago western Senators and Representatives conferred together with a view to reporting a bill that would meet the requirements of the West and the demands of the country. The Smith-McNary bill was the result of these conferences. It became a part of the bonus bill in the Senate. It has, however, been eliminated from the bonus bill by the conference committee, and therefore we have no reclamation measure before us which has the support of the Republican leaders or the Republican steering committee which determines what measures shall be brought before the Senate.

Mr. President, if Congress would cede the public lands to the respective States within which they are situate, there would be no appeal now being made for appropriations for reclamation projects. For many years Congress has been importuned to pass title to the public lands, nonmineral in character, to the States. Senators know that the thirteen original States owned all the lands within their borders. Texas owned a great empire. The States have handled their own public lands far better than the Federal Government has handled the land which it controlled. If the Federal Government will not take steps to reclaim its millions of acres of arid lands, then it should convey them to the States so that they may adopt measures for their reclamation. The Government, in the public lands' States, owns from 50 per cent to 70 per cent or more of their entire area. This vast domain is withdrawn from taxation. The States are compelled to extend all the benefits that flow from their authority over the public domain. Upon the people of these States rests the burden of carrying on the State governments, notwithstanding the fact that in some instances the greater part of the lands within the State are owned by the Federal Government. Moreover, the Federal Government has assumed jurisdiction over most of the streams of the West and under the Federal power act have practically made it impossible for the inhabitants of the various States to utilize to the highest advantage the waters arising within their States.

Mr. President, I shall support the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho. It does not present the reclamation question as it should be presented, nor does it deal with the subject in the comprehensive way which I and others desire. But it proposes something and will be of immeasurable benefit to the West and to the people of the United States. It will be the foundation upon which a number of reclamation projects will rest. It will bring many thousands of acres of arid lands under cultivation and provide homes for thousands of people. It will add to the wealth of our country and afford opportunity for hundreds of ex-service men to acquire suitable homes. The Republican Party, pledged to a constructive reclamation project, has shown its utter contempt for such pledge and proposes now to accentuate its opposition to the development of the public lands of the West.

We will find the Republican leaders voting $5,000,000 for Liberia, but not a cent to furnish homes to the soldiers or the people of the United States by reclaiming the valleys in our western domain. Republican leaders may think this is good politics, but in my opinion it will be resented by the American people and condemned by those whose votes they are so frantically seeking to obtain.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, it seems evident that this discussion will probably continue through the balance of the day, and I am going to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a bill which was passed over on the calendar yesterday when I was absent simply because no one was here to speak for the bill. It is House bill 11872 and is a measure of great importance. I think we can dispose of it in a few minutes, if we can bring it before the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. If it would take no time, I should not object, but I understand the Senate is about ready for a vote on the pending amendment, and I hope we can get a vote on it.

Mr. EDGE. If a vote can be secured now, of course, I do not want to interfere with it; but the bill to which I have referred is one asked for by the Secretary of War. It relates to the codification of the laws of Panama. It seems to be a measure of extreme importance. It has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, of which I am chairman, and I simply want to get it before the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish the Senator would delay his request for a little while.

Mr. EDGE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I heard just the latter part of the remarks of the Senator from Kansas a short time ago with reference to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho and with reference to repayment of the amounts due by settlers on irrigated lands. I gathered from what was said that he charged or asserted that those moneys were not being repaid by the settlers.

I had on the wall of the Senate a few days ago a chart showing the condition of those payments. That chart showed that the net expenditure of the Government on the reclamation projects amounted to about $130,000,000; that the amount which has become due to the Government from the settlers is about $15,000,000; and that of that amount about $12,500,000 has been paid. In other words, it showed that of the amount which has matured under the laws passed by Congress only about two million and a half were unpaid at the time the chart was prepared. It seems to me that shows pretty clearly that the settlers are repaying the money almost as fast as it becomes due.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I gave a statement of the amounts which had been repaid. The position I took was that if those people received large sums for their crops under the irrigation projects, they should themselves assist by paying back to the fund as fast as they could what they owe to it. That is the position I took.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There can be no controversy, it seems to me, over a statement like that, except for the implication it conveys that they are not doing it. I assert that they are repaying that money as fast as they can and as they are required to do, and the figures I think show it.

The Senator from Kansas will bear me out, I know, from his knowledge of the conditions in my State, at any rate, that under not only the reclamation projects in the State of Washington but under the Indian projects, to which he referred, the moneys are being repaid to the Government. The settlers on the reclamation projects in the State of Washington have repaid to the reclamation fund almost $3,000,000 of the amount of money that was expended in the construction of those projects. But with the statement as the Senator from Kansas makes it, now I have no controversy at all, except, as I said, in the implication that those settlers are not repaying the money. The figures I have given show that they are repaying the money.

I wish the Senator from Idaho would change his amendment to provide for an appropriation of $100,000,000, and I will state why; $20,000,000 applied to the projects now under way will amount to very little in the prosecution of those projects. According to the estimates of the engineers, it will take about $112,000,000 to complete the projects which are now under way, to complete the projects which have been begun and which are now being carried on. I want to say, Mr. President, that in my judgment those projects are being carried on in an uneconomical way, not because of the inefficiency of the Reclamation Service but because of the lack of funds to carry them on. You can not carry on 30 projects in different parts of the country economically and expeditiously with the small amount of money they have had, six, seven, or eight million dollars a year.

The $20,000,000 proposed to be appropriated by the Senator from Idaho, if spread over these 30 projects, would not go very far. In my judgment, if we should appropriate $100,000,000 the Reclamation Service could lay out a program of a yearly expenditure of fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five million dollars, which would not embarrass the Treasury, but which would enable the Government to carry on these projects economically and rapidly to completion and save to the Government and in the end save many millions of dollars to the people who will really have to repay this money to the Government. In other words, it would be economical upon the part of the Government, in my judgment, to make available money which can be appropriated as it is needed to carry out a well-prepared and a well-considered program for the completion of those projects. So I would much rather vote for an appropriation of $100,000,000 on those grounds than the $20,000,000, although I am going to vote for the $20,000,000.

Just a word or two with reference to the report that the Senate conferees on the bonus bill have receded from the McNary amendment. I regret that very much for the reasons I gave when that amendment was under consideration. I think the Senate conferees should have held out a little bit longer with reference to that amendment, which was carried in the Senate on a roll call, according to my recollection, by a vote of 2 to 1, if not more than that. Rather than that the Senate conferees should have receded on that amendment, I think that bill should have been brought back to the Senate and the expression of the Senate taken upon the question as to whether or not we should recede from that amendment. Of course, it may be said that would cause some delay. I do not think it would cause any delay in the ultimate enactment of the measure. I feel satisfied that if the expression of the Senate had been adhered to, we would have gotten some result. I trust that when the report comes into the Senate, the Senate will reject the report and send that bill back to conference with the amendment put on in the Senate by a vote of more than 2 to 1. I say that as a friend of the bonus bill, one who voted for it. I believe action of that kind would be in the interest of the soldier in the long run and in the passage of the bill.

We will probably be told, when the conference report comes up, that the presence of that amendment upon the bill endangers its being signed by the President. We were told that when the bill was under consideration. We will probably be told of some intimations the President has given with reference to it. I do not know how true it is, but I have been told that a Senator asked the President if the presence of this amendment on the bill would make it any easier for him to sign it, and he said no. We will probably be told that from the floor of the Senate, and no doubt that will be used as an argument to show that the presence of this amendment would endanger the signing of the bill. Yet I have no doubt but that if the President had been asked if the presence of this amendment hindered its signing or made any difference in the situation with reference to its signing, he would have said no.

I do not know whether or not the President is going to veto the bonus bill, but if he does it will not be on account of the McNary amendment. It will be for reasons already stated by the President which he considers ample justification for his vetoing the bill. If the President vetoes that bill it will be because Congress has made no specific provision in the bill, as it ought to do, for the raising of the money to pay the bonus, not because of the presence upon it of the McNary amendment.

As I have said, I regret that the Senator from Idaho did not provide in his amendment for an appropriation of $100,000,000. I think it would be much wiser from every standpoint. But I shall vote for the amendment as it is.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, some days ago, when the McNary reclamation amendment was proposed to the bonus bill, I read to the Senate a statement of the figures furnished me by the Reclamation Service showing the amounts of money expended for reclamation and the amounts returned to the Treasury. During the course of my discussion the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] asked me if I had the figures down to the 1st of July, 1922. I replied that I did not have them, but would obtain them from the Reclamation Service and would put them in the RECORD at the first opportunity. Inasmuch as it has been asserted that the repayments are small, it seems to me it is not only my duty but certainly it is an appropriate time when I should read the statements showing every dollar appropriated for reclamation and every dollar returned to the Treasury by the particular projects.

Senators will be amazed that such a large percentage of the money appropriated—no; I must not use the word "appropriated." The money never "came out" of the Federal Treasury in a strict sense. The funds came as the avails of public-land sales in public-land States.

The reclamation law was signed by President Roosevelt on June 17, 1902. I ask that there be included in my remarks at this point a letter dated August 31, 1922, from Mr. Morris Bien, Acting Director of the Reclamation Service. Therefore the information I now furnish to the Senate is but 13 days old and the status of the figures could not have changed much in 13 days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Washington, August 31, 1922.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In compliance with the request contained in your letter of August 23, I am sending you herewith copies of the Reclamation Record for June and July, 1922, containing a brief summary of 20 years of reclamation.

In 1921 the acreage cropped on the Reclamation Service projects, largely exclusive of lands under Warren Act contracts, amounted to 1,157,900 acres, producing crops to the value of $49,620,300, or $42.85 per acre, as compared with $14.52 per acre in the same year for the 10 leading crops of the United States as a whole, as stated by the Department of Agriculture. The aggregate value of all crops produced on the projects from the time water was first available up to and including 1921 amounted to $475,000,000. The value by years and the cumulative values are given in Table 6 on page 132 of the June issue of the Record.

I am also inclosing a separate from the twentieth annual report, containing on pages 7, 8, and 9, a table of settlement data for the years 1900 and 1920. This shows that in 1920 there were on the Reclamation Service projects 32,835 irrigated farms with a population of 125,214, and 223 project cities and towns with a population of 324,289. The large increases in the number of schools, churches, and banks, and especially of the amount of deposits are shown in the table.

The inclosed tabulation of financial data is on a slightly different basis from Appendix C printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the total investment being reduced by the amount of "other credits," covering materials and supplies transferred to other projects, leaving as "reimbursements" actual collections redeposited in the Treasury to the credit of the reclamation fund, the net investment not being affected by this change.

The total reimbursement into the reclamation fund to June 30, 1922, on account of the Government investment in the construction of the Reclamation Service projects amounts to $32,000,000, comprising $13,200,000 of repayments on the net cost of construction, $6,900,000 on account of water rentals, and the balance, reimbursements from various sources, such as power receipts, rentals of land and buildings, and other miscellaneous operations under the law, practically all of which are placed to the credit of the individual projects. In addition, about $9,400,000 has been paid by the water users on account of annual operation and maintenance charges, which are paid to the amount of about $1,500,000 each year and spent each year for current expenses of running the projects formally opened under public notice. Including the $9,400,000 of operation and maintenance charges, the books show a total repayment of $41,400,000 to June 30, 1922.

Very truly yours,

MORRIS BIEN, Acting Director.

Mr. ASHURST. There are, of course, some losses. I would be uncandid with the Senate if I were to pretend there had not been some losses. Indeed, I think the reclamation office will state that owing possibly to some insurmountable obstacle, some physical difficulty, or some event which no sagacity could have anticipated, probably 2 or 3 per cent of the moneys expended may be lost or never paid. Since the reclamation office began to function, or since the 17th of June, 1902, there has been expended from the funds derived from the sales of public lands in public-land States the sum of $171,873,362. I omit reference to pennies. Credits and repayments aggregate the sum of $41,351,434. This leaves a net investment of the Government in the sum of $130,521,927.

Under the law these projects could not repay all this money at one time. The law grants the right to distribute the payments throughout a period of 20 years. The first four or five years 2 per cent is repaid. When Senators reflect that the projects are limited in their payments to 2 per cent of the debt and that the 4 and 6 per cent payments come later, Senators will be amazed that the projects have returned such a large percentage of these moneys to the Treasury. I say to my friend from Kansas that I am astonished that such a well-informed Senator would have drawn the inference or stated that the projects were negligent in repaying.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I read the facts which were given by the department, and I think I read exactly the same figures which have been read by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I did not know that.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator's statement simply corroborates what I have said; that is all.

Mr. ASHURST. I was not aware that the Senator from Kansas read these figures. Doubtless he procured the figures he read from the same source whence I have procured my figures. However, I can not agree with my friend in view of the fact that on an investment which this Government has made of $171,000,000, which is not to be repaid for 20 years, and may not be repaid except 2 per cent for the first 2 or 3 years, there has been a credit of $41,351,000. I do not see how a Senator whose mind usually functions correctly could draw the inference that the payments have been slow.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Arizona yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. KING. I do not know whether or not the Senator has stated, but if he has not I am sure he will if he reaches that part of his remarks, that there have been but two direct appropriations from the Treasury of the United States for all the reclamation projects—one for $20,000,000, which was made in 1908, and one for $1,000,000 for what is known as the Elephant Butte Dam, which was a sort of a special project, at a more recent date. So the direct appropriations from the Treasury Department amount to but $21,000,000. The other sums, aggregating $135,000,000, to which the Senator has called attention, were either from the revolving fund created by repayments or from the amounts derived from the sale of public lands.

If the Senator will permit me, I desire to say that many of the lands which were sold and the proceeds from the sales of which were placed in the Treasury of the United States never would have been sold and could not have been sold except for the development of irrigation projects; in other words, the development of an irrigation project brought into the market contiguous territory belonging to the Government, and a market was found for that land. When the land was sold the proceeds derived from the sale thereof were devoted in part to reclamation projects. So the United States has only paid from the Treasury of the United States $21,000,000 for all the reclamation projects which we now find in the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has already included in the RECORD the tabulated statement which I hold in my hand, I shall not ask to have it again inserted. I would be content with the Senator's figures, but I do not know whether or not he has presented all the figures embraced in the table.

Mr. CURTIS. I read the figures as to the cost of each project, the value of the crops produced thereon for the last 10 years, and the amount which had been refunded.

Mr. ASHURST. I am not quarreling with the Senator's figures, because I know he would submit authentic figures; but I ask, because I think I have an amplified statement, that it also be included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[1] Contra.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the discussion, but this is one of the most vital subjects with which Congress can grapple.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator from Arizona yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand the Senator's table, it will show the amount of indebtedness which has matured on each project? I understand the Senator from Kansas did not present the figures showing the amount that had matured on each project.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not believe that the table which I have presented states that, though it is an elaborate table. I am not certain, however, that it states the amount which is still outstanding or which may become payable.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I refer to the amount which has matured.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall try to supply the figures as to the amount that has actually matured.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, I had a statement as to the lump sum, as I stated a while ago——

Mr. ASHURST. I know the Senator had that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And I supposed the table of the Senator from Arizona showed the amount that had matured upon each project.

Mr. ASHURST. If the table which I have asked be printed in the RECORD does not show it, I shall try to supply it, and I ask permission to insert that if I obtain the figures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, whatever men may say or howsoever they believe about the Government going into business or putting business into Government, when practical difficulties arise and calamities come that threaten the very existence of our primal industry, agriculture, it is not only constitutional but it is right and proper for a progressive Government to keep abreast of the problems of the day.

At this point, fearful lest some one may rise and say that the War Finance Corporation has been of no value to the people, I will submit some figures as to the energies of that organization. They were furnished to me on August 31 last by the assistant to the managing director.

These data that I am about to supply give in detail the classification of loans, whether to exporters, cooperative marketing associations, or to banking and financing institutions, and they show the advances made in financing the various industries under the different classifications up to August 15, 1922. I shall merely read the summary of advances up to August 15, 1922, to exporters, agricultural and live-stock associations, and banking and financing institutions under sections 21, 22, and 24 of the act approved January 4, 1921:

To exporters, $9,732,608; to cooperative marketing associations, $96,899,634; to banking and financing institutions, $233,972,230; to live-stock loan companies, $59,693,608; or a total of $400,298,081.

Without tiring the Senate to read all the figures, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD the statement showing the amounts of money loaned in each State and for what purposes used, whether for exports, whether to banking and financing institutions, or to live-stock and loan companies. These data, as I have said, have been furnished by the War Finance Corporation through its managing director.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the compilation will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WAR FINANCE CORPORATION,
Washington, August 31, 1922.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: In the absence of Mr. Meyer, I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of August 29. In accordance with your request, I take pleasure in sending you herewith a statement showing the loans approved by the War Finance Corporation from January 4, 1921, when it resumed operations, to and including August 15, 1922.

Very truly yours,

F. R. HARRISON,
Assistant to the Managing Director.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, before the Senator from Arizona yields the floor I should like to call his attention to the fact that the table which he has submitted does not show the amount that has matured upon each project. I think it really gives a more correct impression of the situation when the amount which has matured is ascertained, and then the portion of that amount which has been paid, because it is only the amount which has matured and which is unpaid which can be said to be delinquent so far as the irrigation projects are concerned.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct, and I regret that the table does not show that. I think that is an unfortunate omission. Of course, the figures were not compiled by me, but I assume that complete data will be furnished.

I conclude, Mr. President, by saying that the farmers of this country will not be remiss nor tardy in repaying the sums due from them on Federal irrigation projects. The farmers, the water users under Federal irrigation projects, the agricultural interests generally, and all those to whom loans have been made by the War Finance Corporation, will repay the Federal Government long before the foreign debt is repaid to the Federal Government by foreign governments to which we have loaned vast sums. There is no propaganda in the United States conducted by the farmers looking toward the ultimate escape from the repayment to the Federal Government of the money which it has advanced to the farmers; but there is being conducted in America by alleged Americans a skillful propaganda urging the United States to cancel the debts due the United States from foreign countries; indeed, Mr. President, some of the Americans who go to Europe, seeking to curry favor and obtain possibly an invitation to some social function, begin to give out interviews pointing out the necessity and the propriety of canceling the debts due to the United States by foreign governments. A celebrated poet said the other day that America had obtained the gold of the world, but that England had saved England's soul. That may be; we may or may not dispute whether in the recent war England saved her soul, but nobody will dispute that in the World War Uncle Sam saved England's hide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there have been few more important questions considered in the Senate that affect the great western section of the country than the amendment which is now pending to the Liberian loan joint resolution. Yet as I scan the Republican side of the Chamber I see less than five Republican Senators from the far West now in the Senate while this great question which means so much to them is being considered. I am sure as the people from that section read this debate and study the consequences of this amendment, whether it shall be adopted or defeated, they will view with no little complacency the fact that so many of their Senators were absent and had absconded during the consideration of this question.

I can not understand why the junior Senator from Washington—of course I see the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] in his seat—and the Senators from California are absent. I am going down the line. The Republican Senator from——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I do not yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. Will not the Senator——

Mr. HARRISON. I do not yield for the present. I refuse to yield. The remarks of the Senator from Kansas that have been so abundant in the RECORD to-day can not go in at this particular time. If the Senator wants to make a point of no quorum to bring in these Senators who will not stay here when the interests of their constituents are at stake, I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Ernst	McCumber	Smoot
Ball	Fletcher	McLean	Stanfield
Borah	France	McNary	Sterling
Broussard	Glass	Moses	Sutherland
Calder	Gooding	New	Swanson
Cameron	Hale	Nicholson	Trammell
Capper	Harreld	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Harrison	Pepper	Watson, Ga.
Curtis	Heflin	Phipps	Williams
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Robinson	Willis
Edge	King	Sheppard

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

[5] This amount represents an advance authorized to a cooperative marketing association doing business in Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota.

[6] This amount represents an advance authorized to a cooperative marketing association doing business in North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia.

[7] Includes advances aggregating $27,387,816.10 originally applied for and approved for export purposes (under section 21) and subsequently withdrawn by the applicants and resubmitted and approved as advances for agricultural purposes under section 24.

Does not include applications of cooperative associations, totaling $72,250,000, tentatively approved by the corporation to assist in financing the orderly marketing of wheat, cotton, and tobacco during the coming season.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BURSUM, Mr. COLT, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. NELSON, Mr. RAWSON, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. WATSON of Indiana answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, now that all the western Senators are in their seats, I hope they will remain here until we have finished the consideration of this amendment, which means so much to the far West.

Although I do not live in that great fertile and undeveloped country, with its wonderful natural resources and beautiful landscapes, I have always tried to help in the passage of any legislation that might be beneficial to it. I have voted for its reclamation projects, and for large appropriations to carry on its irrigation and reclamation policy. I am delighted that I have, and I am ready to do it again. I have been happy to-day to hear the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]—who, in my opinion, is one of the really great statesmen of this country, progressive, conscientious, courageous, always standing for what he thinks is right and for the interest of his people—as he has advocated this amendment, and pleaded with his colleagues on the other side of the aisle to help him out that he might in turn help the people of the far West.

He spoke one sentence to-day which will ring through the coming days, and echo through the coming weeks, and to which Senators on the other side must respond. People away out in the far western country, whether in mine or factory, on the ranch or in the hut, will read in the papers as it is heralded to them to-morrow morning the statement, aye, I might say, the indictment, and a truthful indictment it was, against the leadership of the Republican Party in the American Congress. I would impress upon the Senators who do me the kindness now to hear me the purport and force of the words the Senator from Idaho then uttered. You must respond to that indictment, because the people have faith in this apostle of the people, this independent thinker, this great progressive of the far West.

What is it he has said touching the leadership of the Republican Party? You promised to the people in Arizona, in Oklahoma, in Nevada, in Oregon, in Washington, and throughout the Pacific-Mountain States, aye, even unto Colorado, that you would do something for reclamation and irrigation. You promised to bring back legislation to them which would insure to that country something along those lines. Even in your platform it was enunciated. Let me read it to you. You bound yourselves that you would give to the people a reclamation and an irrigation policy—a policy that would really carry results and benefits to the people of the West. For fear you have forgotten it, let me read it again. Here is the plank of the Republican Party in 1920:

> We favor a fixed and comprehensive policy of reclamation to increase national wealth and production.
> We recognize in the development of reclamation through Federal action, with its increase of production and taxable wealth, a safeguard for the Nation.
> We commend to Congress a policy to reclaim lands and the establishment of a fixed national policy of development of natural resources in relation to reclamation through the now designated Government agencies.

There was not a western Senator or a western Representative as candidates in that campaign who did not proclaim that as one of the most important planks in the Republican platform. You pledged to them that you would exert your efforts and use all your ability in Congress to foster that policy and see that it became a law. Yet, a Senator of high standing in this body, at this late date after that plank was adopted, about two years, in beginning his speech upon the floor of the Senate, uttered these remarkable truths, and whether Senators from the far West would now prefer to engage in conversation upon the floor of the Senate or betake themselves into the lobbies rather than to hear it, I say through them to their constituents in the far West that you must give an account of your action, not only on this amendment but on other measures affecting the reclamation and irrigation policy of this country, to which I shall come later.

This is what the Senator from Idaho said:

> Mr. President, there is no mistaking the import of the Senator from Kansas.

He was speaking of one of the real leaders of the Republican Party in this Chamber, aye, the vice chairman of the Republican caucus of the Senate, one who stands as high here as any other; one who, as he casts his vote and rings out his voice, others flock in to follow, because the others know he is the leader to follow. So, following the speech of the Senator from Kansas, the Senator from Idaho said:

> Mr. President, there is no mistaking the import of the speech of the Senator from Kansas.

The Senator from Idaho knew that the Senator from Kansas, Republican leader, was speaking with authority, was voicing the expression of the Republican leadership in this Chamber; aye, further than that, because he is in constant conference with the President of the United States and the Cabinet members of this administration, the speech he made, as the Senator from Idaho knew, was carrying great import.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I will yield in one moment. The Senator from Kansas is possessed of great modesty; that is one of the characteristic virtues of my distinguished friend from Kansas, and I am sure that if he should now rise to speak, he would say that he was speaking his own individual sentiments; but those who know the power of the man and his great influence would not believe that if he should state it, but would know that he was speaking authoritatively. I now yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator heard me state, in response to the remark of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], that I had not consulted with anyone connected with the administration, and that I had not consulted with any Member of the Senate with reference to my attitude upon this question; that I had looked it up after the Senator from Idaho had offered his amendment, and after the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] had asked me to take charge of the joint resolution because he had to be absent as a member of the conference committee.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Kansas, as I knew, would live up to his reputation as we know him, of being perfectly modest. He is too much so. This is what the Senator from Idaho said:

> There is no mistaking the import of the speech of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. I have known for some time that the leaders upon this side of the Chamber—
>
> The Republican side of the Chamber—
> propose to kill the reclamation policy.

Listen, Senators, you from the far West who are interested in reclamation and irrigation for your States; consider the meaning of the indictment brought by the distinguished Senator from Idaho:

> I have known for some time that the leaders upon this side of the Chamber propose to kill the reclamation policy. There has not been an effort here for a move made that has not been checkmated by these gentlemen.

What gentlemen? Republican leaders. Who said that? Not a Democratic Senator, but a great progressive Republican from the far West—from the State of Idaho. He further said:

> The Senator from Kansas has been perfectly frank in announcing to the country that the policy is at an end so far as the leaders of the Republican Party in this Chamber are concerned.

Yet in the approaching election Senators on the other side will go back to their respective States and appeal for reelection, and appeal for the election of colleagues in their respective States, in the face of this indictment against Republican leadership in the Congress of the United States.

You can not fool the people of the West. They are intelligent, they read the papers, they study the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, they scan your votes, and, sirs, when you take back to them an empty basket, as you will do touching reclamation at this time, they will know the reason why, namely, that the Republican leadership have decreed that you shall not have reclamation legislation for the West at this time.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I would like to ask the distinguished Senator from Mississippi what amount of money was appropriated during the eight years of the Democratic administration for the reclamation of the arid lands of the West, for which great country the Senator is now shedding crocodile tears? And I am glad he is interested in the question.

Mr. HARRISON. My friend, the Senator from Colorado, whom I like so much that I almost love him, is following in this instance the old practice of the burglar who, with stolen goods, throws a few down in order to divert the attention of his pursuers. The Senator's constituents know, whether he knows it or not, that one of the greatest men who ever came out of the West was placed in office as Secretary of the Interior to administer the affairs of the far West—Franklin K. Lane.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I admit that, but——

Mr. HARRISON. I have not answered the Senator's question yet; I have answered just a part of it. I hope that when I shall have finished he will get up and beg my pardon for asking such a foolish question.

During the years preceding the war not a proposition came out of the far West for the benefit or in the interest of the western people which that administration did not put through, and if the Senator had studied his CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in those days he would have seen it; but he was busy, as everybody in the West was, enjoying the wonderful Democratic prosperity. He was clipping his coupons and making his big profits, and he did not have time to read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and study the wonderful administration of the Democratic Party, which controlled affairs at that time. I hope I have answered the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. NICHOLSON. Will the Senator permit me to ask one more question?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield first to my friend from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would remind the Senator that a Democratic Senator from the West, Senator Newlands, was the father of the reclamation policy.

Mr. HARRISON. I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. NICHOLSON. The Senator from Mississippi did me the honor to say that I was engaged in clipping coupons during the Democratic administration. I say now to my good friend that in my case that was not a period of prosperity. In common with many other people, I was much poorer after the war was over than before it commenced.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator was one of the "war babies."

Mr. NICHOLSON. While the Senator is talking about Franklin K. Lane, who rendered the West a great service, what about Theodore Roosevelt? He is the man who placed reclamation on the map in the West. He is the man who pleaded for the West.

Mr. HARRISON. He was a great man, if the Senator will allow me to say it.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Theodore Roosevelt backed up the movement for reclamation more than any other man who ever lived.

Mr. HARRISON. And the Senator and his Republican colleagues sink into insignificance by the side of the name of Theodore Roosevelt, and their record looks like a decimal point by the side of a mountain when their records are compared with the wonderful record embodied in the reclamation policies of Theodore Roosevelt. If the Senator would come on and join with some of us who really want to help the West, we could do your people some good.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Colorado, who has just been uttering such a panegyric on Theodore Roosevelt, if when Mr. Roosevelt was running for the Presidency against Mr. Taft and was supporting western projects, the Senator from Colorado was not denouncing Mr. Roosevelt and eulogizing Mr. Taft?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado for an answer.

Mr. NICHOLSON. No man ever heard me denounce Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. KING. Did not the Senator support Mr. Taft?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I supported Mr. Roosevelt until the convention at Chicago had closed and had selected Mr. Taft as its nominee. Then I stayed regular, with my party.

Mr. KING. The Senator supported Mr. Taft, and Mr. Taft and the Republican Party conducted a campaign of vituperation and abuse of Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado to answer. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I had started out to talk on another line. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was correct in his indictment. He knew what he was talking about. There is not a Senator over on the other side of the Chamber who does not in his heart agree with him. There is no Senator now who will rise in his place in the Senate and take issue with the statement he made. I pause for an answer. Of course, it does not come. There are more Senators now in their seats on the other side of the aisle than I have seen for some time. Yet they know that the Senator from Idaho was right when he said that the Republican leadership was against any reclamation policy; that they had checkmated it; and that it would never be put through under the present Republican leadership.

I could read the speech made by the present President of the United States, Mr. Harding, which scintillates with wisdom and promises, giving to the people of the West the idea that one of the first things that would be done would be to put through a reclamation policy. So the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], progressive, popular, conscientious, able, splendid champion of the people, having the interest of his State and section at heart, has worked night and day—in season and out of season—trying to frame a reclamation policy such as would meet the approval of the Congress and which would give his people some benefit and bring to his section some relief. His measure was reported out from the committee, reported unanimously, and taken up on the floor of the Senate. I understand the steering committee at one time winked at the idea that it might be put through in a separate bill, but they changed their minds. When the adjusted compensation bill was before the Senate, so eager was the Senator from Oregon to enact legislation that, assisted by an almost solid vote on this side of the Chamber, he proposed to incorporate his measure, which was known as the McNary bill, as an amendment to the adjusted compensation legislation. It was adopted and went to conference. How easy it would have been for this administration, if they really desired to adopt a reclamation policy, to have sent word down the line for the conferees to adopt it and let the House and Senate vote for it; but the Republican leaders who were appointed as conferees to adjust the differences between the House and the Senate, as I have read this morning, struck the McNary amendment from the measure.

Not only did they do that, but they struck out the proposition of paying the soldiers with the interest that might come from the allied indebtedness. No; they preferred, perhaps, to tax the American people more in order to pay the adjusted compensation. Your leadership is so in the habit of pressing down upon the American people with higher taxes that you choose that course.

I am for the measure. I want to see it passed. I want to see it passed before we adjourn this Congress. I hope from the innermost part of my heart that it will become a law, but I know the forces that are at work. They will destroy it if they can, and when they struck out the McNary amendment in conference they helped to defeat the adjusted compensation legislation. I am for the McNary amendment which was adopted in the Senate and which went to conference, because I believe in the principle. I believe it would be helpful not only to the West but to the southern part of the country to drain their overflowed lands, to irrigate their arid lands, and to help them open up fields in order that products may be raised and the cost of living reduced.

But I am for it for another reason. The other reason is that it might influence the President of the United States from vetoing the soldiers' adjusted compensation legislation. I do not know whether he is going to veto it or not. Some say he will and some say he will not. Some say he is going to do so and some say he is not. I do not think anyone knows. I think his position with reference to the soldiers' bonus is just about as quixotic and uncertain and vaccillating as it has been on everything from the strike down.

But be that as it may, you have an opportunity to give to the West a reclamation policy. The conferees, who are representing the sentiment of the Senate and who doubtless will represent the views of the administration when they eliminate it and bring it back here, know the position we took and of which we were in favor. If we vote it down, it will be said that we are against it. Well, I will tell you now that if I can find enough Senators here who will join in an effort to refuse to adopt the conference report, with the understanding that after the report has been rejected they will then vote to instruct the conferees to report the McNary amendment as a part of the adjusted compensation legislation, I shall join with them and vote accordingly. We would be helping the soldiers' legislation along when we help reclamation along, and when you defeat the Borah amendment and defeat the McNary amendment you are repudiating a solemn pledge made to the American people and especially to the far western country.

Now, as to the pending joint resolution, it is peculiarly strange to me that the same day the Republican leadership was deferring and delaying and procrastinating with reference to adjusted compensation for the soldiers of the country and killing the reclamation policy that had been adopted by the Senate, an effort is made to press through here with all the force and influence of the Republican leadership a joint resolution to give $5,000,000 to the colored population of Liberia. Why did you not do it a few months ago and not wait until the eve of election? You are not fooling anybody. You think you can catch the negro votes up in some of the Northern States. God bless you, I have more negroes in my State than all of you have in yours.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. Will the Senator permit me to remind him that the negro population of his State is not permitted to vote?

Mr. HARRISON. They do not want to vote. They have the right to vote if they should desire to vote. They know that affairs are so well administered by the white people that they do not desire to vote.

Mr. MOSES. I take the Senator's statement at its face value, but I think I need further evidence as to whether the colored population of his State wishes to vote.

Mr. HARRISON. They can vote if they want to. I shall not go into the provisions of our Constitution which permit them to vote, but I take it from the question put to me by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire that he admits the other suggestion I made, that this is a measure merely to catch some negro votes in the North.

Mr. MOSES. I admit nothing. I am merely commenting upon the statement made by the Senator from Mississippi, with great emphasis, that he has more colored population in his State than several northern States put together. The only difference is that the provisions of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments are observed in the northern States, while in the Senator's State I fear their right of suffrage is more honored in the breach than the observance.

Mr. HARRISON. The Supreme Court of the United States has passed upon that question, and we all know what it has observed about it. We treat the negroes right, good, fine, splendid; they are satisfied, happy, and contented. I wish the Senator would come down there some time and see it. He would move out of New Hampshire, away from those rocks and crags, those snowbounds and snowdrifts to a really good State—a place of sunshine and beauty and resources, contentment, and happiness.

Now I have said about all I desire to say. I sincerely hope Senators on the other side of the Chamber who come from the far West will join with the distinguished Senator from Idaho and the distinguished Senator from Oregon and with those of us on this side who favor the legislation, and we will put it over. I hope, since you hold the whip handle, that you will bring influence to bear upon the conferees who have the adjusted compensation measure in hand and have them reinstate the McNary bill as an amendment to that measure, so we can have a reclamation policy. No doubt the House will adopt it, for they want to carry out their pledges, and it would influence the President, I believe, to sign the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the pending joint resolution seeks to collect a debt due by certain officeholders and other people in Liberia to certain speculators and financiers of Wall Street. We are not only made the collecting agency for Wall Street, but we are called upon in this instance to furnish the money to pay the debt.

Mr. President, the Senate solemnly declared a few days ago that the debt due to the Government, to the American people, by foreign countries of over $10,000,000,000 should not be canceled but that the interest should be collected and used to make the entire payment of adjusted compensation to our soldiers. That meant that we were going to meet the payments without taking one 5-cent piece out of the Treasury, without levying one cent of tax against the American people. What happened yesterday to that provision? The conference committee, a majority of which is Republican, of course, has stricken out that just and meritorious provision. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] told us that the President would not veto the adjusted compensation bill if we provided some way to meet the payments called for in the bill. Here was a provision to take money which the leaders of the Republican Party in the Senate and in the House intend to give away to the allied countries and use it for that purpose. They are not deceiving anybody.

The American people shall know before the November elections that the plan and purpose of the Republican Party is to cancel the foreign debt, to cancel it when our people are already burdened with taxation, cancel it when there is distress in many quarters of our country, and that money is needed to relieve our own people of burdens grievous to be borne. Here, after every grafting concern in the country had been fed to the full, the soldiers are the last on the list—first to answer their country's call; first on the battle front in France; first to wave our flag in victory, but last in Republican consideration when they come home. They were pushed back in the rear of the processions which have come by the Treasury and have been fed and filled. I stated here a few days ago that the first to appear were the big income-tax payers. The Republican Senate handed out to them $90,000,000 on a silver platter. The next procession to come in view was that of a band of marauding profiteers, and they had handed out to them $450,000,000. Then came the wealthy war contractors, questionable, many of their contracts, and they took away $700,000,000, and more. Then what? The tariff barons came. You have written a tariff bill which will tax the American consumers $3,000,000,000, and that money will go into the pockets of the tariff barons and not a cent of it into the Public Treasury. You have held them up, you have cried out against imposing additional taxes to give the soldier justice, and yet you are running your hands into the pockets of the American masses to take out the little that they have left in order to increase prosperity amongst the favored few, and you are doing it by the improper use of the taxing power.

I have stated here that the Republicans are responsible for the deflation gang, who have made their millions and their billions and to-day sit in Wall Street and say "There shall be no soldiers' adjusted compensation. It shall not pass." Our boys—God bless them—at the Marne, when the Prussian guard stormed their line in mass formation, cried out, as they moved forward, "They shall not pass." Everyone of them who fell in the conflict as his life blood ran red upon the soil of France, whispered with his last breath, "They shall not pass." And they did not pass. The Wall Street slogan now is, "Adjusted compensation shall not pass." What a miserable mockery!

Oh, Mr. President, we provided in the bill that adjusted compensation should be paid out of the interest due to the American people from foreign Governments. The Republicans will not let us collect it.. The Republican Party has had control of the legislative instrumentalities of this Government for four years, and yet they have not collected a dime of that indebtedness; they have not made any effort to collect a dime of it.. Every time Democrats have suggested the collection of that debt certain Republican newspapers and a few other kind have started a propaganda to cancel it—to forgive the debt.

If they succeed in getting it canceled, they will receive a rich financial reward. Finally, under the leadership of a Democrat, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], by the aid of the solid Democratic vote, we put into the adjusted compensation bill a provision by which adjusted compensation could be met without taking money from the Public Treasury, without additional taxation; but what have the Republicans done? They have slaughtered it in conference. This morning the newspapers were flaming with headlines which told the story around the country and to the boys who carried the flag and had saved the day that the provision that would furnish the money to settle with them without taxing our people or taking any money out of the Treasury had been taken out of the bill. I predicted that Wall Street would make you strike it out.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator from Alabama, of course, remembers that some months ago Congress authorized a foreign debt commission composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, who has no legal right to hold his office, and two Members of Congress, one Senator and one Representative, and two other members, to arrange with foreign nations which owe us debts about their payment. Can the Senator from Alabama inform this body and the country what those men have done since they have been appointed?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has put up to me an exceedingly hard task. I am unable to tell what that commission has done or has not done. It would be interesting to know just what they have done and said upon the subject. There is no Democrat upon it. There is nothing like it in history, so far as I can recall. It is a partisan commission appointed to handle an indebtedness of $10,000,000,000 and more due to the whole American people. When the time came to arrange for its settlement the Republican Congress provided not for the selection of a commission composed, as all such commissions have been in the past, of three Republicans and two Democrats, but for a commission composed entirely of Republicans.

Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia raises a very interesting question. Why was that done? It is so plain that a wayfaring man may see why it was done. It is not intended that the country shall know what is going on behind closed doors with regard to the $10,000,000,000 indebtedness. The Republican Party is handling that proposition. Politics may be entering into it very largely; I think it is. Wall Street interests are involved. Who would have had a commission of five Republicans except Wall Street? The American people do not indorse that, and that one act ought to cost the Republican Party thousands and hundreds of thousands of votes. I do not care whether the President be a Democrat or a Republican, or whether Congress be Democratic or Republican, it is not right; it is not fair; it is not just to name a commission of five partisans, whether those in power be Democrats or Republicans, to handle such a big matter as this is.

That is the way I feel about it. The Republican administration had no business to name five Republicans upon a commission of this kind. With the Republicans in power there ought to have been three Republicans and two Democrats upon it. Then when Republicans whispered suggestions of cancellation of the foreign indebtedness due this Government the Democrats would have told it; the public would have been apprised of it; public opinion would have begun to exert its influence and prevented them from doing what they expect finally to do—give this debt over to the allied nations, and give it over, too, while 4,000,000 boys who answered to their country's call are denied justice at the hands of a Republican Congress.

Mr. President, to recur to the matter I was discussing, why was the provision with reference to the payment of the adjusted compensation from the interest on the foreign debt due us stricken out in the conference committee? The newspapers tell us that that action has been taken. So likewise in the case of the amendment providing for the development of reclamation projects. Southern Democratic Senators, anxious to join with the western people to grant relief to them, voted for that amendment, but now what has happened? The conferees met behind closed doors, and there was enough pressure brought to bear by the powers that be to kill that reclamation amendment—to throw it down—as well as to kill the provision which called for the payment of the soldiers' adjusted compensation from the debts owing to our Government from foreign nations. They were all stricken down. What for? So that the bill could be brought back into this Chamber and it could be said: "The bill contains no provision for paying the soldier. We will have to provide the money by taxation, and then the President can say he vetoed it because it will increase taxes."

My God, Mr. President, it is enough to make the blood of an American patriot boil to see how these boys are treated! Just think of it, the American soldiers, the boys who stood between us and the overthrow of our Government, the boys who saved the life of the Nation and saved the liberty of the world, are schemed against, plotted against, planned against in order to defeat paying him what we owe him by such chicanery as we have witnessed! Now, what have we before us? We have a measure here to provide for paying debts owing to some Wall Street interest by Liberia. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], able and conscientious statesman, has satisfied the mind of every man who has listened to him, and who has intelligence, that we are under no obligation in the world to make a loan of $5,000,000 to Liberia. He has shown plainly, it seems to me, that the conditions precedent set out on our part months and months ago have never been complied with or met; that we were regarded as out of it, and we were out of it and we are out of it; but this crowd in Wall Street, so rollicking and rampant with the affairs of our Government, now think that all they have to do is merely to O. K. it and send it down here and it will go through. Mr. President, it is a blessed thing that there is a judgment day coming in politics when the American people may have a chance to vote upon these questions. Do they know what is going on here?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MOSES. At this point I will remind the Senator from Alabama that the State of Maine had such an opportunity yesterday.

Mr. HEFLIN. And I will remind the Senator from New Hampshire that President Harding carried Maine by 70,000 majority and the Republicans carried it yesterday by twenty-odd thousand, a loss of nearly 50,000 votes. I will let the Senator smoke that for awhile.

Mr. MOSES. I will say, Mr. President, that the Republican majority in Maine is not as deep as a well nor as wide as a barn door, but it will serve.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not catch the Senator's statement.

Mr. MOSES. I will say to the Senator again that the majority in Maine is not as deep as a well nor as wide as a barn door, but it will serve.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, certainly it will serve. It will serve just like my friend from New Hampshire did after he promised the soldier boys to vote for a bonus until he got elected, and then voted against it.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I resent such a statement as being wholly out of tune with the facts. My statement was that I would support some adjusted compensation bill, but I did not say I would support such a bill as might be advocated by the Senator from Alabama here, and I am not in the habit of taking my orders from him, nor am I in the habit of having my words interpreted by another. I will answer to my constituents when the time comes, as the Senator may answer to his.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is very true, but the Senator waited to answer them until after they had voted for him and had no way to get their votes back.

Mr. MOSES. They will have the opportunity in due time.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; I suppose they will in due time.

Mr. MOSES. But I want to say now to the Senator that I resent and I object to his repeating a statement which is not in accord with the facts. I never promised to vote for the bonus bill which passed the Senate. I simply said that I favored adjusted compensation, and I do now, but I do not intend to favor it and I shall not vote for it at the expense of the Treasury of my country. The Senator from Alabama may do as he chooses about that measure, but I think it would be well if he would have his State do something for the soldier before he comes to the National Treasury and demands that the Nation shall take care of him. My State has done something for the soldier; it has voted a bond issue, and provided for the soldier everything else which was asked for on the program presented by the American Legion. The Senator's State has done nothing.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, this obligation is a national one. The Senator from New Hampshire talks quite differently now from the way he talked when he was a candidate for the Senate, and these boys had not yet voted for him.

Mr. MOSES. I object to that also as being not in accord with the facts. I never mentioned the soldiers' bonus when I was a candidate. I made my campaign upon the League of Nations and the treaty of Versailles, and I touched no other issue. All that I ever did was to write a few letters in answer to people who asked me concerning my position, and I read those letters with great care before I determined my course upon the adjusted compensation bill to find exactly what my obligation was. I have kept my obligation, Mr. President, to a hair's breadth of its letter, and I hope the Senator will keep his with equal fidelity.

Mr. HEFLIN. Before the Senator takes his seat let me ask him if he did not say to me in debate here some months ago when I reminded him that he had promised the soldiers to support an adjusted compensation measure, in substance, that he had, but that the condition of the Treasury would not warrant it?

Mr. MOSES. I stated in my speech in the Senate on the subject of the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill exactly what my position had been; that, like many others, I had made some promise for some form of adjusted compensation bill; but that does not mean that I have to carry it out whenever the Senator from Alabama says I shall, and it does not mean that I shall carry it out in the form in which the Senator from Alabama says I shall. When, however, we may do it with justice to the country, I am willing to meet it.

Mr. HEFLIN. In order that I may compare what the Senator is saying now with what he did say, which is in the RECORD, in response to my question, I want him to answer me this question: Did he not say to me in substance that he did promise to vote for adjusted compensation, but that the condition of the Treasury would not now warrant it?

Mr. MOSES. Exactly, Mr. President. I said in my former statement on the floor that I was under some form of promise to vote for some form of adjusted compensation, but that I wished to give due notice that I could not go forward with that promise now, and I maintain that position at the minute.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire seems to be very much disturbed. I do not blame him—not at all. I would be disturbed if I had by any hook or crook or by any act of mine induced the soldier boys to believe that I was for adjusted compensation and got their support, and after I got it if I should fail to vote for adjusted compensation and I should be confronted with the statement by another Senator I would be embarrassed, as is no doubt the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I am not embarrassed at all. My sole promise was contained in nine letters. There were 17,000 soldiers from my State in the late war, and to nine of them I made some kind of a promise to support some kind of an adjusted compensation bill. I did not promise to vote for any particular bill, nor at any particular time; and I say that no Senator here has a right to make the insinuation or to put upon my words the interpretation that the Senator from Alabama does. I wish to say further that I am sick and tired of it, and I do not intend to stand for it in silence any more. If the Senator from Alabama can not abide by the rules without imputing to Senators motives which are improper, I shall have to appeal to the protection of the Chair. Ordinarily I can take care of myself, and I am not afraid of the Senator from Alabama in any course of debate, even though he invokes all the vampires of Wall Street; but I do say, Mr. President, that no Senator has a right continually to impute to another Senator falsehood and evasion of obligation and to impute to him improper motives in the manner that the Senator from Alabama has been doing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will remember Rule XIX. Senators have had it called to their attention many times, but the Chair will read it again.

Mr. HEFLIN. Read it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (reading):

No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I was just referring to facts as I understood them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair simply reminds the Senator from Alabama of the rule.

Mr. MOSES. I ask that the Senator from Alabama may be permitted to proceed in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire does not have to ask that I be permitted to proceed in order. I proceed in my own right, and if the Chair holds that I am not proceeding in order and in my own right I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not ruled——

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from New Hampshire asked that I proceed in order. I am not asking for his permission to proceed. In my own way I am going to operate some on the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama must proceed in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. I intend to do that, Mr. President, and I am satisfied that the Chair thought I was doing that. The Senator from New Hampshire seemed to think that I was not, or wanted something to come and protect him from the preelection reminders that I was laying at his door.

Mr. President, these soldier boys offered to die for me; and why should not I tell the whole truth about things that pertain to them, and do justice to them in the land for which they offered their lives? That is my position, and I propose to stand by it. The Senator from New Hampshire can not prevent me from doing that. Of course, I shall proceed in order; I am going to read the RECORD in the morning and see first what the Senator said to me before. I remember the debate very well. I simply said to the Senator a little while ago that he had indicated to the boys, or promised them, that he would vote for a bonus or adjusted compensation, and that after he got elected he had not done it. If the RECORD does not bear that out, I am wrong. If the RECORD does bear it out, I am right. Why should not the truth be told?

Now the Senator says that he is in favor of some sort of adjusted compensation. Pray God, what sort of adjusted compensation is it? And when, oh when, will the Senator from New Hampshire make up his mind to render aid to these boys—while they are living or when they are dead?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama is evidently in favor of paying the adjusted compensation with the proceeds of the interest on the foreign loans. I hope that both he and the boys to be benefited will live to see the day when money enough will be received from that source to pay anything. Nothing has been paid except by one small nation.

In my opinion nothing will be paid except by one great nation. The others can not, some of them, and others of them will not, pay. They have no intention of paying, some of them; and what the Senator has heretofore complained of in that connection is not due to a Republican administration, even though we have been in charge of Congress for nearly four years. It is due to the fact, if it can be properly chargeable to anyone, that a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, the son-in-law of a Democratic President, himself now recently announced as a Democratic candidate for nomination to the Presidency, refused to obey the law. In the law he was instructed to make these advances to foreign nations, and to take from them obligations similar in terms and in conditions to those from which the proceeds were paid. Mr. McAdoo did nothing of the kind. He took an I. O. U. and left it to the Republican administration to make it good.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I can not yield to the Senator from New Hampshire to make a speech in my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield further.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want him to get cool. He has gotten warmed up here considerably under this fire. The Secretary of the Treasury under Mr. Wilson, Mr. McAdoo, one of the greatest Secretaries that we ever had, stated a few days ago that he was not a candidate for President, and that he had not made any such announcement. The Senator from New Hampshire has him saying that he is an announced candidate, and Mr. McAdoo says that he is not. I just submit that for the RECORD and the public generally, if it is not offensive to the Senator from New Hampshire to let those facts go in.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, not at all, Mr. President. I can not keep up with the daily procession of proclamations put out by the Democrats.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire in his excitement has admitted what I said a while ago is true, that they did not intend to collect this foreign debt. He says that these people—some of them—do not intend to pay. What do I do if a man owes me, and can pay, and will not pay? I make him pay through the court. What will the Government do when a country owes it money, loaned to it in the hour of its peril, when it gets able to pay that money back, and will not pay it back, under Republican rule? All you have to do is to elect Democrats, free from the control of Wall Street, and we will collect it; so help us God, we will collect it!

Mr. MOSES. How?

Mr. HEFLIN. How? Why, just like we collected all other debts that have been paid to us in the past—by insisting on it.

Mr. MOSES. By force of arms?

Mr. HEFLIN. By insisting on it; that is all. That is all we have to do, Mr. President. Foreign politics are getting mixed up too much in this Government. The Senators who talked about fighting the League of Nations are more tied up with foreign powers now than the Government has ever been in its history.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me further, I once read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of a Senator who was described in another place as having the bravest mouth in the country. I think I can identify him now.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, my mouth is incapable of uttering anything that smacks of deception or ingratitude toward the American soldier.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. With the permission of the Senator from Alabama may I ask the Senator from New Hampshire how Great Britain collected her money from Greece when Greece refused to pay her debt after a Grecian mob had sacked the house of a man in Athens, named Don Pacifico, who claimed to be a British subject?

Mr. MOSES. My recollection is, Mr. President, that a squadron was sent to the Bay of Piræus and held the capital of Greece under tribute until it was done.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Precisely. Great Britain used force, and we could do it, too.

Mr. MOSES. Does the Senator from Georgia advocate going to war in order to collect this debt?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator from Georgia would seize a ship of France or England or any other country that owes us that will not pay its debt, and if they wanted to fight over it I would fight.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I insist that we can collect that money without shedding a drop of blood and without causing any hard feeling when we let Great Britain know and let France know and let Belgium know and let the other countries know that we, the people of the United States, are insisting upon the payment of this debt, and that no coterie of financiers and speculators in Wall Street is going to be able to prevent our insistence upon its payment. I know and the country knows, or will know, who it is that does not want this debt paid. Why is it that the Republican Party has held back our forces from the collection of one five-cent piece while Wall Street private interests went over and collected nearly $2,000,000,000 from France and England alone? Can you explain that. Yet the Senator from New Hampshire, who is on the inside and in a position to know, tells us that they do not intend to pay. He tells us that some of these countries never intend to pay. He says some of them are not able just now, and that others do not intend to pay. Do you get that, Senators?

Oh, Mr. President, how pusillanimous and impotent under Republican rule is the Republic whose army broke the German line and saved the liberty of the world! Just think of the mightiest government on the globe helpless to collect its obligations from countries able to pay, simply because private interests insist that they be permitted to collect all of their debts. Oh, Mr. President, how shameful a picture it is that the Senator from New Hampshire presents to Congress and the country in what he has said about countries not intending to pay.

We had a provision in the adjusted compensation bill for the payment of our soldiers from the interest paid on this foreign debt. I heard the Senator from New Hampshire, this touchy Senator—he is exceedingly sensitive and touchy, especially when you get upon the subject of adjusted compensation—say that the condition of the Treasury did not warrant the payment of adjusted compensation now, and I recall what the Kaiser said, when looking toward Paris, and no doubt having in his mind the cry "On to America." He said: "I am going to win this war, and assess against the United States $40,000,000,000 indemnity."

I wonder what the Senator from New Hampshire would have been doing now if we had lost that war and were tugging and pulling trying to raise money to pay the Kaiser $40,000,000,000 of indemnity? Who was it that kept off that indemnity? Who was it that made imposition impossible? Who was it that threw himself in the breach and died for his country while his comrades carried the flag on to victory? The American soldier. Who was it that cut that war short when it was costing a million dollars an hour and saved all the expense of another year, and more? It was the American soldier. Who was it that protected the Senator from New Hampshire in his holdings and in his wealth, and permitted him to enjoy it at home in safety, 3,000 miles from the battle front? The American soldier. Who was it that made it possible for this band of marauding profiteers to enjoy money filched from the pockets of the people, millions and hundreds of millions, while the war was on? The American soldier. Who was it that made it possible for the American people who filled the contracts to take advantage of the Government, to profit upon its distress and misfortune, and make millions and hundreds of millions and possess it to-day? The American soldier. Who was it, when that money was made, in order to keep up their revel and their robbery, that contributed to the Republican Party to get control of Congress? The profiteers, the war contractors, the men who fleeced the Government in time of war and remained at home.

The Senator from New Hampshire tells us that the condition of the Treasury does not warrant him in voting for adjusted compensation. I have in my mind's eye a picture of a young man stepping out of the door of a humble home in the South, the North, the East, the West, his old father and mother bidding him goodbye, and his sweetheart with tears lingering on the brink of her eyelids as he walked away, maybe never to see him again. He goes to France through a sea festooned with the desperadoes of the deep, the submarines, and on to the battle front and out on the firing line, death raining all around him, leaving his all of earthly things and dear ones behind him and standing out on the firing line offering to die for his country.

That is the condition in which he found things; that is the offer he made; that is the sacrifice he was willing to make. He came home with victory, but left thousands of his comrades dead on the plains of France. He came home and went back to that place where he bade his old father and mother and sweetheart good-by, and they said to him, "Johnny, times are bad; industries are shut down. Deflation is on, raging everywhere. The old job you had is gone; there isn't anything to do here; all the industries are in distress. There is a mortgage on the home, and the value of the farm products which would have taken care of our indebtedness has been so deflated that it is going to take the farm itself and the house and all we have to pay the mortgage, and we will not even have any home for you to live in."

Then I see a tear come in his eye as he said, "My God, has this transpired while I was offering to die?" Who is it that has brought this curse on the people? Wall Street speculators and financiers, through the Republican Party in power. Income taxes fell off because of deflation and cut down the volume of money that went into the Treasury. The soldier was not in any way responsible. Yet the Senator from New Hampshire says the condition of the Treasury does not warrant him in voting for adjusted compensation.

Mr. President, at another time I replied briefly to the Senator from New Hampshire, and lest he forget I will do it again.. I said I could see these soldier boys back in their dugouts one morning when the officer said to them, "Boys, I want you to go across this no man's land and take those guns in the grove on the hill." The German guns were sweeping the plain; there was no blade of grass, no bush, no shrub anywhere in sight. Death, death reigned everywhere. They said to those boys, "Go across and take those batteries in the grove." Those boys marched—God bless them—these intrepid warriors of the West, and did not stop. Suppose they had started out there and stopped suddenly under the theory of the Senator from New Hampshire, that conditions out there did not warrant them in going. How beautiful that sentiment would have been. We would have branded every one of those soldiers as cowards. We would have put the scarlet letter of cowardice upon the brow and the breast of every one of them. We would have said, "You played the part of traitors to the best traditions of the American soldier. You have lowered the standard. You are not worthy of the name. You ought not to be permitted to have the uniform taken off of you; it ought to be torn off."

But they did not do that. They walked out with heads erect, with quick steps, eagle eyes blazing with the light of battle, and as soon as they got in the range and commenced to fire they took the battery in the grove on the hill. They returned, having fulfilled their mission, and along their trail lay the dead bodies of their comrades. What would you have thought if they had said, "I can't go out there. Conditions don't warrant me in going"?

But Wall Street came down and said, "We want $90,000,000 taken off the big income taxes"; and you let them do it. The profiteers took out $450,000,000 more and the war contractors took out $700,000,000 more. Then the Senator from New Hampshire looked into the Treasury and said, "The condition of the Treasury is such that I can not now vote for adjusted compensation."

Oh, Mr. President, how pitiable. I never heard him open his mouth when the big-income taxpayers wanted $90,000,000. He smiled blandly, as he usually does when something like that of a pleasing nature is taking place.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, is the Senator now referring to the revenue bill passed by this Congress?

Mr. HEFLIN. A Republican Congress; yes.

Mr. MOSES. I voted against that bill, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. The one that took off the big income taxes?

Mr. MOSES. I voted against the revenue bill which changed the income taxes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Did the Senator make a speech against it?

Mr. MOSES. I did, and a good one, I think.

Mr. HEFLIN. Sure, the Senator is committed to the idea that it was a good one if he made it. The Senator felicitates himself that whatever he says is good, whether anybody else shares in that opinion or not.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Alabama voted with me, so he must have been impressed by it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have been frequently impressed by what the Senator did, even that time when he came down and tampered with our negroes in the political campaign of 1920. I remember the Senator's record pretty well.

I do not recall his speech against the removal of the big income taxes. I must look that up. That will be glorious reading and feeding for me if I can find it. I never heard him open his mouth against the $450,000,000 for the profiteers. How did the Senator vote on that?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I do not happen to recall it. I assume the Senator is referring to the settlement of the contracts made by the Wilson administration. I do not happen to remember how I voted on settling the contracts made by Mr. Wilson and Secretary of War Baker.

Mr. HEFLIN. How did the Senator vote on the removal of the excess-profits tax?

Mr. MOSES. That was all contained in the revenue bill, against which I voted.

Mr. HEFLIN. Did the Senator oppose taking off the excess-profit taxes?

Mr. MOSES. I think that I stated my opinion with reference to the revenue bill clearly in the speech I made on the subject. I do not recall definitely just what I said. I remember at the time I thought I had expressed myself without any nebulousness. At any rate, I voted against the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. At any rate, he is satisfied he did. I was asking about specific points in the bill. The Senator is not clear now as to whether he was opposed to the removal of the excess-profits tax or not.

Mr. MOSES. It makes no difference since I voted against the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. It makes a difference as to whether the Senator favored certain principles in it which might be according to his way of thinking. He might vote for the bill or against the bill and not be agreeable to some things that were in it, or he might be for some things that were in it. That $450,000,000 was a very nice item, which would pay about one-third of the soldiers' adjusted compensation in cash. So I was anxious to know how the Senator voted on that. One billion and a half would pay about $350 in cash to each of 4,000,000 soldiers.

The Senator speaks about the contracts being made in the Wilson administration. Oh, Mr. President, some day the tale will be truthfully told of how the dollar-a-year Republicans came here with tears in their eyes wanting to do what they could to help the Government, and, as the President wanted to have a nonpartisan thing of it, he appointed those Republicans one after another; and how they did gouge the Government after they got in. Hog Island is an instance that the country will probably never forget. What did these dollar-a-year men do? They directed the purchase of stuff that their own companies were making. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] was one of them. He was in the service of the Government; and the testimony discloses the fact that his company made thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars out of the Government during the war. So the Senator reminds me that he was voting to pay up the contracts made under the Wilson administration. It is going to be disclosed some day that that grafting business was done by the hungry Republican leaders, who came down here looking piouslike, walked up to the President with tears in their eyes, and he took that to mean that they were straight and reliable, but it did not mean that. They did enough to the Government. They made thousands, hundreds of thousands, millions, hundreds of millions, and billions.

Then what happened? These pompous, purse-proud plutocrats marched in solid phalanx to the Republican convention at Chicago, congregated in the same hotel, and there proceeded to dictate what should take place. They were going to buy that nomination. But a strong man stood up like Saul amongst his brethren, head and shoulders above all—Senator BORAH, of Idaho—and reminded them of the days when the emperorship of Rome was put upon the auction block and bartered to the highest bidder. He cried out against them, and some of them hate him now for it. But he broke up that part of the game. They had to hurry around and nominate a man who had not been considered very seriously up to that time.

BORAH saw things done at that convention by these moneybag, miserable wretches who had made their millions out of the distress of their Government, holding secret conferences, and offering to buy the Nation's highest office, or the nomination, which meant an election at that time, and he cried out against it. What happened? He broke up their plan, and another was nominated by that convention.

Am I to be criticized now for reminding the Senator from New Hampshire and others of some of the interesting incidents of recent history? They happened in 1920, and this is only 1922, and our country is hardly a century and a half old.

Yet one of the great parties in its confines is so dead in its leadership to the moral sensibilities that should inspire them that they are about to auction off the highest office, and but one Senator has the courage to go upon the rostrum of that convention and cry out to his brethren that that thing ought to be scorned and condemned. The Republican Party, in a great and glorious Government 150 years old, is seeking to sell the highest office within its gift.

Mr. President, I stated, and before I conclude I am going to say again, that this bunch of money bums feel like they own the Government. God pity us! Why, the belief is becoming general that no measure can go through either branch of Congress without the O. K. of Wall Street. Now, one of the big financiers of that street has said, "I will not contribute to your campaign funds until the President reappoints"—who? The man who was the director of the most murderous deflation policy ever conducted in all the tide of time. He is out; he went out on the 9th day of August; but he is still lingering around. They are doing everything they can to have him reappointed, and now the threat comes that Wall Street insists that he be reappointed.

I received a telegram from a banker very much interested in the matter and opposed to him, who had received a telegram from an editor saying the Wall Street crowd were bringing pressure to bear upon the President to reappoint him, and get busy; that the whole country ought to be notified; that they ought to protest to the President and ask him not to reappoint him. But this purse-proud individual said, "No; I will not contribute to your campaign until you arrange for the reappointment of W. P. G. Harding."

Mr. President, I have just read in Percy's Anecdotes the story of Admiral Seymour, whose ship passed the wreckage of a merchant vessel all under water but a little deck house. He gave orders to stop near the ship. They came as close to the wreck as they could, and the admiral said, "Go and see if there is anyone left alive in the wreck." They went to the deck house still above water and found an individual wrapped in rags. They took him up, emaciated, starving, and almost dead, and bore him to their ship; and with the last bit of strength he had he managed to whisper, "There is another man." They went back and found the other man, but he was dead. They fed the first man, ministered to him, nursed him for weeks and weeks, and finally they all rejoiced and applauded when they saw him walking upon the deck of the ship, restored to health.

I saw this Governor Harding upon the ship of the Federal reserve system driving upon the sea of American finance in my country. I saw him pass shipwrecked vessels carrying starving farmers, merchants, and country bankers. I heard them crying out to him for aid, but he turned a deaf ear to their cries and gave orders to sail on and on. Wall Street financiers and speculators stood on the shore and applauded as the merchants, the country banks, and the farmers of my section went down and as the cattlemen and grain growers of the West went down. Wall Street people have made their millions and hundreds of millions. Those Wall Street gamblers and robbers are now demanding that he who drove that ship in that heartless fashion to the distress and ruin of our people shall be reappointed. God save the country from such a catastrophe!

Mr. HARRISON. I offer an amendment to the pending joint resolution and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] desires to call up a bill. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECODIFICATION OF PANAMA CANAL ZONE LAWS.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, House bill 11872, providing for a recodification of the Panama Canal Zone laws, was passed over when the calendar was called yesterday. I have a letter from the Secretary of War, together with other documents, referring to the measure. I do not know of the slightest opposition to it. It was considered by the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and reported unanimously by that committee. The bill passed the House without objection. The Secretary of War feels that it is essential to have it passed at this session of Congress in order that the zone district may have the benefit of the recodification. That is all there is to the measure.

Mr. MCNARY. May I say just a word of explanation? When the calendar was called yesterday for the consideration of measures by the Senate, I objected to the consideration of the bill now called up by the Senator from New Jersey and asked that it go over because there was no one here to explain the bill. That is the reason why it was not acted upon yesterday. I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the Panama Canal act, approved August 24, 1912, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That the Governor of the Panama Canal shall, in connection with the operation of such canal, have official control and jurisdiction over the Canal Zone and shall perform all duties in connection with the civil government of the Canal Zone, which is to be held, treated, and governed as an adjunct of such Panama Canal. Unless in this act otherwise provided, all existing laws of the Canal Zone referring to the civil governor or the civil administration of the Canal Zone shall be applicable to the Governor of the Panama Canal, who shall perform all such executive and administrative duties required by existing law. The President is authorized to determine or cause to be determined what towns shall exist in the Canal Zone and subdivide and from time to time resubdivide said Canal Zone into subdivisions, to be designated by name or number, so that there shall be situated one town in each subdivision, and the boundaries of each subdivision shall be clearly defined. In each town there shall be a magistrate's court with exclusive original jurisdiction coextensive with the subdivision in which it is situated of all civil cases in which the principal sum claimed does not exceed $300, and all criminal cases wherein the punishment that may be imposed shall not exceed a fine of $100, or imprisonment not exceeding 30 days, or both, and all violations of police regulations and ordinances and all actions involving possession or title to personal property or the forcible entry and detainer of real estate. Such magistrates shall also hold preliminary investigations in charges of felony and offenses under section 10 of this act and charges of misdemeanor in which the punishment that may be imposed is beyond the jurisdiction herein granted to the magistrate courts, and commit or bail in bailable cases to the district court. A sufficient number of magistrates and constables, who must be citizens of the United States, to conduct the business of such courts, shall be appointed by the Governor of the Panama Canal for terms of four years and until their successors are appointed and qualified, and the compensation of such persons shall be fixed by the President, or by his authority, until such time as Congress may by law regulate the same. The rules governing said courts and prescribing the duties of said magistrates and constables, oaths and bonds, the times and places of holding such courts, the disposition of fines, costs, forfeitures, enforcements of judgments, providing for appeals therefrom to the district court, and the disposition, treatment, and pardon of convicts shall be established by order of the President. The Governor of the Panama Canal shall appoint all notaries public, prescribe their powers and duties, their official seal, and the fees to be charged and collected by them.

"Appeals in civil and criminal cases are hereby authorized from the judgments and rulings of the magistrate courts to the district court under the rules and regulations prescribed by section 6 of Executive order of March 12, 1914, relating to the Canal Zone judiciary: Provided, however, That there shall be no right of appeal in criminal cases, except in those cases wherein the defendant has been sentenced to jail or has been fined in amount exceeding $25."

SEC. 2. That section 8 of the Panama Canal act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. There shall be in the Canal Zone one district court with two divisions, one including Balboa and the other including Cristobal; and one district judge of the said district, who shall hold his court in both divisions at such time as he may designate by order, at least once a month in each division. The rules of practice in such district court shall be prescribed, amended, or repealed by order of the President.

"(b) The said district court shall have jurisdiction of—

"All felony cases under the laws of the Canal Zone;

"All offenses arising under section 10 of this act;

"All cases in equity;

"All cases in admiralty;

"All cases of divorce and annulment of marriage;

"All cases at law involving principal sums exceeding $300;

"All appeals from judgments rendered in the magistrates' courts;

"All matters and proceedings not otherwise provided for which at the time this act took effect were within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone, the Circuit Court of the Canal Zone, the District Court of the Canal Zone, or the judges thereof; and

"In addition to the jurisdiction now specifically conferred on it by certain acts of Congress, the said court shall have jurisdiction of offenses under the criminal laws of the United States when such offenses are committed upon the high seas beyond the territorial limits of the Canal Zone, on vessels belonging in whole or in part to the United States, or any citizen thereof, or any corporation created by or under the laws of the United States, or of any State, Territory, or District thereof, and the offenders are found in the Canal Zone or are brought into the Canal Zone after the commission of the offense: Provided, That this provision shall not be construed to deprive district courts of the United States of any jurisdiction now provided by law. The procedure and practice in such cases shall be the same as in other criminal cases tried under the laws of the Canal Zone.

"The jurisdiction in admiralty herein conferred upon the district judge and the district court shall be the same as is exercised by the United States district judges and the United States district courts, and the practice and procedure shall be the same as in the United States district courts.

"(c) The judge of the district court shall provide for the selection, summoning, and serving of jurors from among the citizens of the United States, subject to jury duty, to serve in the division of the district in which such jurors reside; and a jury shall be had in any civil or criminal case originating in said court on the demand of either party. The compensation of jurors shall be prescribed by order of the President.

"(d) The said district judge shall receive the same salary as is allowed to United States district judges, and when holding court away from home shall be allowed the same mileage and per diem as is allowed to United States district judges; he shall appoint the clerk of said court, and may appoint one assistant clerk and such other additional help as the President may authorize; all of such officials and help shall receive such compensation as shall be prescribed by order of the President.

"(e) During the absence of the district judge or during any period of disability or disqualification from sickness or otherwise to discharge his duties, the same shall be temporarily performed by a special judge, to be designated by the President, which designation may be made by cablegram or otherwise, and who shall be an attorney at law qualified to practice before the courts of the Canal Zone or any of the United States district courts or any of the superior courts of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, and who during such service shall be paid at the same rate of compensation and the same mileage and per diem as that paid the district judge of the Canal Zone.

"(f) There shall be a district attorney for said court, who shall be paid a salary of $5,000 per annum.

"It shall be the duty of the district attorney to conduct all legal proceedings, civil and criminal, for the Government, and to advise the Governor of the Panama Canal on all legal questions touching the operation of the canal and the administration of civil affairs.

"There shall be a marshal for said district. It shall be the duty of the marshal to execute all process of the court, preserve order therein, and do all things incident to the office of marshal. The marshal shall be paid a salary of $5,000 per annum.

"(g) The district judge, the district attorney, and the marshal shall be appointed by the President, as heretofore, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms of four years each, and until their successors are appointed and qualified; they shall reside within the Canal Zone during their term of office and shall be allowed six weeks' leave of absence each year with pay, under such regulations as the President may from time to time prescribe."

SEC. 3. Section 9 of the Panama Canal act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That the records of the existing courts and all causes, proceedings, and criminal prosecutions pending therein as shown by the dockets thereof, except as herein otherwise provided, shall, immediately upon the organization of the courts created by this act be transferred to such new courts having jurisdiction of like cases, be entered upon the dockets thereof, and proceed as if they had originally been brought therein, whereupon all the existing courts, except the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone, shall cease to exist. The President may continue the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone and retain the judges thereof in office for such time as to him may seem necessary to determine finally any causes and proceedings which may be pending therein. All laws of the Canal Zone imposing duties upon the clerks or ministerial officers of existing courts shall apply and impose such duties upon the clerks and ministerial officers of the new courts created by this act having jurisdiction of like cases, matters, and duties.

"All existing laws in the Canal Zone governing practice and procedure in existing courts shall be applicable and adapted to the practice and procedure in the new courts.

"(b) The Circuit Court of Appeals of the Fifth Circuit of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review, revise, modify, reverse, or affirm the final judgments and decrees of the district court of the Canal Zone, and to render such judgments as in the opinion of the said appellate court should have been rendered by the trial court in all actions and proceedings in which the Constitution or any statute, treaty, title, right, or privilege of the United States is involved, and in cases in which the value in controversy exceeds $1,000, to be ascertained by the oath of either party or by other competent evidence, and also in criminal cases wherein the offense charged is punishable as a felony; and also in civil and criminal cases in which the jurisdiction of the trial court is in issue, but whenever any such case is not otherwise reviewable in said appellate court the question of jurisdiction alone shall be reviewable by said appellate court. And such appellate jurisdiction, subject to the right of review by or appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases authorized by law, may be exercised by said Circuit Court of Appeals in the same manner, under the same regulations, and by the same procedure as nearly as practicable as is done in reviewing the final judgments and decrees of the district courts of the United States. Cases pending in the said Circuit Court of Appeals at the time of the passage of this act shall not be affected hereby, but the same shall be disposed of as though this act had not been enacted.

"(c) That it shall not be necessary in the district court of the Canal Zone to exercise separately the law and equity jurisdiction vested in said court; and the code of civil procedure of the Canal Zone and the rules of practice adopted in said zone, in so far as they authorize a blending of said jurisdictions in cases at law and in equity, are hereby confirmed."

SEC. 4. That section 288 of the Penal Code of the Canal Zone is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 288. A person who engages in, instigates, aids, encourages, or does any act to further a fight commonly called a ring or prize fight, or who engages in a public or private sparring exhibition, with or without gloves, within the Canal Zone, who sends or publishes a challenge or acceptance of a challenge for such an exhibition or fight, or trains or assists any person in training or preparing for such an exhibition or fight, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $5,000, or be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than three years or both: Provided, however, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to voluntary boxing or sparring exhibitions conducted under rules and regulations to be promulgated by the President of the United States, or by the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone by authority of the President of the United States."

SEC. 5. That section 289 of the Penal Code of the Canal Zone is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 289. That every person willfully present as a spectator at any exhibition or fight prohibited in the preceding section is guilty of a misdemeanor."

SEC. 6. That section 342 of the Penal Code of the Canal Zone, as amended by the Executive order of March 13, 1907, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 342. That grand larceny is larceny committed in either of the following cases:

"1. When the property taken is of the value of $50 or more;

"2. When the property is taken from the person of another;

"3. When the property taken is a horse, mare, gelding, cow, steer, bull, calf, mule, jack, or jenny.

SEC. 7. That section 368 of the Penal Code of the Canal Zone is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 368. That every person guilty of embezzlement is punishable in the manner prescribed for feloniously stealing property of the value of that embezzled and where the property embezzled is an evidence of debt or right of action, the sum due upon it or evidenced to be paid by it shall be taken as its true value."

SEC. 8. That section 343 of the Penal Code of the Canal Zone is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 343. That larceny in other cases is petit larceny, and is punishable by imprisonment in jail for a term not to exceed 30 days or by a fine of not to exceed $100, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

SEC. 9. That section 461 of the Penal Code of the Canal Zone is hereby amended by adding thereto a clause numbered seventeenth, to read as follows:

"Seventeenth. That whenever any property or interest is intended to be protected by a provision of this penal code and the general term 'person' or any other general term is used to designate the party whose property it is intended to protect, the provision of such penal code and the protection thereby given shall extend to the property of the United States of America, or of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, and any other political entity, foreign or domestic. This provision shall not be construed to restrict the meaning of the term 'person' as defined under any other provision of this penal code."

SEC. 10. That paragraph 2 of the Executive order of the President of July 9, 1914, establishing rules and regulations for the operation and navigation of the Panama Canal and approaches thereto, including all water under its jurisdiction, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"2. Any person violating any of the provisions of the rules and regulations established hereunder shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100 or by imprisonment in jail not exceeding 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

SEC. 11. That section 6 of an act entitled "An act extending certain privileges of canal employees to other officials on the Canal Zone and authorizing the President to make rules and regulations affecting health, sanitation, quarantine, taxation, public roads, self-propelled vehicles, and police powers on the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, including provision as to certain fees, money orders, and interest deposits," approved August 21, 1916, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That deposit money orders issued in the Canal Zone in lieu of postal savings certificates in accordance with the rules and regulation heretofore established by the President, or that may hereafter be established by him, shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent per annum."

SEC. 12. Divorce—Causes: That in every case in which a marriage has been, or hereafter may be, contracted and solemnized between any two persons, and it shall be adjudged, in the manner hereinafter provided, that either party at the time of such marriage was and continues to be (1) naturally impotent; or (2) that he or she had a wife or husband living at the time of such marriage; or (3) that either party has committed adultery subsequent to the marriage, except as hereinafter provided; or (4) has willfully deserted and absented herself or himself from the husband or wife without any reasonable cause for a period of two years; or (5) has been guilty of willfull neglect, which shall consist of the willful failure of the husband to provide for his wife the necessaries of life, he having the ability to do so, or the willful failure to do so by reason of voluntary idleness, profligacy, or dissipation, in either case continued for a period of one year; or (6) has been guilty of habitual drunkenness for the space of two years; or (7) has attempted the life of the other by any means showing malice; or (8) has been guilty of extreme and repeated cruelty, involving acts of grievous bodily injury or producing grevious mental suffering endangering life, health, or reason; or (9) has been, subsequent to the marriage, convicted of felony or other infamous crime, it shall be lawful for the injured party to obtain a divorce and dissolution of such marriage contract in the district court of the Canal Zone.

SEC. 13. Venue—Residence: (a) That the petition for divorce shall be filed in the division of the court in which the petitioner resides. Any person having an official residence within the territorial limits of the Canal Zone, or who resides therein for the purpose of any occupation or employment, shall, during such residence, be deemed a resident of the Canal Zone for the purpose of this act, notwithstanding that he or she may not have acquired a permanent domicile within the Canal Zone.

(b) No person shall be entitled to a divorce in pursuance of the provisions of this act who has not actually resided on the Canal Zone continuously during the whole year next before the filing of his or her petition, which residence shall be duly proven by the petitioner to the satisfaction of the court by at least two witnesses who are residents of the Canal Zone; and the petitioner shall file with the petition his or her own affidavit, in which he or she shall state the length of time the petitioner has resided on the Canal Zone, the place or places where he or she has resided for the last preceding year, and his or her office or occupation.

SEC. 14. When not granted for adultery: Divorces shall not be granted for adultery when (1) the offense has been committed with the consent or connivance of the party seeking the divorce; or (2) when the party seeking the divorce has voluntarily cohabited with the other with knowledge that the offense has been committed; or (3) when the party seeking the divorce has also been guilty of adultery under such circumstances as would have entitled the other party, if innocent, to a divorce.

SEC. 15. Process—Service—Notice by publication: (a) The clerk of the district court shall issue a summons for the defendant to appear and answer, which summons shall be personally served on the defendant, if the defendant is found on the Canal Zone, by delivering a true copy thereof to the defendant in person.

(b) When any petitioner shall file in the office of the clerk of the district court an affidavit showing—

(1) That the husband and wife have their legal domicile in the Canal Zone and that the defendant has gone out of the Canal Zone and willfully refuses to return, so that process can not be personally served upon him or her; or

(2) That the marriage was celebrated in the Canal Zone and the wife, being the petitioner, continues to reside therein, and the husband, being the defendant, has abandoned his wife and gone out of the Canal Zone to avoid his marital obligations; or

(3) That the marriage was celebrated in the Canal Zone and the husband, being petitioner, continues to reside therein and was abandoned by his wife, the defendant, who has gone out of the Canal Zone in disregard of her marriage obligation; and

When such affidavit states the present place of residence of the defendant, if known, or that upon diligent inquiry his or her present place of residence can not be ascertained, and stating the last known place of residence of the defendant, the clerk shall cause publication to be made in some newspaper published in the Canal Zone, and if there is no newspaper published in the Canal Zone, then in the nearest reliable newspaper with a general circulation published in the Republic of Panama, and printed in English or having an English section or edition, containing notice of the pendency of such suit, the names of the parties thereto, the time and place of return of the summons in the case; and he shall also, within 10 days after the first publication of such notice, send a copy thereof by mail addressed to the defendant at the last known place of residence stated in the affidavit. The certificate of the clerk that he has sent such notice shall be evidence thereof.

(c) The notice by publication required herein may be given at any time after the commencement of the suit and after summons has been returned showing that the defendant was not found on the Canal Zone, and shall be published at least once each week for three successive weeks, and no default or proceeding shall be taken against any defendant not personally served with summons and not appearing, unless 90 days shall intervene between the first publication as aforesaid and the date at which such default or proceeding is proposed to be taken. All the facts necessary to constitute personal service, where personal service is had, or to authorize the notice by publication, where service is had by publication, must be established to the satisfaction of the court by competent evidence: Provided, That if the defendant resides or is found within the Republic of Panama and the place of such residence is established to the satisfaction of the court by competent evidence, then such default or other proceeding may be taken against the defendant when 30 days shall intervene between the first publication and the date at which such default or proceeding is proposed to be taken.

SEC. 16. Issue and trial: (a) The cause shall stand for trial after the summons has been personally served upon the defendant at least 10 days, or 90 days after the first publication, or 30 days after the first publication if the defendant resides in the Republic of Panama. The process and practice under proceedings for divorce shall be the same as in other cases in chancery except as in this act otherwise provided.

(b) If the bill is taken as confessed, the court shall proceed to hear the cause by examination of witnesses in open court, and in no case of default shall the court grant a divorce unless the judge is satisfied that all proper means have been taken to notify the defendant of the pendency of the suit, and that the cause of divorce has been fully proven by competent evidence. Whenever the district judge is satisfied that the interests of the defendant require it, the court may order such additional notice as equity may seem to require.

(c) No admission of the defendant shall be taken as evidence unless the court shall be satisfied that such admission was made in sincerity and without fraud or collusion to enable the complainant to obtain a divorce. If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court that the injury complained of was occasioned by collusion of the parties, or done with the assent of the complainant for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, or that the complainant was consenting thereto, then no divorce shall be decreed.

SEC. 17. Custody of children pending suit: The court may, on the application of either party, make such order concerning the custody and care of the minor children of the parties during the pendency of the suit as may be deemed expedient and for the benefit of the children.

SEC. 18. Legitimacy of children: No divorce shall in anywise affect the legitimacy of the children of such marriage.

SEC. 19. Cross petition and proceedings thereon: In addition to an answer, the defendant may file a cross petition for divorce; and when filed the court shall decree the divorce to the party legally entitled thereto. If the original petition be dismissed after the filing of the cross petition, the defendant may proceed to the trial of the cross petition without further notice to the adverse party; and the case upon such cross petition shall in all things be governed by the same rules applicable to a case on an original petition.

SEC. 20. Alimony pending suit: (a) In all cases of divorce the court may require the husband to pay to the wife or pay into court for her use during the pendency of the suit such sum or sums of money as may enable her to maintain or defend the suit; and in every suit for divorce the wife, when it is just and equitable, shall be entitled to alimony during the pendency of the suit. And in case of appeal or writ of error by the husband the district court may grant and enforce the payment of such money for her defense and such equitable alimony during the pendency of the appeal or writ of error as to the court shall seem reasonable and proper.

(b) The court, upon granting to a woman a divorce from the bonds of matrimony, may allow her to resume her maiden name or the name of any former husband.

(c) Whenever a divorce is granted, if it shall appear to the court that either party holds the title to property equitably belonging to the other, the court may compel conveyance thereof to the party entitled to the same, upon such terms as it shall deem equitable.

(d) When a divorce shall be decreed the court may make such order touching the alimony and maintenance of the wife, the care, custody, and support of the children, or any of them as, from the circumstances of the parties and the nature of the case, shall be reasonable and just; and in case the wife be complainant, to order the defendant to give reasonable security for such alimony and maintenance, or may enforce the payment of such alimony and maintenance in any other manner consistent with the rules and practice of the court. And the court may, on application, from time to time make such alterations in the allowance of alimony and maintenance and the care, custody, and support of the children as shall appear reasonable and proper. In decreeing a divorce to the wife the court may order the husband to pay alimony in a gross sum or in installments as may seem best. And it may make such orders and enforce the same by attachment and secure the payment of such alimony, but judgment for alimony can not be taken when the defendant is not personally served with summons or does not voluntarily appear.

SEC. 21. Remarriage within one year forbidden: In every case in which a divorce has been granted, neither party shall marry again within one year from the time the decree was granted: Provided, That when the cause for such divorce is adultery, the person decreed guilty of adultery shall not marry for a term of two years from the time the decree was granted: Provided, however, That nothing in this paragraph shall prevent the persons divorced from remarrying each other, and every person marrying contrary to the provisions of this paragraph shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than one year nor more than three years, and said marriage shall be held absolutely void.

SEC. 22. That all proceedings in the District Court of the Canal Zone, wherein and whereby a decree of divorce has heretofore been granted upon personal service, or service by publication, and wherein other orders have been made affecting the status of the parties or their children, are hereby legalized.

SEC. 23. That all laws, orders, and regulations, or parts thereof in conflict with this act, are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. JONES of Washington introduced a bill (S. 3996) to appropriate $1,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

INVESTIGATION OF VETERANS' BUREAU.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 349), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Whereas Congress has enacted laws to care for the invalid and disabled veterans of the World War, and has provided a comprehensive plan for vocational rehabilitation and training, and has sought to provide adequate organization and arrangements for the expeditious consideration and adjustment of claims for relief under the various acts of Congress; and

Whereas complaints are being made in all parts of the country against alleged lassitude and delay in the administration of the Veterans' Bureau by which the adjustment of claims and the making of payment in cases pending is subject to recurring correspondence, postponement, and disappointment; and

Whereas it is claimed that the rules and regulations promulgated, and the organization provided in the Veterans' Bureau and its branches throughout the country, is so overelaborated and complicated as to cause intolerable indirection in the handling of cases and to constitute an impediment to the prompt and expeditious performance of the functions of the Veterans' Bureau; and

Whereas it is claimed that there has been great and needless delay in the construction of hospitals and in providing proper hospitalization for the relief of disabled veterans, as a result of which much unnecessary suffering exists; and

Whereas it is claimed that an inordinately large proportion of the appropriations made by Congress for the relief of the veterans is being improperly consumed in overhead expense, duplication of duties, rent of expensive quarters, and in the employment of an excessive number of agents, doctors, and inspectors and other persons; and

Whereas there is a feeling in many parts of the country that the acts of Congress in behalf of the veterans are not being properly, fairly, and equitably administered, as a result of which much injustice exists, which provokes adverse criticism and dissatisfaction in the communities where the same is known: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That a committee of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to investigate the matters and conditions in the premises set forth and to report their findings together with recommendations for the improvement of such conditions to the Senate. Such committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, employ clerical and professional assistance, and to hold sessions in the city of Washington and such other places in the country as it may deem advisable.

INVESTIGATION OF CHARGES AGAINST FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I offer a resolution, which I ask may be read by the Secretary.

The resolution (S. Res. 350) was read, as follows:

Whereas it has been charged in the Senate that while deflation was being conducted under the direction of Governor Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, that he permitted the Federal reserve bank officials of the regional bank of New York to appropriate funds of the bank for the purpose of erecting palatial banking quarters for the Federal reserve bank in New York City, the total cost of which was estimated in the Federal Reserve Board's official report to the Senate of October 31, 1921, as shown on pages 21–23 of said report, at the sum of $25,646,410, including land, building, and structures; and

Whereas the cost for banking quarters of 4 of the 12 reserve banks was estimated in the Reserve Board's report to the Senate of October 31, 1921 (pp. 21–23), at $49,878,914, which is nearly five times as much as the average expenditures for the past 20 years on all appropriations made by Congress for all public buildings, post offices, courthouses, and customhouses in all 48 States of the Union; and

Whereas the reserve banks have already in the calendar years 1918, 1919, 1920, and 1921 charged against the net earnings of the banks over $10,000,000 on account of alleged depreciation, etc., on their bank premises, while said premises were still under construction or unfinished, and thereby greatly reduced the amount which would otherwise have gone to the Government for franchise tax; and

Whereas it has been charged in the Senate that the said Governor Harding permitted the officials of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York City to use the enormous earnings made during the period of drastic deflation to greatly increase their own salaries and the salaries of the clerks and other officials of said banks, increasing such other salaries from $1,320 to $10,000, from $2,500 to $15,000, from $3,600 to $25,000, and from $6,500 to $30,000 a year; and

Whereas as a result of the huge increases in salaries 25 of the 40 officers of the New York Reserve Bank on October 1, 1921, were drawing, in the aggregate, salaries which amounted to 594 per cent of the salaries which they drew when they first came to the New York Reserve Bank or immediately prior to their employment by that bank, and the total amount paid in salaries by said New York bank has increased from $1,298,474 in the calendar year 1918 to $4,937,597 in the calendar year 1921; and

Whereas it has been charged in the Senate that the said Governor Harding permitted the bank officials of the 12 Federal reserve banks to increase their salaries for the year ending June, 1922, over the salaries paid for the year 1918, more than $15,000,000; and

Whereas that increase alone is three times as much money as it costs the Government of the United States to pay the annual salaries of the Vice President and the Speaker of the House, all the Members of both branches of Congress, all the members of the Supreme Court of the United States, the President and his Cabinet, the members of the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the General of the Army, and the Admiral of the Navy; and

Whereas neither the then governor of the Federal Reserve Board, W. P. G. Harding, or the officials of the Federal reserve banks have denied said charges; and

Whereas the failure to challenge and disprove these grave and serious charges has had the effect of creating in the public mind apprehensions and suspicions of a serious nature regarding the alleged conduct of said officials in these matters; and

Whereas the allegations in said charges involving the wanton extravagance with and the brazen misuse of funds belonging in part to the Federal Government are of such a character as to call for an investigation on the part of the Senate: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators composed of Democrats and Republicans, five from the majority party and four from the minority, be appointed by the Vice President to investigate and report on said charges, and said committee is hereby authorized and empowered to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses upon said investigation and to pay the expenses incurred out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. I introduced a resolution similar in character a few days ago—Senate Resolution 344. I now desire to withdraw that resolution. The resolution just submitted and read contains the correct figures, according to the report of the board and the bulletin. I desire to have this resolution lie on the table in lieu of the other one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is in doubt. Where is the other resolution? Has it been referred to a committee?

Mr. HEFLIN. I think it is lying on the table.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood that Senate Resolution 344, at the request of the Senator from Alabama, was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the resolution was referred to that committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then let this one take the same course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF SPEECHES BY FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

Mr. HEFLIN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 351), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

Whereas the officials of the 12 Federal reserve banks have admitted that they have had printed and circulated, out of the funds of the banks, thousands of copies of a speech made in the Senate touching a controverted subject, and in which the position of one Senator is assailed and criticized by another Senator; and

Whereas the Senate feels that the Senator who spoke on the other side of the subject involved in the Senator's speech which was printed and circulated by said Federal reserve bank officials, is entitled, in fair play and justice, to have the opportunity of sending copies of his speech to the citizens who have received the speech which assailed and criticized him; and

Whereas the Senate, by resolution, requested and received from the officials of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta a certain list of citizens to whom they have sent the speech in question; and

Whereas the Senate feels that the officials of the other 11 Federal reserve banks should furnish to the Senate a list of the names and post-office addresses of citizens to whom they sent copies of said speech: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board be, and it is hereby, requested to obtain from said Federal reserve bank officials, and have sent to the Senate, a list of names with post-office addresses of the citizens to whom said speech was sent.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7053) to grant certain lands to the city of Canon City, Colo., for a public park, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, and Mr. HAYDEN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, September 12, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In this solemn moment, O God, dedicated to Thee, we turn to that throne which is forever sanctified and glorified by our Savior's sacrifice. Open our hearts and bid them welcome. O Lord continue Thy mercy toward us and withhold Thy judgments. Magnify Thyself in our needs, in our labors, and show Thy face when the clouds hang low and we know not the way. O regard her with all fatherly love and care for whom our Nation prays. Spirit of God, let Thy answer come with the mercy of recovery. Give cheer and courage to our President and lift up all who are cast down. While we pray for all mankind, O hear us for the land we love the best and be our refuge and our everlasting friend. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the tariff bill for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan presents a conference report on the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 7456. To provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed as agreed to in conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the bill be printed as agreed to in conference. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman considered having the bill printed in document form for distribution?

Mr. FORDNEY. Not as yet; no.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, there will be great demand for it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think that will be necessary, because the bill itself will be finally signed by the President in a short time if at all, and then we will have the bill as finally adopted by the Congress, instead of something only temporary in character which might be affected by what is done later.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope a number of copies will finally be printed for distribution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And it is liable to be amended considerably before it becomes a law.

Mr. GARNER. Do I understand the gentleman wishes to have the bill printed in the form showing the Senate amendments or have it printed as it becomes the law?

Mr. FORDNEY. To have the bill printed as reported by the conferees, not as finally acted upon.

Mr. GARNER. As reported by the conferees. The object is to obtain additional copies?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills of the following titles:

H. R. 9270. An act to confer upon the Territorial courts of Porto Rico concurrent jurisdiction with the United States courts of that district of all offenses under the national prohibition act and all acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto;

H. R. 5965. An act for the relief of the owner of the vessel Maria Artau;

S. 3716. An act to define a period in which certain claims may be presented for determination to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for refund of taxes erroneously collected from certain estates of decedents under color of section 29 of the act of Congress approved June 13, 1898, entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes"; and

S. 3855. An act to ascertain and settle land claims of persons not Indian within Pueblo Indian land, land grants, and reservations in the State of New Mexico.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5349) to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3086) providing for the removal of snow and ice from the paved sidewalks of the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11212) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STERLING, Mr. CUMMINS, and Mr. RANSDELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10766) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. NELSON, Mr. CALDER, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. RANSDELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONFERENCE REPORT—PENSION BILL.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 6507) for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6507) granting pensions and increases of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in 8-point type several short articles written by my colleague [Mr. HARDY] on the work and functions of the Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, Congressman GUY U. HARDY, of Colorado, is a trained newspaper man and writer of national outlook professionally as well as politically. In view of the habit of the American people of criticizing Congress carelessly and often with an ignorance which should find no place in the electorate of a Republic, it is fortunate that he has undertaken the work of putting in readable and interesting form the interesting facts concerning the work of the most important part of the Government of our country. This has been done in a series of stories entitled "Looking in on Congress."

Mr. HARDY was president of the National Editorial Association in 1918 and 1919. He has traveled extensively. From his own struggles in building up a successful newspaper business from most modest beginnings, and from his close association with people in all walks of life, he thoroughly knows the heart of the American people. He also knows his present job. The contributions of a man as familiar with the work in which he is engaged and as conscientious in its performance as Mr. HARDY, written in his characteristic vein of sincere seriousness and dry humor, are sure to bring a better knowledge of the subject home to the American people, whose chosen Representatives he thus describes.

That the value of his work for this purpose is appreciated is shown by the fact that these stories have been run through hundreds of newspapers supplied with features by the Western Newspaper Union, at whose solicitation he wrote them, and have been read in millions of homes all over the land.

The stories are as follows:

LOOKING IN ON CONGRESS—FIRST VIEW OF CONGRESS.

(By Congressman GUY U. HARDY.)

If you came to Washington for the first time and wanted to see Congress in action, what would you do and what would you see?

I remember doing that very thing a few years ago—coming as a sort of tourist—and I sat in the gallery and looked on. I can get the viewpoint, I think, of the person looking down as well as that of a Member who is on the floor.

On that trip a Member friend took me in to see the late Speaker, Champ Clark. It was in the beginning of the Great War. My friend said to Mr. Clark: "Mr. HARDY has come down to Washington to see what we are doing." Mr. Clark replied in his characteristic way: "If he can find out, I hope to God he will let me know." And it is ever so; we are all seeking information about the Congress, even the Speaker of the House sometimes.

We have got to start from some place, so we might as well assume that you have come to my office in the House Office Building. Every man who comes to Washington should call on his Congressman. The Representatives are always glad to see folks from back home; especially so are the Members from the West. Some Members from near-by States have more callers than they can well take care of.

The House Office Building is a fine structure built of marble. It has 410 office and committee rooms in it. Each Member is entitled to an office room. If he is chairman of a committee, he gets two, sometimes. The building covers a large block of ground with a grass-covered court in the center. There are five floors and a basement. It is a mile walk around the corridors on the four sides of the five floors.

THROUGH THE TUNNEL TO THE CAPITOL.

After we have had a little visit I will take you over to the Capitol. You have already seen that magnificent building from the outside and will see it many times before you leave the city, so we will go over underground, just to show you the tunnel. This tunnel, which is large, well lighted, and spacious, runs for about two blocks, I should think. By the use of it a Member can go back and forth in winter or hot summer time and during bad weather without putting his hat on, if he wishes. It is not used much in good weather. Over on the Senate side through a similar tunnel a little electric car system carries the Senators back and forth between their office building and the Capitol; but the Representatives of the people have to walk.

Arriving at the Capitol, we will go up in the gallery and look down on the House for a while.

You will be disappointed at first by the small number of Members present. Every Member does not sit in his seat all the time every day. If he did, he would not be able to keep up with his office business, and besides that, he would grow nutty. Much of the time is spent in general debate, and much of the debate is very general. So when a definite time has been set for general debate—two hours being the usual time, though it may be 12 hours sometimes—a Member not interested can safely get up and go to his office, or visit out in the cloak rooms for a while. During general debate it often happens that not more than 75 or 100 Members are in their seats. After a while some one will probably call for a quorum, and then we will see the House fill up with Members, as most of them like to answer as many roll calls as possible.

We will sit here in the gallery for a while. This is a historic old room. It has been occupied since 1857; so it has seen much history made. It used to have desks in it, but when the number of Representatives was last increased the desks were taken out and plain, comfortable rows of seats put in. A Member has no special seat. He may sit anywhere he pleases. The Democrats sit on one side and the Republicans on the other.

SPEAKER GILLETT PRESIDING.

The mace is in its place, so we know that the House is in session. If it were in Committee of the Whole, the mace would be resting on the floor.

The mace is the symbol of the Speaker's authority, and it has been doing duty ever since the American Congress was organized.

The Speaker is in the chair, behind a finely carved marble desk. Mr. GILLETT makes an excellent Speaker in this modern day of great freedom in the House. He does not rule with the iron hand of a Tom Reed or as Mr. CANNON did in more recent years, but he is an able presiding officer, tactful and considerate, well posted as to rules and precedents, fair, square, and honorable in all his dealings, absolutely nonpolitical in his decisions, and he makes a very popular Speaker. He is 70 years of age; has served in the House 30 years and as Speaker 4 years. He comes from Springfield, Mass., and is a gentleman of high class and fine instincts. He is popular in his home district, as he is in the House, as is indicated by the fact that only 36 votes were cast for all other candidates for Congress in his district at the last election.

At Mr. GILLETT's left stands a young man who is official timekeeper. Whenever a Member is recognized to speak he has a definite amount of time. Rarely it is an hour, occasionally it is 30 minutes, but usually it is only 5 or 10 minutes. The timekeeper notifies the Speaker and the Speaker calls the Member down at the end of his allotted time. By unanimous consent the Member is sometimes permitted to proceed for 5 or 10 minutes longer, and I have seen Members plead and beg the House for 5 minutes or 2 minutes or 1 minute more, like a Methodist preacher pleading for money to pay off the church debt. Sometimes it is granted, but often a Member says "I object," and that settles it.

PARLIAMENTARIAN IS IMPORTANT.

At the right of the Speaker stands another young man who is the parliamentarian. This young man is supposed to be thoroughly posted and trained in the rules and precedents of the House. He has various books of rules and precedents at hand, and advises with the Speaker or presiding officer when any knotty points of order are to be decided. When the House is in Committee of the Whole the Speaker does not preside, some other Member being selected to be Chairman of the committee.

The House has been run mostly by lawyers for a hundred years or more, and it is not a difficult matter for some lawyer Member to dig up a precedent on either side of any parliamentary question brought up. The House had a Speaker one time of the name of Crisp. His son, Charles, became the parliamentarian for Speaker Clark. Charles is now a valued Member of the House. In the last Congress we had both ex-Speaker CANNON and ex-Speaker Clark on the floor, but they all differ some times on points of order. It was one of the pleasures of Republicans to refer occasionally to the fact that Speaker Clark ruled "thus and so" at some time in the past, and Speaker Clark announced several times in his facetious way: "As a Member on the floor of the House I do not propose to be bound by any rulings I made from the Speaker's chair."

So you can see that with a couple of hundred lawyers in the House there is at times much argument and jangling over points of order and modes of procedure.

MANN KNOWS ALL THE RULES.

However, when JAMES R. MANN is on the floor, the House soon gets some advice that it can depend upon. I think that Mr. MANN knows more about the rules and precedents of the House than all the other Members combined, and he usually has his way, because the man in the chair knows that he knows what he is talking about.

In front and below the Speaker at another marble desk are the reading clerks, who have to be men of considerable ability.

Below and in front are the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk and the official reporters. Every word that is spoken in the House is taken down by an official stenographer. There are five or six of them. They work in shifts of about 20 minutes each. As soon as a stenographer is through with his task he goes to his room and reads his notes into a phonograph. An amanuensis takes the record and puts the stuff through a typewriter and within an hour a Member may read and correct the speech he has made.

To-morrow morning the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will contain a complete report of to-day's proceedings. The RECORD is a little abused, I think. It is a valuable publication and contains much information, little humor, some wisdom, and a minute report of the proceedings of the House. It contains some speeches that are not delivered in the House. Members occasionally get permission to extend their remarks, and a speech of five minutes may be extended over several pages. To do this, unanimous consent must be asked in each instance, which means that if any Member merely says, "I object," the permission is not granted. There are watchdogs of the RECORD as there are of the Treasury, and some one frequently objects. Mr. Clark once said that the greatest speech ever run on an important subject of interest to the country was put in the RECORD by Samuel J. Randall, and was not made in the House.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is issued daily during the sessions of Congress. A Member has only about 50 copies at his disposal. These he sends to libraries, clubs, newspapers, and places where they may be seen by the public at large. He can not fill out many individual requests. Those who are interested in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, however, can subscribe for it at $1.50 per month.

Speeches and remarks [like these, for instance] that are printed and sent out to the public are not printed at public expense. All such speeches are paid for by the individual Members, and while they may be done at the public printing plant they cost about as much as if done by a print shop in Colorado.

LOOKING IN ON CONGRESS—ABOUT THE MEMBERS.

(By Congressman GUY U. HARDY.)

A gentleman has raised the question of a quorum and the roll of the House of Representatives is being called. Most Members try to answer all roll calls in order to maintain a quorum and vote on all measures possible.

Now, the House is filling up, so we will look over the personnel of the body. The House, if all were present, would be composed of 435 Members, with Delegates from Alaska, Hawaii, the Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico. These Delegates do not vote.

I once heard ex-Speaker Clark, in praising the House, say it was the most democratic parliamentary body in the world. He didn't allude to politics. As I have met the Members and have looked over the body of men I have often thought of that remark. As you now look down into the House with me I think you will realize, as I do, that this is a democratic body of men, representing, as it does, the whole of the great American Republic—the greatest Republic in the history of the world. Almost every type and phase of American citizenship is represented there. It is a sort of high-class melting pot. Laborer and manufacturer, rich and poor, big brains and mediocre, wise, earnest men, and near-chumps, all have seats. All classes of business and professions and all shades of political and religious beliefs are represented. Ex-governors, ex-Senators, ex-judges, an ex-President, and ex-convicts have occupied seats. The blind and the halt are well represented. Only the deaf and dumb seem to be missing, though I am of the private opinion that it would not jar the feelings of the House much if some Members were so stricken.

After some years of observation from the inside, I can assure you that Congress is made up of a fine lot of patriotic men.

UNCLE JOE AND JIM MANN.

Here is a good chance to look at some of the men as they walk in. You will recognize some of them from the pictures you have seen. Uncle JOE CANNON saunters in with the cocky air of youth, chewing the cigar cartoonists have made famous. If it is a cool day he may have his hat on. He was elected to Congress first in 1872 and is now serving his twenty-third term. Only twice in all these years has he been defeated, and he told the House one day that the years he was out were the longest years of his life. He is 86 years old and is young for his years. I have seen him dance at a dinner party, and I have heard that he plays a little poker now and then, but never puts in over a dollar or two at a time. He takes a keen interest in important legislation, has a sane view of public affairs, and makes a vigorous speech occasionally. Uncle Joe, as he is affectionately called, has declined to stand for reelection and will close his official career with the ending of this Congress, after serving in the House of Representatives longer than any other man.

I think I have already mentioned JAMES R. MANN. There he is by the table. The two tables in the center of each side of the House are used by the leaders, by the chairman of the committee in charge of a bill, and by others especially interested in the proceedings of the day. Mr. MANN belongs at the table on the Republican side. This is his thirteenth term in the House and he was long the Republican leader. He is not the Fourth of July style of orator, but a most convincing speaker and the best-posted man on pending legislation in the House. He is a terror to those who have private bills up on unanimous-consent day. A bill must be innocent indeed, or properly amended, before it gets through when he is present. I fancy he has saved the Government literally millions of dollars by his industry. In some ways he is the most valuable man in the House.

TWO PARTY LEADERS.

The other gentleman by the table is FRANK MONDELL, the Republican leader at this time. He is serving his thirteenth term in the House—nearly 26 years of service—and he has been absent only four days, an unequaled record, I think. Mr. MONDELL is not a lawyer, but is an able and fearless leader, a keen thinker, and strong debater. He was once a laborer and later a railroad contractor in Colorado, afterwards going to Wyoming. He has a hard, nerve-wrecking job, but does it very well. When he makes a motion it usually carries. Mr. MONDELL will not be in the House in the next Congress, as he is a candidate for the United States Senate.

The leader on the Democratic side is CLAUDE KITCHIN, but I can not point him out to you, as he has been ill at home for about a year. He is a likable chap and was a man of great force in the House. His place is being filled by JOHN N. GARNER, of Texas, and a worthy substitute he makes. He is serving his tenth term, and for 18 years he was a unique Member of the House in that, during all of that time, he never let one of his speeches appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Since assuming leadership, and speaking for the party, he lets his speeches go in. The gentleman by his side is FINIS J. GARRETT, of Tennessee, who acts as assistant minority leader. Mr. GARRETT is in his ninth term. He is a keen cutter, and can roast the Republicans and their measures in a more polished, clever, and entertaining way than any other Member on his side of the House.

ONLY LADY REPRESENTATIVE.

Yes; the lady on the floor is a Member. That is Miss ALICE M. ROBERTSON, of Oklahoma, the only lady Member, and the second woman to be elected to Congress. She was born in Oklahoma 66 years ago. Her father was a missionary to the Cherokees. Miss Alice has been teacher, a postmaster of a first-class office at Muskogee, and in recent years has conducted very successfully the largest cafeteria in Oklahoma. She is not what some are pleased to term themselves, a "new woman." She is a little old-fashioned in a way, for she stands by her convictions and is not easily influenced by organizations outside of her State. She was never a suffragist, and it may seem an irony of fate that the only woman in Congress did not favor votes for women. Miss Alice is a popular Member. She accepts things as they are, asks no favors on account of her sex, and has more good horse sense and is less afraid to stand by her convictions than are most of her fellow Members.

That old boy up in the press gallery is General Sherwood, of Ohio. He was a Member of the Sixty-sixth Congress, but was retired by the landslide. General Sherwood was elected to Congress as a Republican in 1872, the year Uncle JOE CANNON first came in. Then he came back in the Sixtieth Congress as a Democrat and served 14 years. The general is 87 years of age. When retired from Congress he took up newspaper work, his former profession. When asked the other day if he would run again, he said: "No; I can't afford it. I have got to work now and lay up something for old age." But late newspaper reports indicate that he may have changed his mind.

NOT THE PLACE FOR ORATORY.

Who are the orators of the House? Well, that is hard to say. You hear many speeches in the House, but little oratory. I know several gentlemen who are noted orators in their home States whom I have never heard make a speech in the House. Those who have been used to swaying the multitude with their oratory do not get very far with it in the House and soon become disappointed in their audience. I must say the House is not a very attentive listener. The Members get fed up on speeches. They do not care for eloquence. What they want are facts. Order is not very good. Members come in and go out; they talk and read; they listen if something of interest is being said, but they are not sitting there for entertainment and flowery speeches do not draw large audiences here.

A speaker is often interrupted by questions. Any Member may rise at any time and ask if the gentleman will yield for a question. The gentleman usually does yield, and he often gets his set speech badly punctured and comes out with a flat tire. Many Members read their speeches. President Wilson and President Harding, when appearing before Congress, have always read their speeches, and Secretary Hughes read his great speech at the opening of the limitation of arms conference, so it is not necessarily a sign of lack of ability for a man to read a speech, as it is often done to guarantee accuracy. However, we have plenty of orators for all occasions and can furnish the country with a good supply for the campaign.

Do the men in Congress to-day rank up to those of the Congresses of years ago? Well, yes; I think so. If you name your ideals of other days your list covers a hundred years. You are endeavoring to compare this one Congress with 50 others. Of course, I do not care to back this Congress against the whole of American history.

The Congress is not made up of experts or highbrows or bosses or supermen. We have no breed of ruling men in this country. It is made up of a pretty good average of the citizenship it represents—men who meet their folks back home on common ground and do not tower too high above them.

LOOKING IN ON CONGRESS—WHAT THE HOUSE IS LIKE.
(By Congressman GUY U. HARDY.)

When I was a boy I heard a story of three blind men who were taken to "see" an elephant. They were led up to the animal and each felt the first part he came in contact with and went away. In describing it afterwards one of the blind men said that an elephant was like a rope, he having felt the tail; another said it was more like a palm-leaf fan, he having felt its ear; and the third said it did not resemble either but was a big flat object something like a stone wall covered with a leathery skin with some hair on it. Each was speaking from his own point of view and telling only of what he had seen—or rather felt.

It is that way with many things in life. We see only a very small part, yet having seen that, we think that we are competent to judge, describe, and criticize.

An hour or two in the gallery would certainly give one a very lopsided view of Congress. Yet many come, look on for a few moments, and go away to tell of Congress as they have seen it, a good deal as the blind men told of the elephant and with fully as much accuracy.

If you were a casual caller in the gallery you might find the House full of Members, or only half full, or even with only a few dozen present. You might find it doing routine business and as quiet and placid as a summer calm; or excited to fever heat by a partisan discussion between party leaders, or in a storm of agitation over a question of personal privilege or the exercise of personal rights. The House has its varying moods, as human beings have. Sometimes it works along doing business rapidly and as smoothly as clockwork. And sometimes everything seems to be on edge and everybody on his nerves, when one could hardly get an amendment through to dot an "i" or cross a "t" without a fight and a roll call.

CAN NOT ALWAYS BE ON THE FLOOR.

Members need not sit on the floor all the time. They have much to do besides. Much of the business of Congress is transacted in the committees. The major committees are composed of from 21 to 35 members each. Some of the committee meetings are as important and formal as the meeting of a State senate and with about equal membership. Committees are frequently meeting while the House is in session. There is also much office work to be done and Members take advantage of every lull in proceedings to catch up with their office work. There is always departmental work to be taken care of, but Members as a rule do not go down town in the afternoon when the House is in session. Most Members stay within reach of the roll call signals.

Whether your Member is on the floor or not, you may depend upon it that he knows pretty well what is going on and can easily be reached when his presence is required.

The greatest safeguard is thrown about legislation to keep anyone from putting something over. Much is done by unanimous consent when a single Member can object and stop or stay proceedings. A Member may at any time question the presence of a quorum, and if the Speaker does not find a quorum present by actual count the roll is called. Signal bells ring in the corridors, restaurant, and House Office Building so that Members may appear and answer to their names. Whenever a Member is fearful that something will be done which he doesn't want done except by consideration of the whole House, he can raise the question of a quorum and a quorum must be secured before business is further considered.

A quorum in the House consists of a majority of its membership. There are 435 Members when all are alive and there are no vacancies, although there are often two or three vacancies on account of death or resignation. So it usually requires 217 or 218 Members to make a quorum. When the House is doing business as the Committee of the Whole 100 Members make a quorum.

REASONS FOR DEMANDING A QUORUM.

The point of no quorum is raised often because a Member wants a full attendance when the question before the House is considered. It is raised sometimes because some one present wants a good audience for an important speech. It is raised occasionally merely in order to delay the game and is resorted to by the minority to use up the time and postpone or defeat legislation that can not be defeated by a majority vote. It is frequently used when a filibuster is in progress, and sometimes the roll is called six or eight times a day. As it requires 35 or 40 minutes to call the roll, it can be seen how a few roll calls will block the business of the day.

Occasionally the point of no quorum will be raised out of spite. A Member may desire some time to speak and those in charge of the time may feel that they have none at their disposal or for some reason do not wish to yield the gentleman time. The gentleman with a grievance may conclude that he will block the business of the House for a time by causing a roll call. I have seen a Member state frankly on the floor that if he can not get the time desired he will feel it his duty to raise the question of a quorum. Sometimes the gentleman in control of the time will give in and yield the time desired, and sometimes he will call the other gentleman's bluff. These incidents do not occur very often.

Once in a while a little filibuster is resorted to by the minority or by an obstreperous Member who wants to force consideration of some special matter. Then the roll calls come thick and fast. One day the Committee on Rules tried to get a rule adopted giving four hours for debate on a certain bill. The minority took a notion to block the game and it took a day and a half of roll calls to get the rule passed.

Some bills are passed by the majority of those present without a roll call. But any Member can always demand a quorum, and if a quorum is not present a roll call on the bill automatically follows. And even if a quorum is present, 20 per cent of those present can always demand and secure a roll call on any proposition.

TOO MUCH TALKING, OF COURSE.

There is much unnecessary talking in the House. Nobody realizes that so much as those who have to be present and listen to much of it. The same thing is true wherever men and women congregate—especially where they meet to consider matters of public concern. As a reporter I have sat up past midnight listening to rambling, unnecessary talk over some trivial matter at a small town council meeting where only eight or nine members had to agree on a policy.

Some freedom must be given to those who want to talk. Some opportunity must be given for all sides to be heard. It requires some consideration and explanation and talk sometimes to get many minds to look at the subject in the same way.

There is too much unnecessary talk in the House, but I do not see how it could be eliminated. Who is to say what talk may be made and what talk shall not be made? Who is so wise that he may be set up as a censor?

It is not so bad in the House as in the Senate. In the Senate there is no limit on debate. In the House debate is always limited, usually to one or two hours, occasionally to four hours, and perhaps twice in recent years to 12 hours on very important measures.

Congress is often criticized for being slow in doing business. Of course it is slow. It is made up of human beings of many minds. They come from all parts of a great country stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The Representatives represent peoples and communities as diversified and as far apart in thoughts and interests as they are in distance. It requires time for these Representatives of these various minds and interests to weigh and consider and amend and whip into shape and finally agree upon proposed legislation that is to be written for a hundred and ten millions of people and may run for all time. It necessarily takes time for a majority of 435 Members to be brought to see things alike.

This is one of the necessary results of a republican form of government. It is not so in an autocracy. It is not so in Russia. There you get quick action. By a decree from the autocrats the lands are confiscated. By a decree anything can be done quickly. But by parliamentary procedure it takes time for just and due consideration.

But after all Congress is not so slow as compared with other governing bodies in a republic. Consider your own city council, your own board of county commissioners, your own State legislature. Who has not tried for years and years to get a certain street light placed, a street crossing fixed up, a city street cut through, a city park established, the city streets paved, a country road defined, or a bridge built, or this or that law amended, changed, repealed, or passed? Let that individual who has never seen these long delays in getting worthy propositions put through the governing body at home, where every member knows the conditions like a book, throw the first rock at Congress.

REQUIREMENTS FOR MEMBERS.

The Constitution provides that a Representative must have attained the age of 25, have been a citizen of the United States for seven years, and shall be an inhabitant of the State in which he is elected. There is no law specifying that a Representative must be a resident of the district he represents, although it is very unusual for a district to elect a Representative residing in another district. It is done occasionally in New York City. A Senator must be 30 years of age, at least nine years a citizen of the country, and an inhabitant of the State electing him.

LOOKING IN ON CONGRESS—THE STORY OF A BILL.

(By Congressman GUY U. HARDY.)

About the easiest thing in the world for a Member of Congress to do is to introduce a bill.

All one needs to do is to write the bill out on a piece of paper and put it in the basket on the Clerk's desk. Then it has been introduced.

Many bills are introduced, but few are passed. In the last Congress 16,170 bills and 559 joint and concurrent resolutions were introduced in the House, and 5,052 bills and 304 joint and concurrent resolutions in the Senate.

Out of all of these, 69 public resolutions and 521 bills passed and became laws of the land. The record for the greatest number of bills introduced was made in the Sixty-first Congress, when 34,383 bills and resolutions were introduced in the House alone, out of which 810 became law.

When the Clerk gets hold of the bill it is referred to the appropriate committee. And there it may rest in peaceful slumber forever more, or it may be heard from again if enough pressure is exerted in its favor.

Out home a good friend of mine suggested once that he did not like this committee system; he thought that each Member should give individual consideration to every bill introduced.

Imagine it, if you can.

No man can read fast enough to keep up with all bills introduced.

Most committees get more bills referred to them than can be given intelligent consideration. So, naturally, the bills which have the greatest support in the country get first consideration. Congress gives first consideration to the appropriation and revenue bills. These and some other bills of nation-wide importance come along automatically.

HEARINGS ON BILLS.

When a committee decides to give consideration to a bill, if it concerns many people or interests, hearings are held. That is, people interested are invited to come in and tell the committee why they think the bill should or should not become a law.

Sometimes these hearings are quite elaborate affairs. Some last several weeks and hundreds of people come from all over the country to testify for or against the bill. The tariff bill hearing brought experts and prominent representatives of every line of industry to Washington.

The Appropriations Committee has 35 members, the Ways and Means 25 members, and other important committees have 21 members each. The members sit around a long table and the witness addresses them. The witness must know what he is talking about if he would make a good impression. Any member may interrupt him at any time with any question, and before he gets through the committee is likely to find out all he knows and some he doesn't know about his subject. The hearings are open to the public.

An official reporter takes down everything that is said, and later the hearings are printed in paper-bound book form. Some of these hearings, like that on the tariff, for instance, run into thousands of pages. They bring out a vast amount of useful information, and some of the printed hearings are practically textbooks on the subject discussed. The printed hearings are given to all Members, so that they may become posted on any proposed legislation. Others who are interested may, at times, get copies.

After the hearings are closed the committee holds executive sessions and discusses the bill. It may decide not to report it out. This practically kills a bill. It may decide on some or many amendments to the bill, or it may rewrite the bill in another form, or it may report it out as it was introduced.

When the bill is reported out it goes on the calendar. There are several kinds of calendars, operating for different classes of bills under different rules.

DEBATING THE MEASURE.

The big bills come up in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Debate is usually two or four hours, though any amount of time may be agreed upon. Sometimes 12 or 14 hours has been agreed on. The time is equally divided between the majority and minority sides. The greatest fairness as to division and distribution of time always prevails. The time is parceled out by the chairman of the committee in charge on the majority side and the ranking minority Members on the other side.

The bill is first read. Then comes the debate. Sometimes Members must stick to the subject under discussion, and sometimes they are permitted to talk about anything under the sun. Here is where campaign speeches sometimes get in.

After the hours for general debate have been used up the bill is read again by sections for amendments. This is termed "reading the bill under the five-minute rule," as no Member may talk more than five minutes, except by unanimous consent. No Member can get the floor except to advocate or oppose an amendment. Members do often make a motion "to strike out the last word." or "last two words," etc., in order to get the floor for five minutes.

Many amendments are offered and usually some are adopted. On one bill over 300 amendments were offered. Often amendments are offered in order to weaken the bill and help to defeat it. Amendments not supported by the committee have hard sledding and few are passed. Occasionally amendments are offered by Members merely to enable them to make a speech that may please constituents interested. It has been estimated that only about 5 per cent of the amendments offered on the floor are adopted.

When the bill is read through for amendments, which is the second reading, the Committee of the Whole votes on recommending its passage. If this is favorable, the committee then "rises" and the Speaker takes the chair and calls the House to order.

The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole reports the proceedings to the Speaker. Then the bill comes up for third reading. It is read by title only and voted on without further remarks or debate.

FIXED UP IN CONFERENCE.

If it is passed, the bill is sent to the Senate and has the same rocky road to travel over there. Probably it will have sundry amendments tacked to it in the Senate. Then it comes back to the House for another vote. If the House declines to accept the amendments put in by the Senate, the bill is sent to conference. That is, a committee made up of a few Senators and Representatives, the ranking members on the committees that reported the bill out, consider all phases, endeavor to compromise differences, and when they agree their report goes back to both Houses and is usually adopted. Once in a while the bill is sent back to conference several times before one of the Houses is satisfied.

Many a proud father of proposed legislation does not recognize his fond offspring when it is finally passed by both Houses and is ready to be sent over for the President's signature.

There are several other ways of getting bills up in the House. Those pertaining to claims and pensions and of a private nature come up under "unanimous consent." On consent day the father of the bill has good reason to be on the anxious seat, for a single Member may "object" and prevent the consideration of the bill. Very seldom does a Member object out of spite or on account of personal enmity. But there are a half dozen who make a specialty of studying these bills and stand ready to see that they are properly amended or objected to. And many an innocent looking little bill is choked to death on unanimous-consent day.

Some bills come up under a special rule. The Rules Committee presents a resolution providing a special rule for consideration of a bill. The bonus bill, for instance, came up under a special rule. Four hours were allowed for debate and then the bill came up for vote, without allowing any amendments to be offered. You had to take the bill the way it was or not at all. The object, of course, was to prevent unreasonable and harmful amendments being offered or adopted. Men often vote for an amendment and then vote against the bill.

Some think that a curb should perhaps be put on the introduction of so many bills, but that is hardly possible. Who would be competent to censor? Of course, the greatest freedom in this respect must prevail. Let the Congress and the country decide which are worthy and needful. As a matter of fact, when you come to think about it the wonder is that many more bills are not introduced, for practically every man and most every woman in the country has in his or her system the idea of some new law or laws that in his or her opinion ought to be enacted. Many of these ideas of proposed new legislation find their way in the shape of bills to the basket on the Clerk's desk in the House of Representatives or in the Senate. Many start there, but very few wind up at the White House seeking the President's signature.

BUNCOMBE IN CONGRESS.

When the Missouri compromise bill was up for final passage in the House of Representatives in 1820, Henry Clay was pressing for a vote. A Member from North Carolina had been begging for a little time. Mr. Clay tried diligently to put him off; there was no time to yield; the big bill should come up for a vote.

"But," retorted the industrious Member, who had a speech in his system and wanted to get it out, "I must make a speech for Buncombe."

Thus, a hundred and two years ago a new word was coined in a most unexpected manner, and it has come on down the century, growing in significance as it has been abbreviated.

Buncombe, bunkum, bunk—they all mean the same, and the meaning has not changed in the 102 years.

Felix Walker was a sturdy Member of the talkative kind. The old Congressional Globe reports several of his speeches. One of the principal counties in his district was Buncombe County, N. C. Election was coming on. He wanted something to touch the hearts of the voters back home. He wanted to say something for Buncombe.

History does not record whether he succeeded in getting the time to make that speech or not, but he did succeed in coining a new word that will long hold its place in the American dictionaries.

Felix Walker served in the House of Representatives from 1817 to 1823. Whether he was the first to make a speech for Buncombe I do not know. I rather fancy not. But after an intimate knowledge of the House for several years I am fully convinced that he was not the last. In fact, I think he has had many worthy followers—some of whom are still with us.

LOOKING IN ON CONGRESS.

(By Congressman GUY U. HARDY.)

Seniority or length of service has long been a controlling factor in many things in the House of Representatives. I suppose it has always been so more or less, and it is a little more so now than formerly, if possible.

A Member gets his office room in the House Office Building, his seat at committee tables, his rank on his committee, his chairmanship of committee, his place as a conferee on conference committees of the House and Senate, and many other little favors and big opportunities for influence through seniority.

There was a time when the Speaker had some choice in fixing up committees and chairmanships. You heard Uncle JOE CANNON roundly "cussed" about his exercise of that privilege a few years ago. Even then most of the chairmen were selected because they had served longest on the committees. But the Speaker had some latitude and he did make some independent appointments in an effort to put the best qualified man in the place. And often such appointment raised Cain. About 12 years ago there was a revolution, Uncle Joe was defeated for Speaker, new rules were adopted. Committee assignments are now made by a large Committee on Committees and the seniority rule is closely adhered to. There has been but one notable exception in years. The present chairman of Appropriations was not the high man but the second high man on the list.

Chairmen of committees have much power and influence in directing legislation. They can help write legislation, help push it through the committee or hold it back. They have charge of it on the floor. Many bills pass the House in one form and the Senate in another. If one House refuses to accept the amendments of the other, the bill is sent to conference. Conference committees include three or five Members from each House. The House conferees now usually consist of two Republicans and one Democrat or three Republicans and two Democrats who have served longest on the committee. These conferees get together and agree to anything they can and report their findings back. These reports are usually accepted by both Houses.

The seniority rule has been much criticized and there is room for criticism. But there is something to be said for it. Chairmen have the advantage of long experience on their committees. If they are not dubs they must have learned much about the business in hand, and usually dubs do not remain long in Congress. Any other method of selection would start log-rolling, build up machinery and factions, and breed strife and trouble.

The old Members are for seniority rule, and while the new Members may be critical, I rather fancy we will never get far away from it.

However, after all is said, it does sometimes appear that seniority and long service have more influence and power in the House of Representatives than brilliancy and ability.

CHAMP CLARK'S ADVICE.

In discussing the value of long service in the Congress, ex-Speaker Champ Clark said in the House in an address in 1916:

"A man has to learn to be a Representative just as he must learn to be a blacksmith, a carpenter, a farmer, an engineer, a lawyer, or a doctor.

* * * * * * *

"It is an unwise performance for any district to change Representatives at short intervals. A new Congressman must begin at the foot of the class and spell up. Of course, the more brains, tact, energy, courage, and industry he has, the quicker he will get up. If he possess these qualities, and if his constituents will keep him in the House, he is as certain to rise as the sparks are to fly upward. No human power can keep him down. It is only fair and rational to assume that every Representative's constituents desire to see him among the 'top-notchers.'

* * * * * * *

"No man should be elected to the House simply to gratify his ambition. All Members should be elected for the good of the country.

"The best rule, it seems to me, is for a district to select a man young enough to learn and to grow, with at least fair capacity, industrious, honest, energetic, sober, and courageous, and keep him here so long as he discharges his duties faithfully and well. Such a man will gradually rise to high position and influence in the House. His wide acquaintance with Members helps him amazingly in doing things. We live in parlous times. Abraham Lincoln's favorite argument for his own reelection was that it is unwise to swap horses in the middle of the river—which applies to Congressmen as well as Presidents.

"I can speak freely on this subject without violating the proprieties, for my constituents have kept me here 22 years, and for 20 years have given me nominations without opposition, for all of which favors I thank them from the bottom of my heart. Their generous action and unwavering friendship have enabled me to devote all my time to the public service. I have not been compelled to spend any portion of my time in 'mending my fences.' My constituents have attended to that. God bless them!"

WHEN A CONGRESSMAN DIES.

When a Congressman dies the House solemnly passes a resolution of acknowledgment and then adjourns. But usually by common consent the resolution is held on the Speaker's desk until the business of the day has been completed, and at about 5 or 5.30 o'clock the resolution is read, passed, and the House stands adjourned.

The resolution always runs the same. It reads:

"Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Mr. Blank, a Representative from the State of ———.

"Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

"Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn."

Few things are permitted to interfere with the business of the House. The work goes grinding on through the weeks and months. The House passes laws setting apart holidays that others may rest, and celebrate, and revere the memory of notable men, but the House goes on with the Nation's business without resting or celebrating.

The House evidently thinks that the best respect it can pay to the memory of the country's notables and its own dead is to go on with its important work. And so it does, usually.

Occasionally, if business is not too pressing and if the deceased Member was more or less prominent, the resolution is passed soon after the House meets at noon. And when that happens I dare say that most of the Members feel a good deal as the schoolboy feels when a teacher or a fellow pupil dies and school is dismissed; they enjoy getting a day off.

Seventeen Members are usually appointed to attend the funeral, and when a Member dies in office he is likely to have a notable gathering at his grave side.

A day is set apart when those who knew him best pay eloquent tribute to his work and memory. Here again the economical tendency of Congress is shown, as the day set is always a Sunday when other business is not up for consideration. The speeches delivered on this occasion are published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and a little booklet containing them is made up, each Member being given a few copies.

The other day I looked up a copy of one of these memorials for a gentleman in Pueblo. It was the memorial address on the life and character of James N. Burns, of Missouri, delivered February 23, 1889. Although this was over 33 years ago, I was surprised to note how many gentlemen spoke on that day whose names are well known to us of this day; and some of the addresses are notable examples of eloquence. Ex-Speaker Henderson, Dockery, Holman, Randall, Breckenridge, Butterworth, Stone, Grosvenor, Cockrell, Voorhees, Hale, Gorman, and Vest. Surely an array of brilliant names.

It is customary for Congress to vote a year's pay to the widow of a deceased Member.

There are many deaths in Congress. I am told about 18 a year, and the flag on the House Office Building flies at half-mast a good deal of the time.

In the present Congress there have been 13 deaths. They are as follows: Fred L. Blackmon, of Alabama; Samuel M. Taylor, of Arkansas; John A. Elston, of California; William E. Mason, of Illinois; William H. Frankhauser, of Michigan; Charles F. Van de Water, of California; Henry D. Flood, of Virginia; Prince J. Kuhio Kalanianaole, of Hawaii; Lucian W. Parrish, of Texas; Samuel M. Brinson, of North Carolina; and Moses R. Kinkaid, of Nebraska.

Two of these Members committed suicide and two were killed in automobile accidents.

After a death occurs the governor of the State from which the deceased comes, as soon as he can decently do so, calls a special election to fill the vacancy. If he does not do this the vacancy is not filled until the next regular election.

Over in the Senate when a death occurs the governor of the State appoints a Senator to fill the vacancy until the next regular State election. A constitutional amendment has been suggested to provide that vacancies in the House should be filled in like manner. Such an arrangement would save the States much money which special elections necessarily cost.

HOME PROBLEM OF MEMBERS.

One of a Congressman's little troubles is the home problem—getting a house to live in. Washington is the highest priced city in the country. Property and rents are high. If a man is there alone, he can live at a hotel. If he has a family, he must have a house or an apartment. The hotels are high priced. The houses and flats are out of sight.

What Members pay for houses, of course, depends upon what they get and want to pay. Several Members pay $7,500 a year rent, and quite a number pay from $3,600 to $5,000. Of course, they do not live on their salaries. They get something from back home. The Members who try to live on their salaries, or nearly so, pay from $150 to $250 a month for a furnished house. And you do not get as much in Washingtor for $200 a month as you can get in Colorado cities for $50.

Within the moderate prices, houses are very hard to get and usually undesirable. Most residence property in Washington is built in rows—houses in solid blocks, like store buildings. They are usually 17 to 20 feet wide, three stories high, with three rooms on each floor, windows only in front and back, a front yard 10 or 12 feet deep.

FIRST CONGRESS MET IN 1789.

The Congress in session at this time is the Sixty-seventh Congress. The First Congress under the Constitution met in 1789. It should have met on March 4, but a quorum did not show up, so it adjourned from day to day until April 1, when it opened for business. On April 6 of that year both Houses met in joint session and canvassed the electoral vote for President and Vice President. George Washington was found to be elected President and John Adams Vice President.

CONGRESS LASTS TWO YEARS.

Congress consists of a two-year term. There are two regular sessions and occasionally a special session or two. Members of the House of Representatives are elected for two years and Senators for a term of six years. The Congress elected in November does not convene in regular session until the first Monday in December of the following year. But for several years a special session has been called soon after the 4th of March following the election.

LOOKING IN ON CONGRESS—A CONGRESSMAN'S DAY.

(By Congressman GUY U. HARDY.)

Most people think that a Congressman has a soft snap. Little work, big pay, bright lights, much society. I suppose I used to think so. I had seen legislatures at work, and I naturally supposed that such an important body as the Congress would not work more continuously than does a State legislature. I had never seen much of the eastern part of the country, and when I came down here I found myself planning little week-end trips to New York, Atlantic City, New England, and near-by places.

But I had another guess coming. The Congress takes mighty few week-end recesses.

In olden times, a few years ago in fact, the Congress was in session, more or less leisurely, for about half the year. The Members could spend a good deal of time back home where Congressmen are not so numerous and where their official title cuts more ice than it does here in Washington. But during the past six or seven years the Congress has been in almost continuous session. The war, of course, threw a big burden on Congress and brought about the extra long sessions. The talk here would indicate that for a long time to come a Member will spend most of his time in Washington.

The House meets every day at 12 o'clock noon and continues in session usually until 5 or 6 o'clock at night, and sometimes later. It meets usually every day except Sunday. It observes few legal holidays and has taken only short recess at Christmas times.

When the House is in session a Member rarely leaves the hill. He may not sit in the House all the time, but he sticks around near by so as to be on hand if a quorum is needed or a vote taken.

He gets his lunch whenever he can. There is a restaurant in the Capitol and in the House Office Building, and he usually eats hurriedly in one of these when he finds a slack time. Men's tastes in lunches vary everywhere, but I have observed that Members are usually light eaters at lunch time. The Speaker and several other men of my acquaintance always take a pint bottle of milk and eat it in a bowl with crackers or bread. This may be followed by ice cream, pie, or some simple dessert.

HARD WORK IN COMMITTEES.

If a Member had nothing else to do but to attend sessions of the House and give some study, thought, and consideration to the big problems before Congress he would find himself quite well occupied. But that is only half of the work—perhaps not half. Much of the business of Congress is conducted in committees.

Every bill is first considered in a committee, and sometimes a committee spends weeks or months holding hearings and considering a single bill. This was true of the revenue, tariff, bonus, immigration, educational, prohibition enforcement, appropriation, and other big bills. Some committees meet every day for weeks at a time, and others at less frequent intervals. Committees usually meet at 10 o'clock in the morning. Sometimes they go on working while the House is in session and sometimes they meet at night.

Some Members have very hard committee work and some are more or less fortunate, as they choose to look at it. As a rule, every committee wants to consider every bill that can possibly be referred to it, and almost every Member is anxious to get on the most important and hardest working committees.

Then there is the office work. The mail brings lots of office work. The office and departmental work alone would keep a man fairly busy all of the time if he worked union hours.

MUCH BUSINESS WITH DEPARTMENTS.

The practice has grown up for many people to write their Congressman about their business with the various departments. The western Members get a great deal more of this class of work to do than do the Members from the East and South. The public land States furnish much business that must be looked after at the General Land Office. During the week a Member is apt to have business before the Interior Department, the Forestry Service, the Pension Bureau, the Veterans' Bureau, and the Post Office Department. And he may have an immigration case before the Labor Department, a passport case before the Department of State, some business in some branch of the Agriculture Department, and almost anything else before any other bureau or department in Washington.

A Member never considers the question of official duty. If it is something that can properly be done, and a constituent wants it done, he goes and does it. And he is glad to do it, for it makes him a friend back home. But it all takes time and helps to make his day a full day.

Offices are usually open by 9 o'clock in the morning and many Members are there ahead of their secretaries. The secretaries may have hours to work by, but the Congressman has none—or rather many. There are lights in half the offices at night and the best time to find many Members in their offices is at night.

Society affairs are not on the daily program of many Members. A few large receptions may be attended and a few dinners exchanged, but the average Member wears his evening clothes, if he has any, less frequently in Washington than he does in his home town.

So it may be seen that a Congressman, if he takes his job seriously, soon finds that in Washington he is just a plain, everyday workingman with a daily program full and complete.

A CONGRESSMAN'S MAIL.

A Congressman's desk is full of mail and propaganda.

What do the people write about, you ask.

Well, about almost everything under the sun. The Congressman is the bureau of information for his district. He is the direct Representative for his district of the great Government at Washington to which all people turn when in need or distress.

Letters come favoring or opposing legislation; asking for information on every conceivable subject; asking for Government aid in all sorts of enterprises; asking help to get people out of all sorts of difficulties and troubles; asking for information that will help boys and girls in debates; asking for decisions to help settle bets; asking for literature on all manner of subjects; asking for aid in getting post offices and rural routes established.

The homesteader seeks his Congressman's assistance in land office matters. The old soldier and the soldier of later wars bring many problems to their Congressman. The mothers of soldiers often have need of help in the way of delayed insurance adjustments, a discharge for the boy who enlisted under age, and occasionally help to get clemency for a boy in prison. The farmer asks for bulletins, agriculture yearbooks, garden seed, rare field seed, farm loans, and a variety of other things. One wrote in and asked for the loan of a Government bull. They also write often about fence laws, road laws, and high taxes on real estate, with all of which the Federal Government has nothing to do.

Claims against the Government produce much mail and some work. Some of the claims are recent and collectible, but many are for losses during the Civil War and before, and these, however just, are hard to do anything with at this late date.

Many people write urging larger appropriations for various departments of the Government in which they or their communities are directly interested. Some urge greater appropriations and lower Federal taxes at the same time.

Some letters refer to jobs the writers would like to obtain, but a Congressman has little influence in procuring jobs now since nearly all Government positions have been put in the civil service. This class of letters does not crowd the desk.

There are many unclassified requests, such as one from the citizens of a certain town alleging that the citizens of another town had stolen their courthouse in the night and asking for its return through Government agency.

PROPAGANDA IS PLENTIFUL.

Then there is the propaganda, which is in a class by itself. It comes from all quarters of the globe and covers all subjects relating to life, from birth control to Government graveyards. It is delivered by wire, mail, and messenger. It runs in volume from a telegram or post card to bound books. No subject is suggested in Congress, it seems, that does not bring forth a shower of propaganda, and some subjects bring a deluge.

So you can see that a Congressman's desk is apt to be full of mail. His office is quite a business institution. If he had no legislative duties to perform he would find his whole time well employed in taking care of the mail and the requests for service which the mails bring in.

And, withal, let me say that a Congressman likes to hear from home. He wants to be of service to his constituents. He courts the business, so to speak. He is proud of the big bunch of mail that comes in and is pleased to see a big bunch go out at the close of the day. A big mail indicates a close touch with home. Most Members answer most letters. I have replied to every letter that has come to my office from Colorado except one. That came from a sort of anarchist, I would judge. Anyway, I could hardly dictate a proper reply to a lady stenographer, so that single letter among the thousands went into the wastebasket unanswered.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. FREEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the river and harbor bill and ask to disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for on the river and harbor bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (10766), authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are two very important amendments added to the river and harbor authorization bill in the Senate, one providing for the purchase of the Cape Cod Canal and the other in reference to the Dismal Swamp Canal. It was my privilege to talk with the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors on his way home a week ago. I am not privileged to express his position on those projects, but I wish to inquire whether the chairman of the committee (Mr. DEMPSEY) is going to be one of the conferees on the river and harbor bill and will be in the city to attend the conference?

Mr. FREEMAN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman I understand the gentleman from New York (Mr. DEMPSEY) will be here this afternoon and will take part in the conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, so far as the Dismal Swamp project is concerned, if it is not going to be disagreed to in conference from my acquaintance with the project, the House should have an opportunity to express its opinion on it before an agreement is reached.

Mr. FREEMAN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman I will state that it is a matter that may be attended to in conference, and after the conferees have considered the matter the House will have an opportunity to act upon it.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is not definite enough. I would like for the House to have an opportunity to vote on the Dismal Swamp project if the conferees are not disposed to disagree to it, because from what I know of the facts in the case it is not worthy of adoption.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to say this——

Mr. STAFFORD. In the closing hours of a Congress I do not intend to have a project of that character adopted without any consideration on the part of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I know something about the matter, probably more than does the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I oppose my view to the view he has stated. I think it is a proposition that ought to be very seriously and deliberately considered by the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what I am asking, that the House be given an opportunity to consider it, and not merely have it considered on the conference report and voted up or down.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman made the statement, that unless the House is disposed to reject the proposition there ought to be a yea and nay vote.

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not say that. I said that unless the conferees are disposed to disagree to it, I want the House to be given an opportunity to vote upon it before it is agreed to in conference.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, has this proposition ever been considered by the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. FREEMAN. Not definitely.

Mr. DYER. I think the gentleman's proposition is the correct one. We ought to have an opportunity to vote upon it.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I would say to the gentleman that the committee has considered the Dismal Swamp proposition.

Mr. DYER. During this Congress?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Yes, during this Congress, and within the last 60 days. There is a member of the committee behind me hears me.

Mr. FREEMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], I will make an agreement in behalf of the gentleman from New York to that effect in so far as I have the power to act for him.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, we could not hear what the gentleman from Connecticut said.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut said that in the absence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] he would make an agreement in so far as he had the power. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that in the report is this Cape Cod Canal proposition, which is recommended by a bill now on the calendar, reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which I have very serious objection.

I regret very much that I am compelled to object in the matter, to taking any short cut, such as is proposed. May I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, Mr. Speaker, if the House will have an opportunity to vote on that Cape Cod Canal proposition as a separate matter?

Mr. FREEMAN. I make the same statement in regard to the Cape Cod Canal proposition as to the Dismal Swamp Canal, that the House will have an opportunity to vote upon either one or both of them.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I understand that will be separate?

Mr. FREEMAN. Yes; so far as I am concerned.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as conferees on the part of the House Mr. DEMPSEY, Mr. FREEMAN, Mr. RADCLIFFE, Mr. MANSFIELD, and Mr. KINDRED.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW—10.30 O'CLOCK.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10.30 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is for the purpose of expediting the consideration of the conference report on the tariff bill?

Mr. MONDELL. That is my purpose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It will require, if I am correctly informed, at least two hours to read the report or the statement, whichever one may be read. It is the intention, I presume, to dispose finally of the conference report to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. It is.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I suggest that now is a good time to make an arrangement for the disposition of time in the debate on the conference report to-morrow. As I understand, you are asking unanimous consent to meet at 10.30 o'clock to-morrow morning, and that, as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], is for the purpose of expediting the passage of the bill to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Would it not be well now to arrange that after the statement or report is read, so much time shall be had by the gentleman from Michigan and myself?

Mr. FORDNEY. That is agreeable to me, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, when the report shall have been read, I ask that we have four hours' general debate on the bill, one half of that time to be controlled by myself and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], and that at the end of that time the previous question be ordered.

The SPEAKER. Considered as ordered?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that there be four hours' general debate, and that half of that time be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. That does not waive any rights as to points of order on the conference report?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair so understands.

EXTERMINATION OF INSECTS.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House Concurrent Resolution No. 66.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House Concurrent Resolution No. 66, with Senate amendments. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 66.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Architect of the Capitol be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make a contract for the extermination and banishment of insects from the House Office Building, the Capitol, and the Senate Office Building at an expenditure not to exceed $2,500. That the expenditures in carrying out the contract be paid from the contingent funds of the House and Senate in equal proportions, and upon vouchers authorized by the respective committees having control of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives and approved by the chairmen thereof.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. The principal Senate amendment has merely doubled the amount of money that will be available for the extermination of rodents, roaches, and bugs.

Mr. IRELAND. Quite so.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has any estimate been given the committee by the Architect of the Capitol as to how this money is to be expended, whether under contract or by the employment of individuals?

Mr. IRELAND. There is a perfect understanding between the committee and the Architect of the Capitol. It is to be done under contract, and the gentleman from Wisconsin will observe that the resolution states "not to exceed" a certain amount. We rely on the Architect of the Capitol to make the most equitable and best contract possible. I think the amount inserted by the Senate is excessive, but we have the protection of the office of the Architect of the Capitol. I think it is amply protected under the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. IRELAND, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

LAKE ANDES, S. DAK.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table House bill 243, providing for the construction of a spillway and drainage ditch to lower and maintain the level of Lake Andes, S. Dak., and to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to take from the Speaker's table and concur in the Senate amendments to a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the scope of the amendments just read and how they change the original House bill if in any material particular?

Mr. SNYDER. A number of years ago four wells were sunk upon this land for the purpose of providing water for Indian allotments. They have produced so much water, more than is needed—which is very unusual—that the surplus water has spread over certain lands and formed a sort of lake. The proposition now is to provide a spillway and ditch for taking the water away, so that it will not destroy the land that the water has backed up upon. Since the bill was originally presented it has been found that by raising the level 2 feet it will cost considerably less money to carry out the project. So the bill has been amended and the authorization reduced from $60,000 to $50,000. There is no other purpose. It is an absolute necessity for the purpose of retaining what land we have up there for the use of the people who own it and who are allotted upon it. Therefore, this morning the committee held a meeting and decided to accept the amendments, and authorized me to ask that the House accept them.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

FORT PECK RESERVATION, MONT.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 8010, an act to authorize the leasing for mining purposes of unallotted lands on the Fort Peck Reservation, Mont., and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to take from the Speaker's table and agree to the Senate amendment to a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, the Senate amendment is in the identic form in which the Committee on Indian Affairs originally reported the bill to the House.

Mr. SNYDER. Absolutely the same.

Mr. STAFFORD. During the consideration of the bill in the House an amendment was adopted providing that the land should be leased under the terms of the general oil leasing law.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why did the gentleman not insist on that amendment?

Mr. SNYDER. I had no opportunity to insist upon it. The bill has just come over, and there is so little difference between the one proposition and the other that it really amounts to nothing.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has that opportunity now, to move to disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference, so as to test out that provision as to whether the leasing of these oil lands on the Fort Peck and Black Earth Indian Reservations should be according to the terms of the general oil leasing bill or not. That was the purpose of the House in adopting the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. That was the purpose of the gentleman who made the motion.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was the purpose of the House in adopting the amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. The purpose was to allow the leasing of certain surplus lands that were earning nothing for anyone, so as to produce some revenue from them, and from my investigation, so far as income from that surplus property is concerned, there would be no difference whether we adopt this language or the language of the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the language of the bill in its present form is preferable to the amendment offered in the House. I do not know, and I doubt if anyone knows just what regulation under the general leasing act would be followed in connection with the leasing of land on an Indian reservation where the funds go to the Indians. I think the original House provision the better one, leaving the matter to the discretion of the Secretary under the general law, and the rules that apply to the leasing of lands on Indian reservations.

Mr. STAFFORD. That allows the leasing of them without any limit at all, indefinitely and for all time to come, whereas under the general oil leasing law the leasing is for a term of years.

Mr. MONDELL. The Indian leases are generally for a shorter term than the leases under the general leasing act—they are almost invariably for a shorter period.

Mr. SNYDER. The Interior Department makes the leases anyway, and, as far as I have been able to discover since I have had anything to do with Indian affairs, the Indians are pretty well looked out for in the making of these leases, whether they are made by one board or the other, so I was not particularly technical about this. I think the Senate amendment is all right. Therefore I agreed with the committee this morning that we would ask the House to accept the Senate amendment. If the House does not wish to do that, it will be perfectly agreeable to me.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION ACT OF 1920.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 10672, to amend the act of July 24, 1919, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920," and agree to the Senate amendment to the title.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up a House bill with a Senate amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment to the title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

CERTAIN APPLICATIONS FOR AND ENTRIES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 10419 validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill which the Clerk will report, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, and Mr. HAYDEN.

PUBLIC PARK FOR CANON CITY, COLO.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 7053, to grant certain lands to the city of Canon City, Colo., for a public park, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill which the Clerk will report, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, and Mr. HAYDEN.

PUBLIC PARK FOR ESCAMBIA COUNTY, FLA.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 7967, granting certain lands to Escambia County, Fla., for a public park, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill which the Clerk will report, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, and Mr. HAYDEN.

FRANCES KELLY.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 9275, for the relief of Frances Kelly, and to disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill which the Clerk will report, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object on this bill. I believe there is a distinct proposition involved. There was some question whether we should ever grant to this woman the right to these lands in the forest reserve. Is the gentleman acquainted with the Senate amendment?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; I am not very well acquainted with the Senate amendment. It was handed to me, and I think it is a bill which should go to conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman have it lie over temporarily?

Mr. SINNOTT. I have no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House dispense with business under the Calendar Wednesday call to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday business to-morrow be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 39 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order heretofore adopted, adjourned until Wednesday, September 13, 1922, at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ECHOLS: A bill (H. R. 12603) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at Beckley, W. Va.; to the Committee on Public Building and Grounds.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 12604) to provide for public education upon political questions and for the dissemination of information upon political issues and matters of a political nature of public interest; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 12605) to forbid the employment of noxious substances upon the living bodies of domestic animals; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 12606) for the relief of Charles Ritzel; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 12607) granting a pension to Sallie T. Dietrich; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12608) granting a pension to Helen Gordon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HADLEY: A bill (H. R. 12609) to provide for a preliminary survey of the Skagit River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 12610) granting a pension to John Forncrook; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HICKS: A bill (H. R. 12611) for the relief of W. R. Grace & Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. O'CONNOR: A bill (H. R. 12612) for the relief of Frank B. Ferrill; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ROBSION: A bill (H. R. 12613) granting a pension to Ruth V. Hutchens; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12614) granting a pension to Vina Hacker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12615) granting a pension to Grant Combs; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SEARS: A bill (H. R. 12616) for the relief of Emma LaMee; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12617) for the relief of H. B. Stout; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SPEAKS: A bill (H. R. 12618) granting a pension to Anna O'Neil; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TREADWAY: A bill (H. R. 12619) granting an increase of pension to Esther E. Green; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6295. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce of America (Inc.), New York City, N. Y., regarding Senate bill 3076, to create a bureau of aeronautics; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

6296. Also, petition of Army and Navy Journal, New York City, N. Y., regarding the Army appropriation bill for 1922 and 1923; to the Committee on Appropriations.

6297. Also, petition of the Modern Priscilla, Boston, Mass., favoring the passage of House bill 11965; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

6298. Also, petition of International Association of Machinists, Washington, D. C., favoring the passage of House bill 10967; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

6299. Also, petition of Charles Colman Miller, Esq., Brooklyn, N. Y., regarding the tariff bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6300. By Mr. SPEAKS: Papers to accompany House bill 12566, granting a pension to Mary M. Maynard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

6301. By Mr. TOWNER: Petition of 35 widows of soldiers of the Civil War of Mount Ayr, Iowa, asking for the passage of a law to increase pensions to $72 and $50 per month; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, September 13, 1922.

Rev. Wallace Radcliffe, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Blessed be the Lord who daily loadeth us with His benefits, even the God of our salvation. Accept our thanksgiving. Forgive our sins of forgetfulness or neglect or abuse, or in any way wherein we have not obeyed Thee, and endow us with Thy grace for that which Thou hast appointed to us for this day.

Again we thank Thee and especially are grateful that Thou art lifting Thy hand from the special burden in the home of the Chief Executive. Continue Thy favor. Quickly restore to health and vigor. Relieve all fear and anxiety. And to Thy servant, the President of the United States, and to all of us, out of the things that are not joyous but grievous, bring the exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

Bless Thy servants of the United States Senate to-day. Keep them in Thy fear. Endow them with Thy wisdom, that their lives may be in Thy favor and their decisions be in harmony, to the peace and righteousness of the Nation and to the glory of Thy name. Through Jesus Christ. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, September 11, 1922, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the fourth judicial circuit, for the appointment of additional district judges for certain districts, providing for an annual conference of certain judges, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

TEAPOT DOME CONTRACT—NAVAL RESERVE NO. 3, WYOMING.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to have printed in the RECORD certain papers which I send to the desk, being a short note written by me to the Secretary of the Interior, his letter in reply, with certain memoranda, and an item clipped from the Boston Transcript, all concerning a matter in Wyoming relative to the production of oil, which I think important. I ask that the matter may be printed in 8-point type.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
Washington, D. C., August 28, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Your attention has probably been called to those pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD setting forth some criticisms of the Teapot Dome contract made in the Senate.

You can realize that the State of Wyoming is very intensely interested in this matter, owing to the fact that the land in question is located in that State, and the State is in hopes that it may obtain a substantial interest in the Government royalty through the enactment of necessary legislation.

It would be appreciated if you would advise me fully relative to your conception of the alleged causes for the criticism of this contract which has been made by some of the Senators.

Trusting I may hear from you at your convenience, and with kind regards, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

F. E. WARREN.

Hon. A. B. FALL,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 12, 1922.

MY DEAR SENATOR WARREN: I have your note in which, among other things, you state: "It would be appreciated if you would advise me fully relative to your conception of the alleged causes for the criticism of this contract which has been made by some of the Senators." Of course, you refer to what is known as the Teapot Dome contract, and, among others, I suppose, to the recent speech of Senator KENDRICK.

Under date September 8 an article concerning this contract appeared in the Boston Transcript, and I think other papers, the same being written by William E. Brigham.

Mr. Brigham, after reading one of these speeches, came to me concerning the same and was furnished a memorandum which I dictated, also of facts, etc., from the records in the Bureau of Mines, and after the preparation of this article he read the same over to me before having it published. I therefore had an opportunity to check it over, and I can say to you that the statements as to royalties, bonus, and other data and figures given are correct, as shown by our records.

Some time since an article appeared in the Denver Post which appears to be the basis for the errors made by Senator KENDRICK and others. At that time I had a memorandum prepared concerning these various misstatements, or incorrect statements, and I am also inclosing you this memorandum. In addition to the comparative data given in the Brigham statement and in the memorandum inclosed I might call attention to the fact that upon section 30, in the Salt Creek field, Mr. F. G. Bonfils has a permit with a producing well thereupon for which no lease has been requested and which pays a flat royalty under the law of 20 per cent. The tested 24-hour production of this well is 1,125 barrels. If the well were allowed to produce at this rate, and royalty could be collected under the Teapot Dome-Sinclair contract upon the oil produced, the lessee would pay 35.74 per cent royalty instead of 20 per cent.

As to the real causes of the original criticism concerning this contract I am informed that some persons claim that they were entitled, by assignment or otherwise, to a large amount of money through the sale by the Pioneer Oil Co. to Sinclair of titles to the privately claimed lands within the Teapot Dome. I am informed that Sinclair paid $1,000,000 for the titles to these properties, and that some parties, of whom at the time he knew nothing, and who had no contract of record, have declined to settle with the Pioneer Co. and are seeking to collect some sum between $500,000 and $5,000,000. My information is that these parties are very much impressed with the idea that they can not recover by a suit, but that by agitation in the press and in the Senate they may secure a large sum.

Very respectfully yours,

ALBERT B. FALL, Secretary.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate.

MEMORANDUM.

No attempt is made at this time to answer fully the speech of Senator JOHN B. KENDRICK of Wyoming, delivered in the United States Senate on August 25, 1922, relative to the contract between the Government and the Mammoth Oil Co., for the development of naval reserve No. 3, Wyoming. It is felt, however, that the Senate should be advised on a few of the more important facts.

The Senator states: "I also appealed to geologists and to others experienced in the oil business for information," which has led me to conclude in reading over the Senator's speech that he has been misinformed upon several points. Some of these are brought out in the following:

ESTIMATES OF ULTIMATE PRODUCTION FROM SALT CREEK AND TEAPOT.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD reads: "It is confidently believed it (Salt Creek) will equal, if it does not exceed, a billion barrels"; also "oil men * * * estimate the possible production of this naval reserve at 420,000,000." These figures indicate that Salt Creek and Teapot will have an ultimate production of 1,420,000,000 barrels. This figure seems exceedingly high. In this connection I call attention to an estimate of the oil supply of the United States after a review of the producing, probable and possible, oil-bearing regions of the United States by a joint committee composed of members of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists and of the United States Geological Survey. Those familiar with estimation of oil reserves undoubtedly agree that this group of men represented the country's most competent geologists. Their estimates gave the entire State of Wyoming a total oil reserve of 525,000,000 barrels on January 1, 1922. In other words, this estimate was only 105,000,000 barrels in excess of the amount which Senator KENDRICK advises the Senate as the ultimate production of Teapot alone. It must be emphasized again that the geologists' estimate referred to above covered the oil remaining underground in the entire State of Wyoming on January 1, 1922.

DRAINAGE.

I find it impossible to agree with the Senator regarding the danger of drainage of naval reserve No. 3. It is true that the bulk of the land adjacent the reserve No. 3 is owned by the United States. This land, however, was leased or prospecting permits were granted for its development under the leasing act of February 25, 1920, so that all of the land surrounding the reserve is subject to drilling. The reserve therefore would be in danger of drainage, not only from certain wells which have already been drilled in Salt Creek adjacent to the reserve, but from other wells which will be drilled in the near future within 200 or 300 feet from its boundary.

Senator KENDRICK states "that part of the reserve that lies north of this dividing line is not a part of Teapot structure, but a part of the Salt Creek structure, and might be subject to some drainage." It should be pointed out that if the dividing line were drawn at the point he suggests—that is, roughly parallel to the northern boundary and 1 mile to the southeast—there would lie within the reserve between this line and the northern boundary approximately 1,400 acres, all but a small area of which should be productive. This 1,400 acres would be included in the estimated 4,700 to 5,500 probable productive acres of the reserve. It should be pointed out in this connection that the southern portion of the reserve will probably contain water and not oil in the first and second Wall Creek sands, assuming that the oil limits follow in general the same conditions as in Salt Creek; that is, probably 3,700 to 4,500 acres in the reserve will contain water and not oil in both first and second Wall Creek sands.

Senator KENDRICK advised the Senate that "a well will not draw oil from a greater area than 10 acres," so that oil could not be drawn from over 200 or 300 acres out of a total of 9,000. In the first place, it is believed that there will not be over 5,500 acres productive in this reserve. In the second place, I frankly believe that the Senator has been confused in the matter of one well draining 10 acres. It is ordinarily considered in oil-field practice that the economic spacing of wells for the recovery of the maximum commercial extraction of oil is one well to 8 or 10 acres, but this is distinctly different from and should not be confused with the distance which drainage will affect a given area. It is the reduction of gas pressure which is the most serious thing in affecting future production, for on the withdrawal of gas, which migrates farther than oil, there is left behind "dead oil," which has no propulsive force to move it to other wells drilled later.

The matter of drainage has been quite fully covered in my report to the President dated June 3, 1922, and I do not wish to go into the subject again at this time, but feel impelled to call attention to Exhibits A and B, pages 27 to 30, in Senate Document No. 210, in which the Director of the Bureau of Mines has informed me of an estimated loss of 22,000,000 barrels of oil by the Government in naval reserves in California due to failure to drill necessary wells in those reserves. It was, of course, argued by a great many that the Government would suffer no loss at the time such drilling was necessary, but men like Mr. M. L. Requa and Mr. Franklin K. Lane urged that the Navy should protect its reserves by drilling wells. Time has since shown that the contention of these men regarding the need of protection by the Government with its own wells was more than justified.

I wish also to point to Exhibits G, H, and I in Senate Document 210, furnished by three experts of the Department of the Interior, who are in actual charge of the Government's oil work, and by a former member of the United States Geological Survey, who prepared the report on Salt Creek issued as Bulletin No. 670 of the United States Geological Survey. After a review of these impartial statements I am convinced that the Senate will be inclined to agree with the statements which I made on drainage, as printed on page 17 of Senate Document No. 210.

ROYALTIES.

As previously stated, no attempt is being made to fully answer the criticisms of Senator KENDRICK regarding this contract, but it is believed that a brief discussion of the royalty situation in Salt Creek is advisable. The royalty rates in the Salt Creek field vary and the land bears one of the following royalty rates:

a. Regulation royalty sliding scale, 12½ up to 25 per cent.
b. Sliding scale, 12½ up to 33⅓ per cent.
c. Flat royalty of 14⅔ per cent.
d. Flat royalty of 25 per cent.
e. Flat royalty of 33⅓ per cent.
f. Flat royalty of 20 per cent.

Within the generally accepted productive limits of Salt Creek 13 per cent of the acreage and 5.4 per cent of the production from Government land is on a flat royalty of 33⅓ per cent, which is the highest royalty the Government receives in the Salt Creek field. About 93 per cent of the production carries a royalty of 25 per cent or less; in fact, the bulk is on the regulation sliding scale royalty of 12½ up to 25 per cent. But let us take this high royalty of 33⅓ per cent on the property of the Fensland Oil Co., which Senator KENDRICK has cited in his speech to the Senate, and compare it to the royalties of the Mammoth Oil Co. contract. The Fensland well referred to produced in July, 1922, 30,739 barrels with a Government royalty of 10,246 barrels. Under the royalty scale of the Mammoth Oil Co. contract the Government would have received for July a royalty of 10,409.63 barrels, or 163 barrels in excess of the royalty of 33⅓ per cent now being paid by the Fensland Oil Co. It should also be borne in mind that this well is running under a prorate. Its tested capacity a few months ago was 2,115 barrels a day. If the well produced at this rate for a 30-day month, it would yield 63,450 barrels, which under its present royalty of 33⅓ per cent would give to the Government a royalty of 21,150 barrels, but under the Mammoth Oil Co. contract it would give to the Government 26,912 barrels, or 5,762 barrels more than the high royalty cited by Senator KENDRICK of 33⅓ per cent. As a matter of fact, the well running at full capacity under the Mammoth Oil Co. royalties would yield to the Government a revenue equivalent to a flat rate of 42.4 per cent, or 9.1 per cent more than under the flat rate of 33⅓ per cent.

BONUS.

Senator KENDRICK mentions that this 160 acres now being operated by the Fensland Oil Co. also paid a bonus of $51,000 for 160 acres, or $318.75 per acre. Would it not be fair to have also advised the Senate that the three tracts including this one, and all of which adjoined naval reserve No. 3, sold for an average price per acre of $181.46 and that the bonus on this particular tract was the highest of the three? The Senator also states that one tract sold for a bonus of $1,412.50. Would it not have been fair to have stated that this tract was about 2½ miles from the reserve while several tracts much closer to the reserve brought a bonus respectively of $12.50, $16.88, $18.75, and $19.38 per acre. The Senate would probably be interested to know that in the sale of June 15, 1921, the bonus received for all the acreage averaged $260 per acre.

MANIPULATION OF ROYALTIES.

Senator KENDRICK has stressed about the possibilities of the Mammoth Oil Co. manipulating the contract in such a way as to reduce the royalty rates. Practically in all leases granted the Government has provided two royalty scales, one for high-grade oil and the other for oil of lower gravity. The same principle was applied in the Mammoth Oil Co. contract, and, as far as I am aware, of the millions of barrels of oil being produced annually on Government land the Government has never been beaten by such practice as referred to by the Senator; and I can assure you that if any such cases are found the department will take drastic steps to see that the Government is treated fairly.

In this connection I wish to point out that the department has experienced drillers, gaugers, and engineers located in the various oil fields, and it is their duty and they have the authority and are under instructions to see that such practices do not take place; also it might be interesting to point out that a pamphlet has been in course of preparation for some time which contains regulations which have been issued from time to time, as well as new regulations and a general outline of the department's policy in the handling of public lands. This pamphlet contains instructions that operators will neither be permitted to blend their oils or even to produce their wells in such a way as to reduce the gravity by mixing heavy and light oils to the point where the gravity will be lower than the figure which determines the royalty scale.

Under such a condition and with these facts known to those who have closely followed operations on Government lands, I do not feel that Senator KENDRICK, or any other Member of the Senate, has any reason to feel that there would be a possible manipulation of handling of the wells or production on Government lands in such a way as to work against the best interests of the United States.

I must also confess that it is not clear to me how the Senator can argue that the Navy will receive only 63 per cent of one barrel of bunker A fuel oil for one barrel of crude above 34 gravity. It might be well at this time to point out that the method of exchange was arrived at by a comparison between the average price of mid-continent crude oil for the past five years against the price the Navy paid for bunker A fuel oil during the same period. This ratio indicated that one barrel of mid-continent crude was equivalent to 95 per cent of one barrel of bunker A fuel oil on the Atlantic coast for the past five years. The contract, however, provides an even barrel exchange, so that under this contract the Navy is therefore receiving 5 per cent more of bunker fuel oil than it was able to purchase on the market during the past five years. If the Salt Creek price for the past five years had been used in this exchange, the Navy would receive in place of one barrel of bunker A fuel oil for each barrel of royalty oil over 34° Baumé only two-thirds of a barrel of bunker A fuel oil. I wish to emphasize that this contract is based on mid-continent prices for Wyoming oils, and during the past five years Salt Creek crude has been on the average 67 cents a barrel less than mid-continent crude of an equivalent grade.

I believe that the fairest method of exchange is to consider the prices for the past several years, as in this way the fluctuations of price in the industry during periods of depression and inflation are equalized. This was done in arriving at the exchange figures in this contract. I can not resist, however, at this time to call attention to the fact that if there were production on Teapot to-day—as there will be within a few weeks—the Navy would receive for one barrel of 70-cent crude above 34 gravity one barrel of bunker A fuel oil on the Atlantic coast, which is worth to-day between $1.50 and $1.75 per barrel.

The Senator has advised the Senate that the splitting point of 34 gravity "suggests still another way in which royalties can be manipulated to the lessee's advantage." The 34° division point was used in this contract for the following reasons: In most fields the Government receives the posted field prices, while in the Mammoth contract the Government receives mid-continent prices for Wyoming oils which for the past five years have been 67 cents a barrel more than Salt Creek prices. The mid-continent crude, usually referred to, for which a definite price is posted, runs around 35 or 36 gravity, and the bulk of the oil from Teapot will undoubtedly be from the two Wall Creek sands and of about 36½ gravity. Oil produced from those sands therefore will safely fall above the 34° division point. There is in the mid-continent, however, a posted price for Healdton crude, whose gravity is around 31° Baumé. During the past five years the Healdton oil has averaged 76 cents a barrel less than the posted price for oil of about 35 or 36 gravity. Inasmuch as the Mammoth Oil Co. is paying mid-continent prices it was thought fair that they should pay these prices for oils of mid-continent quality. The division point had to be above the gravity of 31° to take account of any possible oils of the quality of Healdton crude but still low enough to take in the expected production from the two Wall Creek sands of 36½ gravity. The 34° splitting point should do this. In other words, if oil is found in Salt Creek of a gravity equivalent to Healdton crude, Healdton crude prices should be paid for it. The 63 per cent figure was arrived at by comparing the average price of Healdton crude for the past five years to the average price paid by the Navy for bunker A fuel oil for the same period.

There is considerable criticism throughout the Senator's speech implying that the naval reserves are to be destroyed, and I wish to call attention to the fact that the contract provides for the erection and storage of large quantities of fuel oil. It is the plan of the Navy Department to have available millions of barrels of fuel oil stored as a permanent reserve in permanent fuel-oil storage tanks located at strategic points in a form available for an emergency. It will not be in the form of crude oil in the sand located almost 2,000 miles from the seacoast, and when needed in the event of any emergency it would take several years to produce, erect pipe-line facilities, and refine and transport to seaboard.

These are some of the points which I believe indicate that the Senator's criticisms are not warranted.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF MINES,
Washington, August 18, 1922.

(Memorandum for the Secretary.)

Referring to the article in the Denver Post, dated August 15, 1922, commenting on the Mammoth Oil Co.'s contract, certain comments are submitted herewith for your information. These comments refer to parts of the article which have been indicated by the subheadings (a), (b), (c), etc.

Tract L	$318.75
Tract ET	131.25
Tract FU	94.38

or an average price per acre for that land immediately adjoining naval reserve No. 3 of $181.46.

(b) Average price per acre for land adjoining naval reserve No. 3 was $181.46 and not $1,000 per acre.

(c) This line infers that Teapot should have brought a bonus of $9,000,000. Assuming that the Teapot was worth as much as the lands immediately adjacent to it or $181.46 per acre, the 9,321 acres would have a cash bonus value of 9,321 times $181.46, which equals $1,691,388.66.

It is estimated that only about 5,500 acres of this reserve will be productive.

(d) Starting at a point in the article marked (d), and immediately following, there is the inference that the average production per well will be lowered by mixing of the Shannon wells and the wells producing from the lower sands. In this connection, it is interesting to note that, although the article points out that the average size of the Shannon wells is 10 barrels per day, there has been no Shannon production in Salt Creek for the past five years. It is the duty of Government field engineers and gaugers not to permit such practice, and if this were attempted the department could immediately provide a regulation to prohibit such practice.

Referring to the size of wells listed in the article, the production test, when the wells were run to full capacity in December, 1921, showed that the average production per day of wells on Government and patented lands from 55 wells in the first Wall Creek sand in Salt Creek field was 34 barrels, and from 176 wells in the second Wall Creek sand was 415 barrels. This covered all the wells whose production was available in this office. In this connection, it should be pointed out that the first Wall Creek sand has been drawn on for the last 10 years, while the second sand covers a much larger area and has not been drawn on for so long a period. This accounts for the difference in size of the wells.

Of the wells producing in the 100 per cent production test in December, 1921, 46 wells in Salt Creek had a production of over 500 barrels per day, of which 22 averaged over 1,000 barrels per day. It is interesting to note in this connection that the well closest to naval reserve No. 3, namely, that of the Forsland Oil Co. in section 20, came in recently with an average daily production of more than 2,100 barrels per day. The above indicates that it is decidedly unfair to estimate that the average initial production will be maintained at under 50 barrels per well.

(e) As stated in (d), the department would not allow the blending of low-gravity and high-grade oil, and royalties will be computed and paid for different grades of oils on a separate basis. The Government therefore will get the benefit of the higher royalty scale in the Mammoth Oil Co.'s contract for the 37° Baumé gravity oil to be produced from the second Wall Creek sand.

The article suggests that possibly a few 2,500-barrel wells will be brought in.

(f) See (d) regarding the average size of wells.

(g) Article states that the Mammoth Oil Co. pays the royalty in fuel oil after extracting gasoline, kerosene, and gas oil, which can be paid in Mexican fuel oil. The contract provides for bunker A fuel oil. Mexican fuel oil passes only bunker C specifications; therefore Mexican oil does not meet the high-grade fuel oil required by the United States Navy. Bunker A fuel oil is about 60 cents a barrel higher than bunker C fuel oil.

It is interesting to note how the method of exchange of fuel oil was arrived at. The average price per barrel of mid-continent crude was figured for the past five years and a ratio obtained between that and the average price per barrel that the Navy paid for its bunker A fuel oil for the same period. This ratio indicated that 1 barrel of mid-continent crude was equivalent to 95 per cent of 1 barrel of bunker A fuel oil on the Atlantic coast for the past five years. In other words, the Navy by this contract receives 5 per cent of a barrel more of bunker A fuel oil than it was able to secure by purchase on the market during the past five years. It is important to point out that if the Salt Creek price for the past five years had been used in this exchange the Navy would have received in place of 1 barrel of bunker A fuel oil for each barrel of royalty oil only two-thirds of a barrel of bunker A fuel oil. This is because of the marked differential between the price of mid-continent crude and the price of Salt Creek crude which has obtained during the past five years. The oils are practically of the same quality.

Fuel oil is popularly considered a residue after gasoline has been taken out. It is the result of an economic fact which can be made more clear by comparison with some agricultural products. For example, the average price of wheat on March 1, 1922, in 10 leading wheat-producing States was 1.905 cents per pound. The wheat as a raw material corresponds to the crude oil in the field. From the crude oil gasoline is taken while from the wheat about 75 pounds of flour is made from each 100 pounds of wheat. Bunker A fuel oil on the Atlantic coast will correspond to a residue bran on the Atlantic coast. The average price of bran on February 15, 1922, was approximately 1¼ cents per pound, so that the money value of 1 pound of wheat in the field was equivalent to 1.08 pounds of bran, or residue, on the Atlantic coast, or almost one for one, as in the Mammoth oil contract of 1 barrel of crude for 1 barrel of fuel oil.

(h) The article refers to "cheap" fuel oil. The average price of mid-continent crude for the past five years was $2.23 per barrel, Salt Creek crude $1.56 per barrel, while the Navy paid $2.35 per barrel for bunker A fuel oil. In other words, bunker A fuel oil cost the Navy during this period almost 80 cents a barrel more than the Salt Creek producer received for his crude during the past five years.

(i) Referring to the 34° B. gravity division point as compared to the 30° gravity used in other Government leases: In most fields the Government receives posted field prices, while in the Mammoth Oil Co. contract the Government receives the mid-continent prices, which, for the past five years, have been 60 to 75 cents a barrel more than Salt Creek prices. The mid-continent crude, on the other hand, averages around 35 or 36 gravity, and, inasmuch as the Mammoth Oil Co. is paying mid-continent prices, it should pay such a price for the oil of the same grade, therefore the dividing line was set at 34° B. The exchange basis for oil of less than 34° B. was made upon the Healdton (Okla.) price in which price figures for the past five years were used. The Healdton crude has a gravity of about 31° B., and in the mid-continent district this oil has been about 75 cents per barrel less than higher grade oil in mid-continent during the past five years. For that reason it was necessary to raise the dividing line to 34° B., which would be above any oil of Healdton grade and still low enough to put oil from the two Wall Creek sands into the higher royalty scale.

(j) The article states that the "wildcatter" pays only 14 per cent of the first 50 barrels. It is evident that this part of the article is in error, because, in case of a discovery in a prospecting permit, the permittee, or "wildcatter," gets one-fourth of the area at 5 per cent royalty rate and the balance at a royalty rate varying from 12½ to 33⅓ per cent. The comparisons, therefore, in this part of the article, have no meaning.

(k) It is possible that no field with a settled production averages over 300 barrels per well, but many leases average over 300 barrels per well. For example, the one well on a lease to Mr. Bonfils, Denver Post, tested 1,125 barrels per day in December, 1921.

(l) The statement that the Mammoth Oil Co. pays less for high-grade oil than for low-grade oil can not be followed.

(m) Referring to oil certificates, it is true that these certificates are noninterest bearing, but it is the plan of the Navy Department to liquidate these shortly after they are issued. If this is not done the Government representatives and not the contract itself is to blame. These were made noninterest bearing in fairness to the oil company, otherwise the Navy could hold these several years and call suddenly for an amount of fuel oil which the company could not deliver.

(n) The matter of the Mammoth Oil furnishing the Navy with gasoline and other petroleum products at market prices is optional with the Navy, and this part of the contract simply allows the Navy to secure its products without an outlay of cash by exchanging oil certificates if it so desires. If the Navy can not get a favorable exchange, obviously the Navy would not liquidate certificates by the purchase of petroleum products through the Mammoth Oil Co. but would buy them on the market.

(o) The contract reads, the lessee agrees when requested to do so by the lessor to construct or pay the cost of construction of tankage. It is probable that the Navy will let competitive bids for erection of these tanks and that these will be paid for by liquidation of oil certificates presented to the construction company—that is to say, there will be competition in the erection of these tanks unless the Navy feels that it will require the Mammoth Oil Co. to erect the tanks through their own force.

(p) The Secretary of the Interior has approved a bill in Congress that 20 per cent of the royalties on this land will be used by the State of Wyoming in public schools and reclamation purposes.

(q) As previously stated, Mexican crude oil does not meet bunker A fuel-oil specifications required by the Navy.

TEAPOT DOME OIL DEAL SOUND—NEGOTIATIONS THAT DEMOCRATS HOPE TO USE FOR CAMPAIGN MATERIAL IS REALLY A SHREWD ARRANGEMENT BY WHICH THE GOVERNMENT PROFITS THROUGH THE ABILITY OF SECRETARY FALL.

(By William E. Brigham, regular correspondence of the Transcript.)

WASHINGTON, September 8.

* * * * * * *

NUMEROUS LOSSES FROM DRAINAGE.

It is a matter of familiar history that owing to failure to drill suitable offset wells in naval reserves Nos. 1 and 2, California, the Government has suffered a loss of 6,800,000 barrels of royalty oil through drainage. Teapot Dome lies south of and adjoins the great Salt Creek oil field in Wyoming, and exactly the same loss from drainage was threatened by private operations in the Salt Creek field to the north when the Harding administration determined that naval-reserve oil history should not be repeated. To this end Secretary Fall cast about to secure a development of Teapot Dome which should end the danger and secure to the Navy an adequate supply of oil, both for the present and for future use. It was, of course, argued with respect to the California fields that the Government would suffer no loss if the situation were let alone, but men like Mark L. Requa and Franklin K. Lane urged that the Navy should protect its reserves by drilling wells, and the sequel proved that their advice was more than justified. According to Dr. H. Foster Bain, director of the Bureau of Mines, "delay in properly protecting the boundaries of the reserves (Nos. 1 and 2, California) against drainage by wells on adjoining lands has resulted in a loss of ultimate total production from the reserves as a whole, as most conservatively estimated, as follows: Total production, 22,000,000 barrels; Government royalty, 6,800,000 barrels; value of royalty, $8,800,000."

LIKE CONDITIONS IN TEAPOT DOME.

Teapot Dome is supposed to contain, at approximately the same depth, the same oil-bearing sands developed in the main Salt Creek structure. For this and other reasons, according to Government experts who have studied naval reserve No. 3, the same presumption of loss through drainage exists as with reference to the California reserves. It is to be borne in mind, moreover, that another dangerous factor is the loss of gas pressure, the propulsive power of the oil, which loss leaves the oil inert and incapable of coming to the surface except through expensive pumping or artificial air pressure. As Secretary Fall has said: "The undeniable facts, in so far as human judgment can ascertain them from expert evidence and otherwise, are that at least a certain portion of the north part of naval reserve No. 3, the Teapot Dome, is now, or will be, disastrously affected through drainage by the drilling upon the lands outside the naval reserve, which drilling is now being carried on from day to day. Such drillings upon such lands is in accordance with the terms of the law itself (law of February 25, 1920), and those conducting such operations are protected by the law."

CONTRACT CALLED FOR COMPETITION.

It was under these circumstances that President Harding directed the Secretary of the Interior to act for the Navy Department and negotiate such contract as would relieve the situation, avoid the losses in petroleum, and, at the same time, if possible, provide a competitive market for the royalty oils of the United States Government, already being produced in Wyoming. The purpose the administration had in mind is not left to inference, for the preamble to the Sinclair contract contains this pregnant paragraph: "Whereas the Government is desirous of creating a competitive market and securing the best prices obtainable for royalty oil received and to be received by the Government of the United States from the public domain in the Salt Creek field in Wyoming," etc. The Government, be it noted, is not buying oil at the lowest possible price; it is selling it at the highest. This last consideration is extremely important, as will be shown later, and it is little short of a triumph of business genius that Secretary Fall succeeded in his endeavor, as the sequel makes clear.

MORE OIL THAN STANDARD CAN CARRY.

The Mid-West Refining Co., owned by Standard Oil, has an absolute monopoly in the transportation, refining, and practically the purchase of all oil in the Salt Creek field and owns a pipe line running to Caspar, Wyo., where perhaps the greatest refinery in the world is maintained. But production in Salt Creek is so great that all but 40 per cent is "choked down," as it can not be handled. All the properties are operated under the leasing act of 1920, and so plentiful is oil in comparison with facilities for handling it that lessees, the Government and the State of Wyoming, all lose money through low prices, which average about 67 cents a barrel less than mid-continent oil brings at Tulsa, Okla. In California competitive markets exist and pipe lines to the coast, but Wyoming oil must leave the State by rail, as the nearest pipe-line connection to Chicago or the Gulf is Carrollton, Mo., 800 to 1,000 miles away. The naval-reserve oil is worthless in the ground, and when brought to the surface it must face a glutted market with no facilities except those of the Standard Oil Co., and those limited, for transporting it to refining points. Some one must be found who could take the oil away.

SINCLAIR IN AN IDEAL POSITION.

Numerous interviews with the leading oil companies convinced Secretary Fall that Sinclair was the only man in a position to make a suitable contract. This point never has been understood and Secretary Fall has been too proud to explain it; hence the charge that the contract was negotiated in "secrecy." It was, in the sense that the Secretary did not advertise for bids. But the point is missed that Fall was not functioning as Secretary of the Interior in the leasing of public oil lands under the leasing act of February 25, 1920, but, by direction of the President, was administering a naval oil reserve for the Navy Department under a wholly different set of laws. Naval reserve No. 3 is land that has been withdrawn from leasing privileges and is the absolute property of the Navy Department, and the Secretary of the Navy is directed by act of Congress of June 30, 1920, to take possession of all oil properties in the petroleum reserves on which are pending no claims or applications or patents and "to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise." Teapot Dome is in a wholly different class from Salt Creek—a point whose pertinence will be noted in a later discussion of an episode involving the police use of marines. Incidentally, this is the reason the State of Wyoming will not share in the benefits of the Sinclair contract, except through fresh legislation by Congress now pending. He has neither funds nor administrative machinery for direct development, because existing law expressly provides that royalties from the naval-reserve oils shall be converted into the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury.

REFUSED TO DEAL WITH STANDARD OIL.

Secretary Fall has been accused of dealing ostensibly with Sinclair but actually with Standard Oil in negotiating the Teapot Dome contract. Exactly the reverse is the truth. The Secretary refused to negotiate with the Mid-West Refining Co. because it already monopolized the Salt Creek field. Moreover, this company had an excess of production and a shortage of pipe-line facilities. The same was true of another great oil magnate, and he frankly admitted it. Fall had known this man intimately for 30 years and he hardly knew Sinclair at all. But Sinclair was unique in being long on pipe lines and refineries and short on oil. He was found to be the only man to whom the Teapot Dome proposition would appeal and who would concede enough to make the deal satisfactory to the Government. Secretary Fall knew what he wanted before he talked with any of the oil men. He laid down the proposition himself, and Sinclair was the only man that measured up to it. It is a point of the most far-reaching importance that the Government, not Sinclair, made the terms.

FALL'S DEMANDS OF SINCLAIR.

The Fall proposition involved two major points—one that the monopoly should be broken in the Salt Creek field and competitive conditions be established there; the other, that a pipe line should be constructed to connect the Wyoming field with the main pipe lines running to Kansas City, Chicago, New York, and other points.

Such a pipe line would cost $15,000,000 to $20,000,000, and Sinclair agreed to build it. He already owned the Sinclair line running to Chicago, which parallels that of the Prairie Oil & Gas Co., controlled by the Standard. A third point of prime importance related to the provision of suitable facilities for the permanent storage of naval oil. Sinclair agreed to two more demands of Secretary Fall—one that he (Sinclair) should pay the mid-continent and not the Mid-West (Standard-Salt Creek) price for naval reserve oil, said mid-continent price, which varies, having averaged for five years 67 cents a barrel higher; and Sinclair agreed also to wipe out all the private claims existing in Teapot Dome.

Naval reserve No. 3 was by no means clear of claims when Secretary Fall began his negotiations. A great many were outstanding and Sinclair wiped them out, his quitclaim deeds costing him a million dollars. This sum figures importantly also, as will be shown later. Until these claims were disposed of no contract could safely be made with anyone, and Sinclair assumed the burden of disposing of them, which he has done. A group of adventurers who were disappointed over the transaction were howling against Fall and Sinclair, but their complaint appears to be that not enough money has been passed around. Criticism from this source, which really is at the root of most misrepresentations with which the public ear has been regaled, has no relation to the actual merits of the contract.

SOME HONEST MISINFORMATION.

Along with criticism derived from this mercenary source has come some honest misinformation. For example, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has been informed that Salt Creek will produce "a billion barrels" and Teapot Dome 420,000,000. A joint committee of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists and the United States Geological Survey—the best informed authorities in the country—estimated the oil possibilities of the whole State of Wyoming as of January 1, 1922, at only 525,000,000 barrels. The royalty estimates have suffered equally gross misrepresentation. The highest royalty the Government receives from Salt Creek is 33⅓ per cent, which represents 13 per cent of the acreage and 5.4 per cent of the production. This is paid by the Fensland Oil Co., which produced in July, 1922, 30,739 barrels, with a Government royalty of 10,246 barrels. Under the royalty scale of the Mammoth Oil Co. (Sinclair) the Government would have received 163 barrels more. As a matter of fact, the Fensland well running at full capacity under the Mammoth Oil Co.'s contract would yield the Government a revenue equivalent to a flat rate of 42.4 per cent, or 9.1 per cent more than under the highest rate collected in the Salt Creek field.

"BONUS TALK IS ALL DUST."

It has been said that the 160 acres now operated by the Fensland Oil Co. paid a bonus of $51,000, or $318.75 an acre. But the three tracts which included this one, all of which adjoin the naval reserve, sold for an average price of $181.46 an acre. It is cited that one tract sold for a bonus of $1,412.50. But this tract was several miles from the reserve, while tracts much closer brought, respectively, $12.50, $16.88, $18.75, and $19.38 an acre. The average price in the sale of June 15, 1921, was $260 an acre. An effort has been made to show that because of certain high bonuses in the Salt Creek field the Government should have received something like $1,420,000 in bonuses from Teapot Dome. Not only are the figures extravagant, as the foregoing indicates, but no mention is made of the fact that Sinclair paid $1,000,000 in cash in the settlements which wiped out the claims, and that because mid-continent and not Salt Creek prices will be paid for oil by Sinclair, an additional revenue of hundreds of thousands of dollars a year as long as the wells produce is expected. The bonus talk is all dust. As to any criticism regarding the 34° Baumé test as the division point, the truth is that under the Sinclair contract the Navy will receive 5 per cent more fuel oil than it was able to purchase on the market for the same money during the last five years. If the Salt Creek prices for the last five years had been used in this exchange, the Navy would receive in place of one barrel of bunker A fuel oil for each barrel of royalty oil over 34° Baumé only two-thirds of a barrel of bunker A fuel oil.

SINCLAIR CAN LOSE, GOVERNMENT CAN'T.

Another foolish point raised is that the Navy does not get its oil until Sinclair has extracted from it the kerosene, the gasoline, and the gas oil. It does not appear to be understood that the crude oil containing these by-products is useless to the Navy, which is not in the refining business. The Navy uses and demands a certain grade of fuel oil, and this or its equivalent in cash Sinclair is obligated to furnish, whether from Teapot Dome or elsewhere. It could use no other oil; and it is quite within proprieties that Sinclair should make some money out of his contract if he strikes oil. If he does not, the Government loses nothing and Sinclair loses a lot, as already he has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in Wyoming preparing for development.

PROVIDES IMMENSE STORAGE FACILITIES.

The crowning achievement in the Sinclair contract knocks the last peg, if the figure be not too much mixed, from the argument that the naval reserve is to be "destroyed" as a result of the contract. The oil is worth nothing in the ground, and it never has been urged by anyone that the Government itself should try to develop Teapot Dome. But the contract obligates Sinclair not only to develop this field and pay mid-continent prices for the naval oil, to construct a pipe line connecting with the main outlets to the seaboard, and to put all royalty oils into the pipe line before he sends through a barrel of his own, but he must also deliver the oil at any points the Navy may designate. It is the plan of the Navy to have available millions of barrels of fuel oil as a permanent reserve in permanent tanks located at strategic points in a form available for instant use. It will not be in the form of crude oil lying in the sand almost 2,000 miles from the seaboard. The Government may collect its royalty in the form of fuel oil or cash. It is not giving Sinclair oil and taking what is left over; it is supplying itself and him with oil and making him pay for what it lets him have at a price which for five years has averaged 67 cents a barrel higher than the Standard Oil Co. is now able to charge for oil from the same field. It is a fair comment that had Secretary Fall been an outside attorney paid $100,000 to negotiate the best possible contract for the Government he could not have done better.

TRADE COMMISSION'S ERROR.

The Federal Trade Commission, inadvertently or otherwise, has been responsible for a gross misuse of terms which has been caught up by the hostile press in its attempt to show that Sinclair and Standard Oil are tied up together. This is in the statement that the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana "purchased one-half interest in the Sinclair Pipe Line Co., and in conjunction with Sinclair interests, organized the Sinclair Crude Oil Producing Co., in which the Standard Oil Co. holds one-half interest. According to current reports this latter company (Sinclair Crude) is now planning to purchase and store Wyoming crude, etc." The foregoing is merely a sample quotation. The fact is that there is no such thing as the "Sinclair Crude Oil Producing Co." and the Federal Trade Commission ought to know it. Sinclair and Standard Oil are interested together in certain pipe lines and a purchasing company, but these have nothing whatever to do with production. It is likely also that the Standard Oil Co. will be associated with Sinclair in the construction of the pipe line out of Teapot Dome to Carrollton or whatever other point the line may reach. This is purely a measure of economy, for there could be no economic sense in the Mid-West Refining Co. (Standard) operating in Salt Creek and the Mammoth Oil Co. (Sinclair) operating in Teapot Dome constructing a double run of pipe lines to carry off oil produced from practically the same source. It would be like building two lines of railroad side by side, for the competition between the two companies is not in the purchase or transportation of oil but in the production of it, and Sinclair, as a matter of fact, is obligated to pay a higher price for the naval oil than Mid-West gets at present for its own production. But the organization of the Mammoth Oil Co. alongside the Mid-West has introduced competition into the purchasing of oil, and that is exactly what the State of Wyoming and the Government of the United States, beneficiaries, respectively, under the leasing act of 1920 and the Sinclair contract, most ardently desire. It was to break up the Standard Oil monopoly that the Sinclair contract was negotiated. Sinclair and Standard Oil are and always have been competitors in the production of oil, although not always in its transportation, and they will so continue under the Sinclair contract with the Navy Department. Indeed, if anyone's nose is sore over the Sinclair contract, it is the Standard Oil's.

MARINES IN THE TEAPOT DOME.

A great hullabaloo was raised in some quarters because the Navy Department not long ago sent a squad of marines to eject the Mutual Oil Co. from Teapot Dome. This was a company in which James G. Darden, of some political note, is prominent. It may be well here to repeat that Teapot Dome is not "public land" in the ordinary sense of the term, but is as completely under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department as the deck of a warship. Court action may be necessary for the ejection of a corporation or a person from public land—Salt Creek, for example—but the Navy needs no red tape to prevent trespass upon its own oil reserve. Darden and his associates had been warned off Teapot Dome in May, 1922, by Acting Secretary Roosevelt and Secretary Fall, and June 13, 1922, formal notice was served on him or his company. No attention was paid to any notices, although several reports of trespass had been received. President Harding is acquainted with Darden and personally communicated with him, requesting him to leave, but to no avail. Then, by authority of the President, a squad of marines was sent into Teapot Dome and the Mutual Oil Co. was thrown out. In Salt Creek similar circumstances exist, but there it is necessary under the law to bring suit for trespass, and this has been done. But the ejectment of Darden from Teapot Dome was clearly legal as if he had been ordered out of a navy yard.

RUBE ALLEN.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3595) to reimburse Rube Allen for losses and damages sustained by him through the negligent dipping of tick-infested cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 917) thereon.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO THE DISTRICT COMMITTEE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I desire to report favorably two Senate resolutions, which continue for the remainder of the present Congress the temporary clerks employed, respectively, by the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Committee on Indian Affairs.

First from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably without amendment the resolution, Senate Resolution 339, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 339) submitted by Mr. BALL on August 17, 1922, was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution No. 182, agreed to December 15, 1921, authorizing the continuance during the present session of Congress of Senate Resolution No. 68, agreed to May 31, 1921, which authorizes the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia to employ an additional clerk to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, be, and hereby is, extended and continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably without amendment the Senate Resolution 328, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 328) submitted by Mr. SPENCER on August 1, 1922, was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution No. 157, agreed to November 16, 1921, authorizing and directing the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs to employ an assistant clerk to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate for the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress be, and the same is hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. FLETCHER introduced a bill (S. 3997) for the purchase of a site for and erection of a post-office building at Winter Haven, Fla.; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

CANCELLATION OF INTERNATIONAL DEBTS.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask permission to present and have read a letter from Bernard M. Baruch. The letter is with regard to the cancellation of international debts, and, in view of the high position which Mr. Baruch occupies in the financial world and his close association with the makers of the Versailles treaty, I think it interesting enough to have it read.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I think we should have a quorum while the letter is being read. I therefore make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The Senator from Texas makes the point of no quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	du Pont	McNary	Smoot
Ball	Ernst	Moses	Stanfield
Borah	Fletcher	Nelson	Sterling
Broussard	Glass	New	Sutherland
Bursum	Gooding	Nicholson	Swanson
Calder	Hale	Oddie	Trammell
Cameron	Harreld	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Capper	Harrison	Ransdell	Warren
Colt	Heflin	Rawson	Watson, Ga.
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Robinson	Watson, Ind.
Cummins	Kellogg	Sheppard	Willis
Curtis	McCumber	Shields
Dillingham	McLean	Simmons

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is necessarily absent, due to illness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter presented by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

The reading clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, September 12, 1922.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
The United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Pursuant to our conversation of the other day, as promised, I am putting on paper some of my views concerning the financial aspects of the so-called Balfour note.

That note is the presentation of the opinion of a certain school in England that contends that the German reparation can not be reduced unless all interallied indebtedness is canceled or reduced, and that the interallied indebtedness should be canceled on the ground that the war was a common cause, and that each country gave what it could in men and treasure.

The Balfour note listed among the claims that England had, and which it would reduce or cancel if America canceled the indebtedness of the Allies to her, a claim of £1,300,000,000 for German reparation.

If the purpose of the note was to secure America's coming in on the same basis as England it might have been well to have eliminated entirely England's claims against Germany, which are based almost entirely upon pensions and separation allowances, because America has put in no such claim.

The moving cause, as I understand it, for our not demanding a share of the German reparation was in order to permit the devastated countries—France, Belgium, Italy, and others—to have what the Germans could pay.

So far as the allied debts are concerned, there are several ways of looking at them.

There are those who say they should be canceled because they can not be paid, and there are those who, like Mr. Balfour, say they should be canceled because they were incurred in a common cause.

The first of these apparently considers the matter from a purely commercial standpoint. What do the advocates of cancellation mean when they say that the Allies can not pay? Do they mean that these countries can not pay all or that they can not pay a part? Surely all of the great countries who are now our debtors can pay something if given time. And I am sure that countries like England, if we insist, can and will pay all, no matter what the cost may be. From a business standpoint it is going to be exceedingly difficult to convince the American people, who, after all, are the final arbiters in this matter, that if Germany can pay $10,000,000,000, which all thoughtful people think she can pay if given time and opportunity, the Allies can not pay the amounts due us. Money is not the only method of payment. It is through the exchange of things that nations will pay one another as most individuals pay one another. But the nations of the world can not make things with which to pay unless they get down to work.

Now, as to the Balfour point of view:

Whatever may be the opinions of others, including myself, on the subject, the American people, as a whole, decided that the war was not theirs until we entered it; and the international community of interest and purpose must be viewed as dating from our entrance into the war. Then we must consider what portion of our advances was truly for common objectives.

The records of the Allied Purchasing Commission and the Treasury Department will show for what the various sums of money borrowed by England or any other nation were spent. Whereas it might be convincingly contended that the money spent for the purchase of munitions (because we had not enough soldiers ready to use them, and because England and the other allies were able to use them to better advantage in the quicker winning of the war) could be called a contribution to a common cause, yet the same decision could not be arrived at regarding certain other important expenditures.

Surely money that was spent for things that went into the making of shipping which became a permanent part of the mercantile fleet of England, or money that was used for the purchase of such material as went for commercial purposes or to bolster exchange—in most instances this was to facilitate purchases in other countries—or to pay for loans or materials obtained previously to our entering the war, if there were such, can by no conceivable reason be considered a contribution to a common cause, and therefore should not be canceled.

The same applies in instances where food was bought for England's civilian population, not for her soldiers, and was paid for by that population. It must be remembered that the English Government did not give but sold to its people the food bought in this country.

On the other hand, in practically every instance where purchases were made in England by us after we entered the war they were paid for in cash and not by means of a loan by England to America. Again, America paid England for ferrying our soldiers to Europe.

Surely the expenditures mentioned above should be considered a contribution by the English in a common cause and should be set off against any amount by which England proposes that her gross debt to us should be reduced.

If this subject is treated on the basis suggested in the Balfour note, equity and justice would demand that England, whose territory was not devastated, should relinquish her claim against Germany for the benefit of the devastated countries. Then we could count as a contribution to a common cause that which was spent for munitions and for fighting purposes in this country by England. But England, besides paying the balance due on the loan, should repay us, as a contribution to the common cause, that which we spent in her country for munitions and for shipping.

I do not make these remarks in a spirit of narrow criticism. Nor am I unmindful of the great sacrifices that the English people made so nobly and unstintingly in the World War. But I do believe that those behind the Balfour note should give full consideration to all of the facts involved in the case, and not make it appear that the United States is ungenerous in her position. We were ready and willing to have gone to the bitter end despite what the cost might have been to us. We made no bargain then for our continuance in the struggle, and we want no one to set a value upon our contribution.

In my opinion, it is useless to consider either the German reparation or the readjustment of the interallied debts by themselves, because they are but two symptoms of a disease that lies deeper. These problems should be treated as a whole so as to leave all peoples in the various countries free to go back to work under conditions that will cause them to look forward with hope and not backward with hate.

Very truly yours,

BERNARD M. BARUCH.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR CALDER.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, my attention has been called to an address delivered by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] at the Nazarene Congregational Church, in Brooklyn, N. Y., on Sunday evening, September 10. In this address the Senator from New York discusses the development of the Negro race during the past 60 years, and urges the enactment of the Dyer antilynching bill. It was my privilege to report that bill out of the Judiciary Committee, of which I am a member, and I join with the Senator from New York in expressing the hope that that measure will be passed before Congress adjourns this session. The address is thoughtful and contains some very interesting facts bearing upon the progress of the Negro race in our country. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, for the time being I object, until I can examine the address.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama objects.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I shall be very glad to hand a copy of the address to the Senator from Alabama and if he then objects to it, it will be his privilege to do so.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. BURSUM submitted the following report, which was ordered to lie on the table:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6507) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

TRADE WITH CHINA—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I inquire if morning business has been concluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Morning business is closed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senate for a moment. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 4810, what is known as the China trade bill, and I desire to state the circumstances which surround it, so that any Senator may determine for himself whether I ought to attempt to bring up the report at this time.

The bill on which the conference report is submitted went to conference on the 20th of last December, and the conferees met repeatedly—I suppose twenty times between that date and the 1st of April, or some time during April of the present year. We had great difficulty in reaching a conclusion, but we did finally reach a conclusion, and the conference report has been on file since some time in April.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is opposed to one feature of the bill as reported by the conferees, and when I sought to bring it up on a former occasion he told me that he was opposed to it. I advised him that I would give him notice when I sought to bring it up. On more than one occasion when the tariff bill was before the Senate I attempted to have the report considered, but Senators all remember how difficult, if not impossible, it was to bring anything else before the Senate during the consideration of the tariff bill. The Senator from Wisconsin has been away a considerable time; the session is nearing an end. I have made inquiries upon two occasions within the last two or three days, first, as to the time of the return of the Senator from Wisconsin or whether he intended to return at all during the present session, but I have not been able to secure any information either with regard to his purpose of returning or the time of his return.

I gave notice yesterday, as appears in the RECORD, that I should ask the Senate this morning to take up the conference report, and I am asking unanimous consent to take it up; but if any Senator feels that further delay, consistent with the disposition of it at this session, ought to be had I shall follow whatever may be the desire of the Senate in that respect.

The bill is a very important one—important to our interests in China—and I have stated frankly and fully the circumstances which surround the matter. If any Senator makes objection on the ground that it ought to be further delayed, within the limits of this session, I do not intend to move to take it up. I think I have used every reasonable effort to bring it up at a time that would be satisfactory to all who may be concerned in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not in a position to object to the consideration of this matter. I know the interest which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has in it, and yet at the same time I have not been requested to object to its consideration, and therefore I am not going to object. I want to say before it is taken up, however, that there is one feature of the bill which I hope the Senator from Iowa will explain pretty fully, and that is the feature with reference to exemption from taxation. It is the objectionable feature of it, so far as I am concerned, at the present time. After the Senator has explained it, I may have a different view; but I regard that as very important, and I trust that when it is taken up it will be discussed from that standpoint by the Senator, so that we may know just what it does.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall be very glad to do that. What I want more than anything else is to know whether there is any violation of understanding in bringing it on at this time, in view of the facts which I have stated; and if any Senator feels that it ought not to be brought on at this time I do not intend to ask that it be brought on until I can telegraph to the Senator from Wisconsin. I have not the least information with regard to what he intends to do.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator asking for the immediate consideration of the report?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am asking for its immediate consideration.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the consideration of it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, may I inquire if the provision to which the Senator from Wisconsin objects is that which has reference to exemption from taxation?

Mr. CUMMINS. I so understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hearing no objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa for the consideration of the conference report on House bill 4810, the conference report is laid before the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4810) to authorize the incorporation of companies to promote trade in China.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, this bill has been the subject of very great controversy in the committees which have considered it. As it passed the House the bill provided for incorporation under the general regulatory power of the Congress over foreign commerce, together with an alleged power that it was said arose under a treaty or a series of treaties between the United States and China. It is not necessary to go into the details of the manner in which the corporations were to be organized, because there is no controversy with regard to that part of the subject.

The bill came to the Senate, and the Judiciary Committee of the Senate was of the opinion that Congress had no power, under either the commerce clause of the Constitution or any treaty that had been made between the United States and China, to authorize the creation of corporations whose business should be confined wholly to the territory of China.

The Judiciary Committee reported practically a new bill, substituting it for the House bill. The view of the Judiciary Committee was that if a corporation of this sort was to be organized, it must be organized to do business or to carry on commerce between the United States and China, with such incidental powers in China as a corporation so organized would have under the law; and that is the kind of bill which we reported.

The great need of a law authorizing the incorporation of Federal companies or quasi Federal companies was acknowledged on all hands. Our people who are trying to do business in China are carrying it on at a very great disadvantage. Great Britain organizes companies to do business wholly within China under what is known as the Hongkong ordinances, and France organizes national corporations to carry on business in China. I think Italy does, as well, and Germany did before the war. Our people have been compelled to organize, if they organized at all, under the laws of either some State or some Territory. The fact is that we had a few corporations organized to carry on business in China under the law of the Territory of Alaska, and they were organized under the law of that Territory not because it gave to the incorporators or to the persons who afterward became stockholders any advantage but because the law under which corporations are organized in Alaska is a law passed by Congress, and therefore the people of China looked upon a corporation so organized as really a Federal corporation. The people of China know the United States, and they feel secure when they are dealing with any agency created by the United States. They do not so feel when they are brought in contact with corporations organized under the laws of the States, and very few have been so organized.

Feeling this very great advantage that our competitors have over the people of the United States in doing business in China we finally settled that phase of the dispute between the House and the Senate by providing for the organization of corporations of the District of Columbia, our authority with regard to the District of Columbia being substantially the power which each State has over its own affairs within its own borders; and a large part of this bill is taken up in providing the manner in which such corporations shall be organized and the safeguards that should be put about those who deal with them and those who compose them. I think all Senators will agree, if they have become familiar with the code we have prepared in this bill, that every modern precaution that could be taken to render these companies properly responsible to the authority which created them has been taken; and I have never heard one word of criticism or complaint with regard to that part of the bill which proposes a plan for the organization of these corporations as District of Columbia corporations to do business wholly within the Republic or Empire or territory of China.

I pass that phase of the subject.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry there?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Is there any provision made which would inhibit the District from imposing upon the corporations franchise taxes or such other taxes as a progressive system of taxation might demand?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is such provision in the sense that a franchise tax is provided for, although it is a very moderate one, and is intended to cover the expense incident to the organization and control of these companies, but the act contains a provision which would allow Congress to take care of that subject in the future if it is thought desirable at any time to do so. The last section of the bill reads:

> The Congress of the United States reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal any provision of this act.

The next phase of the matter—and that is the one which has given us the most concern—relates to the imposition of Federal taxes upon a corporation so organized. The House bill, practically speaking, exempted from Federal taxation the corporations which it proposed to create—that is, not quite from all but from nearly all of the taxation that is imposed by the present law upon corporations—and we had months of discussion and investigation, for it was with some difficulty that we brought ourselves to the conclusion that there ought to be any exemption from taxation.

I propose now to read a brief description of what we finally agreed upon. We did agree to some exemption but not the exemption that is provided for in the bill as it passed the House. I may say that one of the great objects of these corporations in carrying on business in China is to enlist the capital of Chinese citizens, and the imposition of taxes upon Chnese citizens practically precludes the organization or success of such corporation. I now read:

The House bill granted to corporations organized under the act a complete exemption from income and excess profits taxes if the gross income derived from sources within the United States did not amount to 5 per cent or more of its entire gross income and if it distributed in dividends during the taxable year at least one-third of its net income. That was one of the provisions of the bill as it passed the House.

The House bill also granted complete exemption to the American stockholders from the payment of normal income tax on dividends received from the corporation. The House bill also provided that a China trade corporation should be considered a domestic corporation, which it necessarily would be within the meaning of the income tax law, but that it should not be deemed to be affiliated with any other corporation within the meaning of the section of the income tax law providing for consolidated returns of net income.

I desire Senators to observe that point particularly, because it has been preserved in the bill as it now reaches the Senate. A China trade corporation can not affiliate itself with any other corporation so that the combined corporation can make a consolidated return. The very object of our bill compels a complete separation of a China trade corporation from any other corporation.

The Senate struck out of the bill all provisions relating to Federal taxation. That was the action of the Senate when the bill came from the Judiciary Committee to the Senate, and was submitted for passage, and that created a controversy between the House conferees and the Senate conferees.

One of the principal reasons for the passage of this act is the impossibility of attracting capital to invest in our corporations so long as such corporations, while subject to our tax laws, have to compete with British and other corporations having tax exemptions of great importance.

I may say that, speaking generally, Great Britain exempts her China corporations from all taxation on the part of the Empire. That is true also of France, and our people would do business at a very great disadvantage, as can be readily seen. The Senate conferees felt that the act would fail of its purpose of encouraging trade with China if the permission to incorporate under a Federal charter could not be availed of as a practical matter under competitive conditions. They therefore came to the conclusion that a carefully guarded tax exemption should with justice be incorporated as a part of the bill. The conference bill, it is believed, grants only such exemptions as are essential to carry out the purposes for which the bill is passed, and does not extend the exemption so as to deplete the Treasury for the benefit of individuals.

It might be said at this point also that our revenue derived from profits from our business carried on wholly within China is negligible, and it is the opinion of the Treasury Department that this bill would increase rather than diminish the revenue from business controlled by American citizens wholly within China.

The bill as recommended by the conference committee contains amendments to the income tax law allowing a much narrower exemption than that provided in the House bill. It is proposed—and Senators will find this in sections 21 and 22—to allow to a China trade corporation a credit on its net income of an amount equal to that proportion of its net income from sources within China which its capital stock owned by individual citizens of the United States or China, resident in China, bears to its entire capital stock.

I hope Senators grasp that without difficulty. I confess that it has involved me in a good deal of study.

Mr. STERLING. Will not the Senator read that statement again, so that we may better understand it?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is proposed, in sections 21 and 22, "to allow to a China trade corporation"—and I am speaking now of the corporation itself—"a credit on its net income"—I pause there to say that under our law ordinarily a corporation pays a tax of 12½ per cent, according to my recollection, upon its net income. It is proposed—sections 21 and 22—to allow to a China trade corporation "a credit on its net income of an amount equal to that proportion of its net income from sources within China which its capital stock owned by individual citizens of the United States or China, resident in China, bears to its entire capital stock."

That is to say, if one half of the capital stock of the corporation shall be owned by citizens of China or citizens of the United States resident in China and the other half owned by citizens of the United States resident in the United States, then that corporation would be entitled to a credit upon its net income when it comes to compute the 12½ per cent tax of 50 per cent. This exemption, however, Senators will observe, is hedged about with some restrictions.

"This exemption is, however, allowed only if an amount, equal to the saving in tax, is distributed as a special dividend to such of its stockholders as are individual citizens of the United States or China and reside in China."

That is to say, the Senate conferees did not believe that citizens of the United States who had invested in the corporation, but who resided in the United States, should indirectly receive, by any possibility, any benefit from the credit that is so provided.

"Citizens of China, resident therein, are exempted from tax on their dividend, as provided by section 26, but all other stockholders are subjected to both surtax and normal tax on all their dividends from a China trade corporation in section 27."

That hardly needs elaboration. We do not tax, and we ought not to tax, citizens of China upon the dividends which they receive from the corporations of which they become stockholders.

Mr. STERLING. I suppose if we were to tax them, that would defeat the primary purpose of the bill, which is to encourage investment on the part of Chinese.

Mr. CUMMINS. Exactly. What we are trying to do is to put our people upon as nearly even a footing with the people of other countries in doing business in China as possible, and to enlist the aid and the influence and the capital of citizens of China in the business which Americans control.

"The provision of the House bill treating these corporations as domestic corporations for the purposes of the income tax law is retained (sec. 25), as well as the provision prohibiting such a corporation (sec. 24) from making consolidated returns of net income with other corporations."

I referred to that prohibition a few moments ago. The conference bill also provides (sec. 23) "that a China trade corporation shall not be permitted to avail itself of the privilege allowed other corporations by the revenue act, namely, to credit against its income tax, dollar for dollar, the amount paid to foreign countries as income, war profits, or excess-profits taxes."

That is to say, if China were to levy a tax upon the business of this corporation, our corporation would not be permitted to credit itself with the taxes paid to China or to any other foreign country which might get jurisdiction over it.

It should be observed that under these provisions—

"(1) The corporation gets no exemption in respect to its income not derived from sources within China.

"(2) Even as to the income derived from sources within China the exemption is as to only a portion of it, namely, the same proportion which the stock of the corporation owned by citizens of the United States or China, resident in China, bears to the entire capital stock of the corporation.

"(3) Even this proportion is based on stock owned by individuals and not by other corporations or holding companies"—

That was one of the subjects which created a great deal of discussion, and we did the best we could to see that this stock, if it passed into the hands of a holding company or an affiliated company, was then not entitled to the exemption which we have provided for—

"(4) The limited exemption thus granted is only allowed"—

I desire Senators particularly to note this point—

"The limited exemption thus granted is only allowed if the resulting saving in tax is distributed as a special dividend to those individual residents in China on the basis of whose stockholding the proportion of the net income from sources within China is computed."

That is, the corporation can not accumulate this fund which would arise on account of the credit upon the net income. If it is to get the exemption, it must distribute that saving among the Chinese stockholders.

"(5) For the purpose of computing the exemption no person is considered a stockholder unless the equitable right to the income from the shares is in good faith vested in him, thus guarding against the possibility of defaulting the Government by placing the stock in the hands of a trustee or a dummy holder.

"(6) The dividends received by the stockholder from the corporation (whether regular dividends or the special dividend, the amount of which limits the amount of the tax saved by the corporation)"—

Now, mark this—

"are subject to full surtax and normal tax, except in the case of stockholders who are citizens of China, resident in China, in whose case it should be remembered that there is no way of collecting a tax even if it should be imposed.

"(7) The corporation is not allowed to credit against its Federal tax the amount of income, war profits, and excess-profits taxes paid to foreign countries, a privilege which is allowed by the revenue act to all other domestic corporations."

Our present law provides for that credit, but in view of the peculiar circumstances of this matter, and in view of the fact that we were granting to this corporation substantial exemptions, it was believed that the corporation should not have the privilege which is granted under the revenue law to other domestic corporations.

By forbidding a China trade corporation to make a consolidated return with any other corporation, it has been made impossible to transfer the tax exemption to a holding company or a subsidiary by any intercorporate financial adjustment.

Now, Mr. President, if it is believed by the Senate that a quasi Federal incorporation will add to the opportunities of our citizens residing in China to carry on business there and indirectly to increase the trade between China and the United States, it is my opinion that the exemption is a fair one and is the least that we can do for their protection.

I hope that Senators will all remember that while the American corporations are limited to business carried on within China, yet the indirect effect must be to increase greatly the trade between China and the United States. A corporation organized to carry on business in China must purchase essentially all of the things in which it deals from countries outside of China. An American corporation will at least have a tendency to buy in the United States rather than in Great Britain or in France or in Italy or in any other country. That is the natural pride, I think, of the American citizen. I think it must be assumed that he would be controlled by that motive. I do not mean to say, of course, that a China trade corporation, if it could buy goods at greatly lower prices in other countries, would buy in the United States notwithstanding that advantage; but upon anything like even terms the American corporation would do business with the United States; that is, it would buy in the United States the goods which were to be distributed in China and with which it dealt in the commerce of China.

It is the opinion of those who are qualified to express an opinion that the organization of corporations of this kind would tremendously enhance or increase the trade and commerce of the United States. I have been deeply impressed as I have heard—as I have upon many occasions, not only when the bill was pending before the Judiciary Committee, but while it was pending before the conference committee—the testimony of our people who live in China and our former ministers to China and of men from every calling who had become familiar with conditions in China. One of the witnesses before certain members of the conference committee is a district judge in China. All Senators know that we have an extraterritorial jurisdiction in China, and that we have a United States district court in China, created under a treaty for the purpose of protecting the interests of Americans in China, so that Americans in China could be judged not only by the laws of the United States but by a judge appointed by the President of the United States.

I have said now all that I care to say with regard to the matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KING. When the bill was before the Senate some time ago, as I understood, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] offered some objection to the taxation scheme.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; when the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate was before the Senate there was no exemption from taxation at all, and that bill was substituted for the House bill. I do not remember that the Senator from Wisconsin asked me any question save one, namely, Is there in the Senate committee substitute any exemption from taxation? My reply was that there was not any exemption.

Mr. KING. It may be that I have confounded the position of the Senator from Wisconsin with respect to the pending bill with observations which he made when the revenue bill was under consideration and when the question of taxing the profits resulting from foreign business was involved. I recall that upon that occasion a discussion took place as to the profits which might be derived from business in the Orient or in other countries. I was wondering if the objection then suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin had been met?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the observation just made by the Senator from Utah is quite correct—that the Senator from Wisconsin was opposed really to any exemption in the revenue bill. I do not think that the entire objection which the Senator from Wisconsin made at that time has been overcome in this bill, because the pending bill does grant a certain limited exemption.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the bill would change or modify, to the advantage of the taxpayer or to any member of a corporation or its stockholders, any of the provisions of the revenue measure?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think so. I think that under the revenue measure the corporation to be organized under the provisions of the pending bill would not be entitled to any exemption. There would be possibly an exception to that. Undoubtedly the bill gives to the corporation organized under it a privilege in regard to the exemption which the corporation could not exercise under the general revenue law of the United States.

Mr. KING. Then, if I understand the Senator, persons engaged in business in China who may organize under the provisions of the pending bill will have advantages in a question of taxation as compared with the provisions of the revenue bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think so.

Mr. KING. In other words, the pending bill modifies to some extent the provisions of the revenue bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. KING. And does so to the advantage of the taxpayer?

Mr. CUMMINS. That does not follow. If it could be assumed that the business which we hope to create through the agency of those corporations was being done or would be done in China, and that the citizens of China and the citizens of the United States who reside in China made the profits and made reports to the United States, there would be to them an advantage in the passage of the bill. But the business is not being done in that way, and business will not be done in that way. I am not expert enough to have an opinion upon the future with regard to our trade with China. I must rest content with the position of the Treasury Department, which is that in its opinion there will be more revenue derived from business done wholly within China under the provisions of this bill than the Treasury Department is now receiving on account of profits on business done wholly within China. The attitude of the experts from the Treasury Department who appeared before us was that it could be very fairly considered as a measure to increase revenues rather than to diminish revenues.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will further yield, the point I am attempting to make is this. Of course, as the Senator knows, I am very much interested in the extension of our foreign trade, as I know the Senator from Iowa is. The Senator does not believe in a theory which some upon the other side of the Chamber announce, that we must cut off our trade with foreign nations and build a Chinese wall around the Republic.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no sympathy with that doctrine.

Mr. KING. The Senator perceives that our prosperity is largely dependent upon our foreign trade and commerce. Therefore, being interested in the extension of our foreign trade and commerce, I would be glad to support any bill that would facilitate that desirable result. But I am anxious to know—and I repose absolute confidence in the Senator, and therefore I appeal to him—whether the pending bill will invite persons, who are engaged in business or who may desire to engage in business, to take refuge under the provisions of the bill in order that they may escape paying a fair and legitimate tax to the Government of the United States?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think it can possibly have that effect. One of the things that is always mentioned by anyone familiar with business in China and the desire of Americans who live there to engage in business is the difficulty of enlisting Chinese capital in the business. We are told that there is an abundance of Chinese capital, and those who are promoting the plan desire first to secure a corporation of a Federal character in which the people of China would have a greater confidence than they would repose in a corporation organized under the laws of some State. That is the first thing that is always mentioned. It is the belief of those with whom I have consulted that if these corporations were permitted practically one-half of the capital would be contributed by citizens of China. The bill provides that the control of the corporation must always be with citizens of the United States, otherwise it would lose its distinctive character of an American corporation. That is the first thing.

The second thing is that when a citizen of China has an opportunity to invest in a British corporation, as he has, a corporation exempt from all taxation so far as Great Britain is concerned, and he comes to compare the advantages of an investment in such a corporation with the advantages of investing in an American corporation, he will choose that corporation upon which the country creating it does not impose the taxes.

The Senator from Utah will readily understand that when an American is trying to do business in China he desires to gather about him influential Chinamen who, through their acquaintance and their knowledge of conditions, can enlarge and develop the business in which the American is engaged. I do not conceal at all, however, and I do not desire to conceal, the fact that a corporation under this proposed law will have an advantage over a corporation doing the same kind of business organized under the law of a State, because the latter is not entitled to any considerable exemption from taxation, while the former is.

I have explained the matter as fully as I can; it is a somewhat technical subject, and I shall be glad to answer any question I can answer. If, however, there are no further inquiries, I submit the matter for such action as the Senate may desire to take.

Mr. KING. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa, in view of the statement which he has made that the bill provides for these corporations to be incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia. I do not find that provision in the bill. May I ask the Senator from Iowa to advise me what section in the bill carries out that statement of the Senator?

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall be glad to indicate the section. Has the Senator from Utah a copy of the conference report on the bill?

Mr. KING. A copy of the conference report has just been handed to me.

Mr. CUMMINS. At the top of page 2 the language of the conference report reads:

SEC. 4. (a) Five or more individuals (hereinafter in this act referred to as "incorporators"), a majority of whom are citizens of the United States, may, as hereinafter in this act provided, form a District of Columbia corporation for the purpose of engaging in business within China.

Mr. KING. I now perceive the provision to which the Senator refers. I had before me at first only a copy of the Senate bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. The language I have read is not contained in the Senate bill.

Mr. KING. It is not in the Senate print, but, in view of what the Senator has read from the report of the committee of conference, I see that he was correct in his statement. May I inquire whether or not corporations of the character provided for would be amenable to the general provisions of the laws of the District of Columbia with respect to visitation, if such provisions are made?

Mr. CUMMINS. There are the most particular provisions made in the bill with regard to the visitation and control of the corporations.

Mr. KING. I perceive from the conference report on the bill which has just been handed to me that the bill has been rewritten by the conferees in many particulars.

Mr. CUMMINS. The bill has not been essentially changed except in providing that China trading companies shall be incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia instead of under the laws of the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the adoption of the conference report. However, I confess that I have some apprehension in regard to the operation of the bill and its scope and effect. Of course, anything that will aid in the development of our foreign trade and commerce should receive the hearty support of this body. All of the bills, though, which we may pass to increase our foreign trade and commerce or aid in the development of our foreign trade or commerce will be nullities if we pass tariff laws such as the Fordney-McCumber bill, which is now before us.

Undoubtedly we are subject to the charge of inconsistency in the character of legislation enacted by Congress dealing with revenue questions and with tariff and other matters relating to trade and commerce. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has submitted a bill and conference report that deal with our foreign trade and commerce. This bill, he contends, will enlarge our foreign markets and increase the trade between the United States and China. Legislation seeking to expand our trade and commerce is of the highest importance, but we follow this bill by the reactionary Fordney-McCumber tariff bill, the schedules of which are so high as to constitute almost insurmountable obstacles to the development of our foreign trade.

The bill last mentioned is not to increase our exports or our foreign commerce. It seeks to restrict both imports and exports and to place the American consumers at the mercy of exploiting domestic corporations. One day we make magnificent gestures in favor of national prosperity and development and looking toward opening markets for our surplus agricultural products as well as our manufactured commodities.

The following day we render nugatory and impossible of fulfillment the promises of the preceding day and prevent the realization of the hopes of those who seek to increase our foreign commerce and thus add to the prosperity and the welfare of the American people. It is unfortunate that reactionaries and selfish interests dominate the Republican Party and control legislation. The Senator from Iowa has often emphasized the necessity of finding markets for our surplus products. He is from an agricultural State and appreciates that the farmers of the United States as well as the growers of live stock must, if they have prosperity, find an outlet for their surplus products in lands beyond the sea. He can appreciate how unjust it is to the American agriculturists to enact legislation which destroys their foreign markets and compels them to purchase the commodities which they do not produce at prices raised to oppressingly high levels by legislation which builds up monopolies and permits the exploitation of the American consumers.

We want trade with the Orient. There a fruitful field for American enterprise can be found. Europe is involved in debt to the extent of billions of dollars, but China owes but little and Japan's obligations are unimportant. India, while impoverished, has external obligations of but slight importance. While the wants of the people of some of the oriental countries are limited, nevertheless in the aggregate their requirements are enormous. They are desirous of purchasing American products and increasing their trade with the American people. The Orient affords a great market for the surplus products of our mines and mills and farms. If we pursue rational trade policies with the countries of Asia we can soon increase our exports to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars annually. In the past we have rather regarded the Orient as terra incognita, or at least so far removed from the United States as to be beyond the circle of our commercial dealings.

I have sometimes thought that we have been too provincial and have assumed an attitude entirely too supercilious toward not only the peoples of Asia but those of other countries.

The American people and the American business man must realize that if prosperity is to come to this country we must be brought into friendly relationship with all the world. We want markets and still more markets; we want to know what the peoples of the world desire to buy, because with our boundless resources and our financial supremacy in the world we can supply all countries with commodities and products varied in character and quality to the extent of billions of dollars annually.

If our tariff legislation were wise and the interests of the American people regarded in their preparation, and if the business men of the United States should adopt rational trade and business policies, it would be but a short time before China and Japan would be purchasing from the United States commodities of the value of from $300,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 annually. The foreign trade of the United States finds its chief impediment in the foolish and exasperating tariff and fiscal legislation and policies projected by selfish and greedy interests within our own borders.

Mr. President, with the purpose of this bill, as I understand its terms, I am in entire sympathy. I regret that it is felt necessary to have a Federal law providing for corporations to engage in trade in China. I am opposed to the granting of charters to private corporations by the Federal Government. I have doubted the authority of Congress to create private corporations. Of course, such corporations as are necessary to execute the powers of the Federal Government Congress may create. Undoubtedly it may authorize Territories to provide for the organization of corporations and it may because of its anomalous relation to the District of Columbia create corporations within the District.

I think it would be wiser, however, to amend the general incorporation law which has been enacted by Congress for the purpose of dealing with District of Columbia corporations, and provide generally for the organization of corporations to engage in foreign trade and commerce, if the general act is not sufficiently broad to permit this to be done. In other words, general incorporation acts I regard as preferable to special and private acts creating corporations. There is no reason why corporations to carry on trade and commerce in China or South America or any other country should not be organized under general incorporation laws.

Nor do I look with any great favor upon the proposition that business corporations engaged in foreign commerce should have the prestige which it is alleged flows from the claim that they are Federal corporations. It is apparent from statements made in support of this bill, statements made in hearings and to Senators, that if a corporation is organized by an act of Congress people in other countries attribute to it greater powers than it actually possesses and associate it with the Government of the United States, indeed, regard it as if it were discharging governmental functions and performing acts for which the Government may be held responsible. Undoubtedly, a Federal charter gives the corporation possessing it a prestige and standing not merited or warranted, and may result in unpleasant surprises and perhaps disappointments in the event that enterprises in which the corporation is engaged prove unsuccessful.

I have some concern as to whether this measure before us properly guards the United States with respect to the subject of taxation. American capital employed abroad and which brings returns to American citizens should make reasonable contribution by way of taxation to the Government. But the Senator from Iowa has given this bill prolonged study, and his assurances that the Government is properly protected induces me to offer no objection to the adoption of the conference report.

INVESTIGATION OF CHARGES AGAINST FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have in my hand an editorial from the Wall Street Journal opposing the resolution introduced by me calling for an investigation of the tremendous increase in the salaries of the officers and employees of the Federal reserve banks and in the current expenses of those banks. I have shown, Mr. President, that the salaries and current expenses of the 12 Federal reserve banks in 1918 amounted to $4,768,449. I have shown that at the end of the fiscal year 1922 these expenses had increased to $19,987,559. I want to know, and the country is entitled to know, why it cost $15,219,110 more to run the 12 Federal reserve banks in 1922 than it cost to run them in 1918, when the amount of business done by the 12 banks in 1922 was not as much as it was in 1918 in its most important department.

In defending the extravagant expenditure of over $20,000,000 on a banking palace in New York City the Wall Street Journal says:

The New York Federal Reserve Bank is not spending Government money to construct its building. It is spending money that belongs to member banks, and these member banks are not complaining.

Mr. President, I am going to submit a statement here to the Senate and to the country, and I challenge any member of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate and of the House to answer these figures. I challenge the Federal Reserve Board and the Wall Street Journal to refute them. This letter from which I will read is from a very high former official of the Government, a man of great ability and unimpeachable integrity:

Section 7 of the Federal reserve act as originally passed reads in part as follows:

"After all necessary expenses of a Federal reserve bank have been paid or provided for the stockholders shall be entitled to receive an annual dividend of 6 per cent on the paid-in capital stock, which dividend shall be cumulative. After the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met all the net earnings shall be paid to the United States as a franchise tax, except that one-half of such net earnings shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to 40 per cent of the paid-in capital stock of such bank.

"The net earnings derived by the United States from Federal reserve banks shall, in the discretion of the Secretary, be used to supplement the gold reserve held against outstanding United States notes, or shall be applied to the reduction of the outstanding bonded indebtedness of the United States under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Please note that the surplus which, under the act as originally passed, could be accumulated from the earnings of the banks was limited to 40 per cent of the paid-in capital. As only one-half of the subscribed capital of the reserve banks has been paid in, the surplus was therefore limited to 20 per cent of the total subscribed capital.

At the end of December, 1918, the reserve banks, after the payment of operating expenses and dividends and after making various charge-offs to reduce their net earnings, showed that they had accumulated a large amount of money, which, under the law, ought to have been paid over to the Federal Government as franchise tax.

The money thus accumulated as of December 31, 1918, actually amounted to $26,728,440. This was the amount of net earnings which had been accumulated after the reserve banks had charged against their net earnings for the year 1918 alone large sums of money for the purpose of reducing the amount to be paid to the Government. The amount to which I refer aggregated $2,730,669, of which $1,609,537 was on account of alleged depreciation in bank premises, $848,000 was alleged depreciation in Government bonds, and $207,000 was for certain "special reserves" which were not explained.

When Governor Harding and some of the Federal reserve officials realized that they had this respectable sum of $26,728,440, then actually belonging to the Government, they determined, if possible, to hold on to the money and not to let the Government get any of it. They, therefore, caused to be introduced in Congress a bill to enable a reserve bank to use the net earnings of the bank in building up a surplus equal to 100 per cent of subscribed capital or 200 per cent of paid-in capital, instead of 40 per cent as the Federal reserve act originally provided.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Did the Senator state from whom he was reading?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am reading from a former able and faithful official of the Federal Government, the former Comptroller of the Currency, John Skelton Williams. Continuing, he says:

This bill, as originally presented, as well as I can recall, authorized a surplus equal to 100 per cent of the paid-in capital and, I think, was changed later to make it 200 per cent of the paid-in capital. At any rate, when finally passed it provided that the Government should go without franchise taxes until the reserve banks had accumulated a surplus equal to 200 per cent of their paid-in capital. That bill was adroitly maneuvered through Congress by Governor Harding with the help of his Republican friends, and finally got through on March 3, 1919—the very end of the session.

Mr. President, this is in keeping with the last two years of scheming and secret maneuvering of William P. G. Harding. In the closing hours of the session, March 3, 1919—why, Mr. President, that is how they got the resolution through the bankers' convention of New Jersey, when all the delegates had gone but about 15; and the very last thing done, when nobody knew what was happening, they slipped through a resolution asking the President to reappoint him.

As a result of that bill, the Federal Government was instantly deprived of $26,728,440 which on December 31, 1918, stood to the credit of Government franchise taxes on the books of the reserve banks. Meanwhile, the Federal Reserve Board on December 14, 1918, gave instructions to all Federal reserve banks directing that the amount which, under the law, was due to the Federal Government on account of franchise tax should be "credited" to an account to be opened under the title of "reserved for franchise tax," to remain in such account until demand therefor is made by the Government, of which due notice will be given you by the Federal Reserve Board.

There he is, Mr. President, this smooth artist governor, leaving in these banks this money that should have gone to the Government, and instructing the banks to hold it, to put it under the money held for franchise taxes until the Government should call for it, and that he would notify them before that was done.

His suggestion was eagerly followed.

Under these instructions the banks swung on to the franchise taxes due the Government, amounting, as above shown, to $26,728,440, and then, when Congress on March 3, 1919, passed the bill, the reserve banks calmly added this sum to their surplus and the Government got no part of it.

Thereafter the reserve banks rapidly added to their surplus funds, and on September 6, 1922, this surplus account amounted to $215,398,000.

Mr. President, this man, Governor Harding, knew what they were going to do. He knew that they were going to apply the progressive interest rate to the South and West, and this man knew that these earnings would accumulate by the millions and tens of millions. You see what has happened here in a very brief time—an increase in that fund of nearly $200,000,000.

The paid-in capital of the 12 banks on September 6, 1922, was $106,085,000. Under the original Federal reserve act the total amount of "surplus" which would have been accumulated from earnings would be $42,434,000; but as a result of the amendment, sneaked through in the closing hours of the session in March, 1919, the United States Government has been deprived, thus far, of the enormous sum of $172,964,000.

Mr. President, is it any wonder that the officials of these banks, like the New York Federal Reserve Bank, are having me attacked editorially, and are trying to hamper me in this great fight, and injure me politically, when they have had all this money pass into their hands to be accounted for in various questionable and ridiculous ways, so as to keep it from going into the Federal Treasury as franchise taxes. Did you get those figures, Senators—$172,964,000?

But I ask you to note particularly that this does not represent the total amount of earnings of which the Government has been deprived by the operations of the reserve banks.

In the Reserve Board's annual report for 1918, on page 31, will be found a copy of letter of instructions sent to all reserve banks on December 14, 1918, telling them how they can reduce their net earnings on which they have to pay taxes to the Federal Government by making certain charge-offs against profit and loss.

Was there ever such an underhand and thieving scheme devised? Here is the governor of the Federal Reserve Board suggesting crooked schemes and teaching these bank officials how to cheat the Government, how to hold this money, how to use it to private ends and prevent the Government from getting any of it, and then having the unmitigated gall to ask that he be reappointed, placed again at the head of this great banking system. I am not surprised that these gentlemen who are in control and who have flourished in evil-doing want to keep him in, because they are like Pat was when the jury tried him for the larceny of a yearling, and the jury acquitted him when the facts were all against him. His friends said, "Pat, how do you account for this verdict of acquittal?" He said, "Faith, and 11 of those jurors got some of the beef." [Laughter.]

I want to repeat that statement.

In the Reserve Board's annual report for 1918, on page 31, will be found a copy of letter of instructions sent to all reserve banks on December 14, 1918, telling them how they can reduce their net earnings on which they have to pay taxes by making certain charge-offs against profit and loss. For example, the banks are told—where properties have been purchased with the intention of erecting new bank buildings, banks to be permitted to charge against profit and loss account an amount sufficient to cover the estimated value of buildings which will have to be razed. Such estimated valuation of buildings to be submitted to the Federal Reserve Board for approval before depreciation allowance is determined.

Mr. President, I wonder if Senators get the full significance of that? The estimated values of buildings and depreciation charges and charge-offs against profit and loss must all be submitted to him before such allowance is determined or granted. You see he wants to keep his hands on these bank officials and place them under obligations to him so that no one of them would wish a change in the governorship of the Federal Reserve Board.

Now please note how this little scheme was worked. On page 31 of the Reserve Board's annual report for 1918 we find the following statement. I want those who do me the honor to listen to get these figures:

The Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago has purchased for $2,938,000 a property in the financial district most suitably located. The building is not regarded as being of any value—and will be torn down to make room for a new structure.

Do Senators get that?—

Now, listen:

Please note that the building was not regarded as being of any value! But the Chicago bank was doing a very lucrative business and was piling up profits which would entitle the Federal Government to a large franchise tax. Therefore in reducing the earnings which ought to have gone to the Government the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago, with the Reserve Board's sanction, deliberately made the following charges against profit and loss or net earnings in the years indicated below—

On account of alleged depreciation in "bank premises," etc.:

Calendar year 1919	$820,000
Calendar year 1920	29,062
Calendar year 1921	145,000

and in the same year they charged account bank premises to their so-called "supersurplus" previously accumulated the sum of $2,030,000.

The real estate originally purchased by the Chicago bank for ground and buildings had cost $2,938,000 and the amount which was charged off for alleged depreciation before the new building was finished amounted to actually $3,024,062!

Senators, was there ever such a scandal perpetrated against the people and the Government of the United States—more allowed for depreciation, profit and loss accounts, than the whole thing cost, buildings and all?

John Skelton Williams says of this transaction:

This can be regarded as an illustration of the manner in which these charge-offs have been handled in other banks and the manner in which the Government has thereby been robbed. I will leave comments to you.

Mr. President, as a result of the unjustifiable change of the law and as a consequence of the indefensible charge-offs for alleged depreciation on buildings, etc., which the reserve banks have been making, the Federal Government has thus far actually lost the enormous sum of $180,000,000.

Are you surprised that this Wall Street Journal and the New York Journal of Commerce and the New York Commercial are continually nagging at me and criticizing me? I am interfering with their business. They are sitting right close up under the drippings of the golden sanctuary, all three of them, receiving their baptismal blessings right out of this crooked and corrupt fund. Then they go back to their quarters and write editorials attacking me for daring to interfere with the criminal conduct of crooks. Well, the Bible tells us that the ox knoweth his owner and the ass his master's crib.

Mr. President, it does not make any difference to me whether a thief is a little thief or a big thief; they all look alike to me. A crook is a crook, and I would never want to look my constituents in the face again if I were to sit silent here because of fear that certain big special-interest newspapers would attack and criticize me for attacking some big interest. I would not be worthy to represent a sovereign State in this body if I did not have the decency and the courage to condemn the things that I know are wrong and injurious to the people that I represent and injurious to the country. Why should I fear to do it?

My people expect and they are entitled to have the very best service that I am capable of rendering—not half-hearted, but whole-hearted service.

I have shown you how Governor Harding taught these bank officials and in collusion with them prevented the Government from getting in franchise taxes from these banks over $180,000,000. Yet this Wall Street Journal says:

The New York Federal Reserve Bank is not spending Government money to construct its building. It is spending money that belongs to member banks. These member banks are not complaining.

Mr. President, the truth is they are squandering money, disposing of money somehow, and spending money that belongs to the Government. If they would honestly account for these earnings and not put them into charge-offs and depreciation and useless salaries, the Government would get a vast sum to help take care of its obligations.

The Federal Reserve Bank of New York in its statement of July 5, 1922, reports a total paid-in capital—

And I hope Senators will get these figures:

The Federal Reserve Bank of New York in its statement of July 5, 1922, reports a total paid-in capital of $27,572,000. The surplus which they were, by the amendment to the reserve act, entitled to accumulate was, therefore, $55,144,000; but they have accumulated a total of $60,197,000 or $5,053,000 over and above the amount they were entitled to lay aside before paying anything to the Government. The law provides, however, that—now that they have gotten a surplus equal to twice their paid-in capital—of the surplus earnings made by each bank in excess of 6 per cent dividends on their capital stock, 90 per cent (and not 60 per cent) shall be turned over to the Government.

Therefore, when the reserve banks spend, in addition to the 6 per cent dividend, $15,000,000 needlessly for alleged current expenses and fat salaries, etc., the Government loses exactly 90 per cent of the amount thus improvidently squandered or, say, $13,500,000 out of every $15,000,000 thus unnecessarily paid out.

I assert that when these banks increased their salaries and current expenses over 1918 in the sum of $15,000,000, they took $13,500,000 which should have gone, and would have gone, to the Federal Government. That is a nice item in these hard times. Of course, it does not seem very large to fellows like the New York bank officials, who are squandering money by the millions which they have wrung out of the sweat and toil of the masses of America.

The banks have shown much resourcefulness and ingenuity in devising means for reducing their net earnings so that they may not be required to pay this 90 per cent to the Government.

The official reports of the Federal Reserve Board show that for the calendar year 1919—page 234—net earnings were charged on account of—

Alleged depreciation in bank premises, etc., of	$2,649,819
For the calendar year 1918 they charged against profit and loss on account of bank premises (p. 213, report for 1918)	1,609,537
For the year 1920 they deducted from current net earnings on account of bank premises (p. 22, report for 1920)	1,914,484
For 1921 they charged for current net earnings on account of depreciation allowance on bank premises	1,251,675
This latter charge was exclusive of amounts charged to "supersurpluses" on account of bank premises, amounting to	2,630,277
Total	10,055,792

These figures show in connection with their land purchases and building operations the Government has apparently been deprived of about $9,000,000 of revenue already.

I have already shown that the Federal Reserve Bank of New York raised clerks or other minor officials' salaries from $1,320 to $10,000, from $2,500 to $15,000, from $3,600 to $25,000, and from $6,500 to $30,000 a year.

Mr. President, such conduct is not only reprehensible but it is inexcusable and indefensible.

Listen, Senators!

The cost for banking quarters of 4 of the 12 reserve banks is estimated in the Reserve Board's report to the Senate of October 31, 1921 (pp. 21–23), at $49,878,914, which is nearly five times as much as the average annual expenditures for the past 20 years on all appropriations made by Congress for all public buildings, post offices, courthouses, and customhouses in all 48 States of the Union.

Was there ever such misuse, taking over, and squandering of semipublic funds? Fifty million dollars squandered on four bank buildings when hundreds of thousands of people are so hard pressed financially that they have to borrow money with which to pay their taxes. In order to make these tremendous bank earnings progressive interest rates were charged on loans and discounts granted to people who were compelled to borrow to save their business from ruin. Those interest rates ran from 7 to 87½ per cent. Is it any wonder that these Wall Street papers hate and criticize me?

Mr. President, the time has come in the history of the Senate when to be attacked and assailed by one of these papers is a badge of honor. It is a notice to the public that the Senator thus assailed is a man of integrity. Why do not these New York papers answer my arguments? If my position is not sustained by the facts, they should point out wherein my statements are inaccurate and incorrect. I want to serve notice on them now that they can not frighten or intimidate me.

Our boys on the firing line in France would never have had any trouble at all in getting one of the German soldiers to pilot them into the camp of the enemy on the promise that they would take care of them and would not let them get hurt. I would have had no trouble at all in having these very papers boost me if I had become one of their subservient tools. The honest and intelligent people of my State and of the whole country know what is the matter when one of these papers commences to criticize and bitterly assail a man in this body.

Now, Mr. President, I want to read another statement to Senators. I want the whole truth of Governor Harding's record and of the record of these banks to be known to the President. I have nothing to hide from him. I have scores of things I have not yet mentioned, but I will mention them if necessary. I do not want to hold anything back and have anybody say that I ought to have brought these things to the attention of the President before any appointment was made. I am bringing them to his attention little by little and bit by bit.

I want Senators to get this statement:

The Federal Reserve Bank of New York, whose total "earning assets" on September 7, 1922, amounted to less than $270,000,000, paid out in salaries for the calendar year 1921 an amount which exceeded the total salaries paid to all Members of both Houses of Congress, the President and his Cabinet, the Vice President, the Supreme Court, the Interstate Commerce Commission, Federal Trade Commission, the Tariff Commission, the War Finance Corporation, all Federal circuit judges of the United States, and the General of the Army and the Admiral of the Navy, all combined.

In view of such suspicious and reprehensible conduct on their part, do you wonder, Senators, that those fat agents and officials up there hate me? Do any of you wonder now why they have certain daily papers there writing editorials attacking me? Do any of you wonder why H. Parker Willis, who is on the Federal reserve pay roll and also editor of the New York Journal of Commerce, writes editorials assailing me? He is Governor Harding's friend in more ways than one. They wanted to keep all these things covered up and hid from public view. They thought that they could fire a few broadsides at me and that I would retire and remain silent. They did not dream that any Senator would dare to attack the tremendous influences back of deflation and the rake-off from franchise taxes that should have gone to the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The Senator will suspend a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] desires to have a vote upon the conference report which has been before the Senate and that probably a vote can be had as soon as this speech is ended. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, one other item on that line. The New York reserve bank, according to their latest report to the Senate, appears to be still employing between 2,500 and 3,000 men and women on salaries to look after its business. There is a large national bank in New York City whose total loans, discounts, investments, and so forth, as reported on page 1186 of the New York Commercial and Financial Chronicle of September 9, 1922, amounted to more than the "earning assets" of the Federal reserve bank, and which was conducting its business ably and successfully with less than 200 employees in all departments.

Mr. President, how much longer will this reckless and wanton waste of the public funds be permitted? Twenty-five hundred or three thousand men and women on the Federal reserve bank pay roll in New York; and here is another bank, right in the same city, with greater "earning assets" and carrying on all its transactions with less than 200 employees. Two thousand and odd more on the other pay roll that ought not to be there. Why are they there? They are there to give those people an opportunity to account for this money that ought to go into the Federal Treasury. They were quick to learn under Governor Harding's instructions how to cheat the Government out of millions of franchise taxes.

Mr. President, the New York Times, not long ago, had an editorial to the effect that since the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] had spoken in defense of the Federal Reserve Board's deflation policy that I should be quiet and refrain from any further discussion of the subject, but I decline to take its advice. I am now going to submit some figures on deflation, and I challenge any member of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency to refute them. I challenge the board itself. I challenge the editor of the New York Times and all his associate editors. I include in the challenge H. Parker Willis, who is on the Federal reserve pay roll and editor of the New York Journal of Commerce. I want Senators to get these figures.

On page 28 of his January speech on the Federal reserve system Senator GLASS said:

> From January 1, 1920, to January 1, 1921, these reserve banks expanded loans to member banks in an amount approaching $1,000,000,000.

On page 15 of the same speech he said:

> This tremendous expansion of Federal reserve credits aggregating nearly $1,000,000,000 within the 12 months' period of falling prices—

And so forth.

Both of those statements were wholly inaccurate and incorrect. The period from January 1, 1920, to January 1, 1921, embraced five months during which prices in this country were either rising or were stabilized, and the official records of the Federal Reserve Board show that from the end of January, 1920, to the end of May, 1920, the loans, discounts, and bought paper held by the 12 Federal reserve banks actually increased about $200,000,000. Coincidentally with that increase corn at Chicago advanced from an average of 1.47 in January to an average of 1.98 in May. Wheat, which had averaged 2.63 in January, advanced to 2.97 in May. Cotton yarns advanced, copper was fairly steady, and raw cotton maintained its price. The great downward slide in prices in this country began or got well under way about the end of May or the first of June, 1920. On May 28, 1920, the outstanding credits of the 12 Federal reserve banks amounted to $2,938,031,000.

Let us now see what the real truth was as to whether Federal reserve credits expanded or contracted in the "12 months' period of falling prices." The Federal Reserve Board's bulletins show that on May 25, 1921, the outstanding credits of the 12 Federal reserve banks had been reduced to $1,957,394,000. Therefore there was an actual shrinkage in that "12 months' period of falling prices" of exactly $980,637,000.

I have gone over the figures in the Federal Reserve Bulletin and in reports of the Federal Reserve Board, and I have submitted them to the highest authority in the country. I submitted those figures to gentlemen who know that they are correct. I submitted them to one who will stand out in history, when the story of that deadly deflation policy is told to our children, as one who, like Daniel of old, refused to eat the king's meat and to drink his wine, who stood and fought for what he thought was right, and ably and fearlessly exposed the deflation crooks all around him.

And for every subsequent 12 months' period in the era of falling prices the actual shrinkage which took place in each such period amounted to about $1,000,000,000 or more.

The shrinkage which took place from October 29, 1920, to October 26, 1921, when the deflation in prices was especially severe, amounted to $1,728,607,000.

The Senator from Virginia himself informs us that the whole of the calendar year 1920 was not a period of falling prices, for he says that prices did not reach their "peak" until the "early summer" of 1920—presumably he meant May or June. But if we include the first five months of the year, when the Federal reserve credits were increasing, and when prices were advancing at the same time, with the last seven months of the year, when prices were declining, we find that the actual net increase in Federal reserve credits held by the 12 Federal reserve banks from January 2, 1920, to December 30, 1920, was exactly $169,018,000, which is a very sad contrast with Senator GLASS's statement that "from January 1, 1920, to January 1, 1921, these reserve banks expanded loans to member banks in an amount approaching $1,000,000,000."

Senator GLASS also says, on page 15 of his pamphlet speech:

> During the whole period of falling prices the Federal reserve banks were supplying largely increased credit facilities and issuing a constantly increasing volume of Federal reserve notes.

In view of the official figures contained in the Federal Reserve Bulletin showing the period during which prices were falling, Senator GLASS probably will not deny that the period from May 28, 1920, about which time Senator GLASS says prices reached their apex, up to January 25, 1922, composed the greater part of or was the "whole period of falling prices."

Let us now see whether the Senator's statement is correct, that during that period the reserve banks "largely increased their credit facilities." The total amount of Federal reserve credits which these banks had outstanding May 28, 1920, was $2,938,031,000. On January 25, 1922, the total amount of credits outstanding by the 12 Federal reserve banks was $932,882,000, so that, indisputably, during this period the Federal reserve banks, instead of having "largely increased" credit facilities, brought about an actual contraction of the huge sum of $2,005,149,000.

Senator GLASS should either explain amazing discrepancies in his statements or else withdraw them publicly.

The following table shows the amount of Federal reserve credits outstanding about the time that Senator GLASS says prices reached their "peak," or, say, May 28, 1920, and the contraction which had taken place at the end of the first 12 months' period, and up to the end of each month thereafter, to January 25, 1922:

Outstanding credits of the 12 Federal reserve banks.		Contraction.
Date.	Amount.	In—	Amount.
May 28, 1920	$2,938,031,000
May 25, 1921	1,957,394,000	12 months	$980,637,000
June 29, 1921	1,803,163,000	13 months	1,134,868,000
July 27, 1921	1,669,920,000	14 months	1,268,111,000
Aug. 31, 1921	1,527,255,000	15 months	1,410,776,000
Sept. 28, 1921	1,441,794,000	16 months	1,496,237,000
Oct. 26, 1921	1,371,065,000	17 months	1,566,966,000
Nov. 30, 1921	1,255,255,000	18 months	1,682,776,000
Dec. 28, 1921	1,294,073,000	19 months	1,643,958,000
Jan. 25, 1922	932,882,000	20 months	2,005,149,000

Yet the Senator from Virginia said:

During the whole period of falling prices the Federal reserve banks were supplying largely increased credit facilities.

When the official figures show that in precisely the period he mentions those reserve banks were calling and contracting credits right and left, and actually shrank the credit facilities of the people in that period by the colossal sum of over two thousand million dollars.

These figures tell the tale of drastic and destructive deflation. They tell us, Mr. President, that a dollar circulates five times and that $1,000,000,000 in circulation amounts, when followed up through business channels, to $5,000,000,000 at work. If that is true, and it is, they took out of business $2,000,000,000, and five times $2,000,000,000 is $10,000,000,000. All this was done at a time when additional currency and credits were needed and when the Federal Reserve Board governor said that the system was capable of extending additional aid to business.

Mr. President, the figures that I have given speak for themselves. Let the friends of deflation answer them. I know that the Wall Street Journal does not wish this investigation, but I am going to have it or know the reason why, by roll call, which shall reveal the position of every Senator in this Chamber. The time has come to draw the line and let the people know who it is who sit in this body, however they may be able to hide their foot prints and to keep themselves from being known, who it is who are representing the special interests in this Government as against the interests of the great mass of the people; and who it is who are cloaking—and I am calling to judgment William "Poison Gas" Harding and all that bunch of helgibites who have associated with him in this awful scandal and crime against the country.

Think of this trusted Government official telling these bank officials, "You must do this and you can avoid paying the franchise tax to the Government." Think of that, Senators! Think of the crimes of which this man is guilty! Cold-blooded, shrewd, cunning—he is all that.

I am going to read a letter which was written about him by a man in Birmingham, Ala. I shall not give his name, but I will read what he says. He is a distinguished lawyer and an able, fine man. He is congratulating me on the fight that I have made. I desire to say to Senators that in all the fight that I have waged against this man and his reappointment and against his crooked conduct in office, and against the extravagance and crookedness of certain reserve-bank officials, I have only had two letters from my State which have condemned my position, while I have had hundreds of letters commending my course. I have had letters from every State in this Union indorsing my stand. This letter reads:

You know I have known Harding—William P. G.—personally for 30 years. I knew him first when he was receiving teller in the little old Burney National Bank at Birmingham, and he has not grown in heart and spirit one inch since that time. He was always cold as an icicle. I never discovered in him the slightest uplifting interest in his fellow men or any broad human sympathy. He was simply one of those unfortunate individuals born without it. He makes an admirable and efficient executioner for the selfish financial powers of Wall Street.

The writer of this letter drew his picture perfectly.

Mr. President, there he is. Cold blooded! When I saw him turn a deaf ear to the pitiful cries of the cotton producers in my section, sit with folded arms and say, "On with the dance of deflation." When I saw him turn a deaf ear to the grain growers of the West and the cattlemen of that great section of our country, I made up my mind that he had ice water in his veins instead of blood, and that there was no pity or human sympathy in his curious make-up.

I read enough of these letters in the outset to give Senators an idea of what manner of man he is. He is the man who tells the reserve banks how to beat the Government out of its taxes; who slips up here to Congress in the closing hours on March 3, 1919, when the gavel is about to fall, when Members are telling each other good-by, when they think the work is over and nothing else is coming up, and slips through an innocent looking amendment. What did Members say about it? They said that Harding stated it was merely to allow them to set aside a little of their earnings to secure banking quarters; that they merely wanted to provide proper places in which to carry on business. Then everybody said, "Sure, that is a very good thing"; but what did he do when he got the amendment through? He saw the high interest rates approved by him accumulating millions; and then what? He sanctioned the erection of a bank palace in the city of New York to cost more money than this Capitol Building, the House and Senate marble Office Buildings, and the State, War, and Navy Building combined. This man sanctioned that thing; and I say, that after the running expenses of the Federal reserve system have been paid and dividends met, 90 per cent of the twenty-odd million dollars should have gone into the Public Treasury.

Mr. President, I learned something the other day about W. P. G. Harding that I did not know. The bankers of my State held a convention in May. He was down there, and the governor of the Federal reserve bank at Atlanta was also there. The governor of the Atlanta bank made some statements about deflation, denying it in part. When he went home John Skelton Williams, who read what he had said, wrote him a letter that made him acknowledge that he had made a mistake. At that convention—I had forgotten when the convention met, and never asked a single banker to be on guard—W. P. G. Harding was present, and after all but 14 or 15 of the delegates had gone home there was slipped through a resolution, a weak sort of a thing, in a way indorsing Harding's administration of the Federal reserve system, and Charlie Verner, of Tuscaloosa, an able and honest man, a banker, wrote me that less than half of those present voted for it. That is the way it went through. He further asserted that only a minority of the bankers of the State would favor such an indorsement. Why did they not publish that resolution? Why did they not give it out to the newspapers that Harding had in a way secured some kind of an indorsement from the bankers of Alabama? I know him, and I know his tactics. He said to himself, "If I do that, HEFLIN will take this thing up and these bankers will be writing him over the State and saying that they do not indorse me; so that the best thing to do with it is to quietly file it with the President and make the President think that the bankers of Alabama are for me." The rank and file of the bankers of my State distrust him; they hate and despise him. The rank and file of the people of my State have no confidence in him.

We had a State convention of the Democratic Party in Alabama. I was invited to address it, but could not leave Washington and go there. Knowing of the tactics of this gentleman, I wrote to some of my friends and advised them that they had better be on the lookout or an effort would be made to slip something through in the closing hours. There were some of his friends at the convention, but they felt around enough amongst the delegates to know that if they undertook such a thing a substitute resolution would be offered and adopted and that that would "cook his goose." So they dared not try such a thing.

Secretive! Why, what did he do in New Jersey? What did Ex-Governor Stokes say? He slipped through a resolution there when most of the delegates—all but 14—had gone home. What was done in a bankers' convention in a Northwestern State? One of the agents of the Federal reserve system was present urging them to indorse Harding, and those bankers knew that they had to rely on that system to get their money supply. My God, think of that, Senators! Men sitting there, hating the very name of the man, seeing the terrible effects of the deflation which he conducted, wanting him out of the system; but there in the presence of one of the agents of the board indorsing him—intimidated, coerced; and as soon as the convention adjourned and they go home they write to their Senators here and ask them to protest against his reappointment.

Then in my State a bankers' convention was held down in Mobile, and in the closing hours they slipped through a mild-mannered resolution and then put it away, pigeonholed it, and would not publish it in the proceedings to let the people know it happened, fearing that I would get behind it and have it repudiated.

Senators, I am going to make a significant statement to you now. Do you know why these Wall Street fellows want this man reappointed? They do not want to take any chances on controlling and training another man. He knows the tricks, all of them. Oh, he is a smooth artist, this man; cold-blooded; conscience never gets in his way. He knows the game. He taught them how to avoid paying a franchise tax to the Government; taught them how to beat the Government out of $200,000,000 in franchise taxes; he taught them how to use this money in increasing salaries and keeping it in their own hands, so that they might never get out of the inner circle. That is this "William Poison Gas." They do not want Crissinger, because when he saw the people of the South and West, the great mass struggling beneath the burdens of deflation, he said 3½ per cent is enough for rediscounts. They did not want that; they wanted matters arranged so they could charge 6 per cent, 7 per cent, and on up to 87½ per cent as they had done before. That is why they do not want to lose this man. Why is he frequenting these clubs in the city of Washington? Why are the Wall Street speculators and financiers demanding that the President shall reappoint this man? Why is it?

It is easy to say why it is. Governor Strong, of the New York Bank, was getting $30,000, and as soon as they got this thing well under way, greased well, oiled up properly under the instructions of William Poison Gas, that they could charge it to this account and that and beat the Government, his salary was increased to $50,000. Think of it, Senators! A man sworn to support the institutions of his country, a man supposed to be a man of integrity, teaching the officials under him how to cheat their Government, how to beat the American people and impose more burdens upon them by telling them how to defeat paying the franchise tax. Here are the figures.

Now, Senators, I have shown you—it is set out in that resolution—that they have increased their salaries over 1918, when the business was greater in the most important department than for the year ending June 30, 1922, $15,219,110. That increase alone is three times as much as it cost the Government to pay the Vice President's salary, the Speaker of the House, every Member of both branches of Congress, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, every associate justice, the President of the United States, his Cabinet members, the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the General of the Army, and the Admiral of the Navy. Three times as much as these Federal officials have received in salaries in 1922, and they did more business in 1918 than they did in 1922; and I have shown you that one big national bank in New York City, within a stone's throw of this Federal reserve bank, with less than 200 employees, had greater "invested assets" than the Federal reserve bank of that city with 3,000 men and women on its pay roll. Yet they ask that this man be reappointed, and these despicable crooks of Wall Street have somebody hired to write scurrilous editorials about me because I am exposing the most diabolical crime that has come to public notice in a half century.

Thrice armed is he whose cause is just. In spite of the efforts to misrepresent, suppress, and injure me, I shall continue the fight.

Why, Mr. President, some of the newspapers have tried in different ways to drive me from the course of duty in this matter. They are now suggesting that William Poison Gas Harding is going to see to it that I have opposition two years hence. One paper went so far as to name a man that this man Harding would put forward as a candidate to oppose me. Well, Mr. President, I am not frightened yet; and to such a candidate, whoever he may be, I serve notice on him now that when we, the people, get through with him he will be wiser but weaker politically. I shall give an account of my stewardship to a people who hate a crook and scorn a coward; to a people who have never sold out; to a people who will pursue and condemn the man from our State who betrays a trust.

I have indicted and I have convicted W. P. G. Harding of a grave crime against the country. He is the first man from a southern State to go over to the enemy, betray his trust, and prove himself unworthy of the section that points with pride to the honor and integrity of the officials that it has for a century and more given to the service of the Nation. I honor those who sent me here when I assail and condemn such a man.

I do not care where he comes from, an unfaithful public official is dangerous and ought to be condemned; it makes no difference what section of the country he hails from. I still believe with Thomas Jefferson that the whole art of government consists in the art of being honest. I still believe with Cleveland that a public office is a public trust. I believe with old Hickory Jackson that the public official in high and responsible position should be held to strict accountability to the people. That is what I am doing with W. P. G. Harding. Do you know what Jackson told old Biddle? Listen, Senators:

Old Biddle told Hickory Jackson: "You can not get your measure through without I say so," and Jackson invited him to go to a warmer climate—do you remember that?—down yonder where the fire never goes out. Then do you know what old Biddle told him? Listen, old Biddle said to him: "I will produce deflation and bring on a panic." What did old Hickory Jackson say? He said: "If you do, damn you, I will hang you," and he did not deflate or bring on a panic. Old Biddle passed away, and old Hickory—honest, brave old Hickory—still lives in the hearts and minds of the American people, and will live on and on as long as honest men and women have their being.

Governor Harding conducted a deflation policy under whose destructive drive property values vanished by the billions. It cost Alabama $102,000,000 on the cotton crop of 1920; the South, $1,500,000,000. That policy robbed the many for the benefit of a few. It held up the farmer, the country merchant, and country banker and literally plundered them. It drove Liberty bonds out of the hands of thousands of people in the South and West, and Wall Street got them for $80 and $85 on the hundred. He is congratulated in Wall Street for his part in the crime of deflation, but in the South and West he and his friends deny that we had deflation. I have shown by Federal Reserve Board figures that we did have it, drastic and destructive; and it is incumbent on the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] or the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to disprove the figures that I have given to-day on the deflation policy of 1920.

FINANCIAL AND TRANSPORTATION PROBLEMS.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, in one of the biographies of Alexander H. Stephens—who, as everybody knows, was vice president of the Southern Confederacy, and one of the purest, best, and ablest men that ever lived—he gives an account of a journey which he made by private conveyance from Georgia through Alabama on up to Washington City, on to Baltimore and other points north; and I remember that in this diary of his journey he says:

> I sat in the gallery of the Senate, and I heard Daniel Webster delivering a long speech, apparently from notes, and there was nobody listening to him on the floor, and nobody in the galleries. Next morning when I reached Baltimore I was amazed to see on the front pages of all the papers the headline: "The great speech of Daniel Webster on the finances."

In listening to speeches here in the Senate I have often been reminded of that. The seats mostly are vacant, and desks neither open or shut. The disbursing officer pays the salaries, and the salaries come from the people; but the men who draw those salaries are, according to common report, some in Europe, some in the East, some in the West, some in the North, some in the South; and no doubt the mail reaches them all in due time, bringing the monthly salary check.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] deserves the thanks of his constituents and of the country for the many able speeches which he has made against our present financial system. I can not add to what he has so eloquently said except by this prediction, and there are men living who will see it come true, even if I do not: Unless this system is changed this Government is going into the vortex of a revolution and a new Government will arise and take its place.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] asked the Senator from Alabama from what source he read, and the Senator from Alabama said he was reading from John Skelton Williams, who was for four years, I believe, the Comptroller of the Currency under President Wilson. I will read just one extract from the official reports of those who now control the Nation's money.

In December, 1920, there was in circulation $34,000,000,000. In December, 1921, there was in circulation $24,0000,000,000.

There was a difference of $10,000,000,000, and the veriest amateur in the study of economics knows in his mind, his heart, and his soul that it is a crime to take that amount of money out of circulation in so short a period. It is bound to cause a convulsion. It is bound to mean abandoned farms and broken homes. It is bound to mean destitution, beggary, and suicide. It has always been so, and always will be so.

Mr. President, I disclaim the very idea of being a vengeful man, a bloodthirsty man, a vindictive man, but I say that those who willfully, deliberately, persistently commit high crimes and misdemeanors against a people should be punished; and if W. P. G. Harding and his associates, including the house of Morgan & Co. and the affiliated bankers who are in the conspiracy, received their just deserts they would spend the balance of their days behind the bars.

During the reign of King Henry the Seventh, the first of the Tudors, he had two ministers of finance, as all Senators will remember, named Empson and Dudley, and knowing how avaricious was their master, the King, they squeezed the people to the utmost limit that pressure could make money come. The King could do no wrong, and while he lived his ministers could not be reached. But the breath was hardly out of the body of Henry the Seventh before his son and successor, Henry the Eighth, brought Empson and Dudley to the block and had their heads struck off. If Senators will read the pages which tell of the extortions, the exactions, the cruelties, and the sufferings they brought upon the people of England, and compare them with the miseries which this Federal Reserve Board has brought upon the American Republic, they will observe that the one page is almost white while the other is as black as hell.

Mr. President, I have not now the time to go into this money question and trace its history. From the time the Civil War began up to this moment there have been vampires and harpies in every great city—Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Chicago—who apparently have had the appetites of the horse leech, and were willing to suck the last drop of blood from the veins of the American people.

Those who control the volume of money are like those who have their hands around your throat; they can choke off or let on the flow of blood. They have your life in their power. The men who can expand the currency and lift prices, or contract the currency and depress prices, are the men whose fingers will still be white while they are heaping up gold which they take from the hands of those whose fingers grow rough and red in the fields of industry.

That is a long chapter as familiar to me as my alphabet. Some day I am going to take the time to go into it; but I will not do it now. At the present time the Federal Government is seeking to intimidate not only the labor unions but the entire body of the American people by writs of injunction. The railroads must be run by a life-term Federal judge, appointed, apparently, after the Government had had a consultation with him.

Judge Wilkerson of Chicago was not appointed to succeed Judge Landis until the railroad strike had begun. Did Daugherty have a secret consultation with him? Did Daugherty know what his rulings would be? Naturally those are questions which we can not answer, but I will say to Senators in all seriousness that the situation is one which calls for deep and anxious thought.

It never was intended that life-termers should rule this country. The very spirit of our Constitution, its very words, and the examples of the fathers show that they meant that the Government should be conducted by representatives who often went back to the people to be indorsed or repudiated, to be kept in or to be thrown out. These life-termers were never intended to rule this Republic, and, by the splendor of God, they never shall rule it. If they want to start a revolt which will spread from the labor union and the workshop to the farm and field, store and factory, let Daugherty take one more insolent step, and he will hear the rumble in the distance. The life-termers are not our bosses. The people are our bosses, and the people shall rule in spite of Daugherty and his life-termer Wilkerson.

Mr. President, reading in the New York Herald this morning an account of the character of evidence which Daugherty and his regiment of assistants were putting before the court, I could not help thinking that there is not an intelligent justice of the peace from Texas to Georgia, and from Georgia to Maine, who would not spurn that character of evidence and say that it has no business in a court. There has been no legal evidence of any conspiracy. Crimes committed by one man have been imputed to another, and the Government has gone out to settle economic questions, which, if settled by legislation at all, ought to be settled by the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Not for one moment would I defend a murderer, a man who commits arson, in fact a man who deliberately commits, without legal provocation, any sort of crime; but in all cases I would think it rational to consider the circumstances and the provocation. I would not try A for the crime of B. I would not try a citizen of Oklahoma for a crime of a citizen of Alabama. I would produce, if I could, the evidence against each criminal and let each criminal answer for his crime, unless it could be shown beyond a reasonable doubt that some other person was his accomplice either before or after the fact.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose to go into the merits of this particular railroad strike, but I remind the Senate and the country that the railway owners, as they call themselves, have time and again defied the decision of the Labor Board and no injunction or mandamus has been issued against those railroad owners and operators to compel them to bend their haughty heads to the mandates of the Labor Board. But when the Labor Board made a drastic cut of something like 40 per cent, as I remember, in the wages of those who work then the Labor Board became at once clothed with the powers of omnipotence, and its orders had to be obeyed if it took every soldier in the Army. At one time this Attorney General, who can not find time to prosecute and punish such criminals as Charles W. Morse and J. L. Phillips, said that he would string the United States Army along the railroads and have the railroads run by the Army.

I remember that it was always legal for the men of money—the employers—to organize their unions, to deliberate upon their plans, to fix the hours of labor, to dictate the scale of wages. I remember that it was scarcely 100 years ago that the laboring people of England wrested from the Crown the right to organize themselves in self-defense. It is the history of reform, civil and legal, that the Government never has listened to the plea of right simply because it was right, but the Government has always given way when those who were wronged showed that they were determined not to submit any longer.

Did the English Government grant Catholic emancipation for Ireland of its own free will? It did not. It was not until, under the leadership of Daniel O'Connell, the Government of Great Britain, headed by the Iron Duke of Wellington, saw that they were drifting into civil war that the Government backed down and repealed the code which denied the rights of man to Catholics in Ireland and in England.

So with the Chartists, who were hounded down and whose public meetings were broken up by cavalry charges, men on horseback with sabers in their hands riding down men, women, and children because they met at Manchester in the open field to discuss their condition, their grievances, and to petition the Government for redress. What did the Chartists demand? The annual Parliament, manhood suffrage, representation for great cities like Leeds, Bristol, and Manchester, the abolition of rotten boroughs, where an old chimney, as at old Sarum, was represented in Parliament by two members, and where the Duke of Norfolk had the right to sell 11 seats in the House of Commons, and other peers had almost equal numbers for sale, and they were sold just as a horse was sold at a fair. Did the Government give way to argument? It did not. It gave way only when it saw that even Wellington's orders to his troops, "Sharp grind your sabers as at Waterloo," had no effect at all upon the people and that there would be a bloody civil war unless man was recognized as the image of his God whether he wore the "hodden gray" or whether he wore the broadcloth.

Do we not all remember the time so late as that of the reign of Queen Elizabeth when the laboring man was under obligation to work for the first man that asked him to work, and to accept whatever pay the man offered him, else he was a criminal? Do we not all remember that under the same Queen and her predecessors, if a man was a third time hungry and a third time asked for something to eat, he forfeited his life and went to the gibbet like a felon who had raped a woman or murdered a man?

How have the laboring men lifted themselves? Not always without wrongdoing, not at all; not always without committing crime, not at all. They are human, just as the capitalists are. When they have too much power they will abuse it, just as the capitalists do. But every thinker, every reader, knows that organization, concert of action, which is now penalized as a conspiracy, is the thing to which the under dog owes the fact that he is no longer to be trampled upon with impunity.

Where did the railroad owners get the railroads? From whom did they steal them? We know who the robbers were, but who were robbed? Let me give you one instance, and I can prove every word of it. The people of Georgia with their own money built the Central Railroad, which connected the seaport of Savannah with the great city of Atlanta. It cost $7,500,000. The Legislature of Georgia encouraged guardians, trustees, and administrators to put their estate funds in the stock of that road. Those investments were virtually guaranteed by the State of Georgia. A band of speculators saw in the Central Railroad, with its small capitalization and its splendid territory, an opportunity for exploitation, and they sent Pat Calhoun, of notorious San Francisco and Cleveland memory, to Hetty Green, also somewhat celebrated, who owned the majority stock of the Central Railroad. Pat Calhoun, with his smooth tongue, persuaded Hetty Green to sell to this syndicate, the West Point Terminal crowd, a controlling interest in the Central Railroad of Georgia. As soon as they had bought control they put a mortgage of $23,000,000 upon the road which had cost our people $7,500,000. Then they let the roadbed run down and the depots become dilapidated, and the business was neglected until the receipts fell off and the management could not pay the interest on the mortgage. What then happened? They asked a life-termer Federal judge for a receivership and got it, and the receiver sold that railroad at public outcry as one would sell a cow. It was bought in by the robbers who had put the mortgage on it. It was turned over to the elder J. P. Morgan to be reorganized in the most approved New York style. By the time he got through reorganizing it the road was burdened with $55,000,000 of indebtedness, and upon that sum the shippers and passengers, whether in Georgia or out of it, have been taxed ever since. Between $7,500,000 and $55,000,000, what is there but robbery and the action of a band of robbers?

The same thing is true of the transcontinental railroads. Look at the report of Patterson, of California, and learn from that official report that the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific never cost those five exploiters one single penny. The money of towns and cities, the money of counties and States, the money of individuals, and the guaranty of the Federal Government built every mile of that railroad, and after the Government and the people had built it it belonged to the robbers, just as it does now.

Mr. President, if any Senator should introduce a resolution looking to a perpetual lease or to the sale of the Potomac River, the Ohio River, the Mississippi River, or the Tennessee River to a private corporation he would be howled out of the Chamber with shouts of derision, scorn, and contempt. And yet without a thought we have given to private corporations immensely more power over transportation, and therefore over values and therefore over the welfare of the people, than if we were to lease every navigable stream of water in the Republic.

Some days ago a western Senator introduced a mild-mannered resolution to make inquiry as to the advisability of having the Government, that is, all the people, own the coal mines. There is a vast difference between the coal deposit which nature put there when it put the soil on top of it and the harvest of wheat or of corn or of cotton which depends every year upon individual labor and the chance of the season. I voted for that resolution, and if it ever goes a step further and proposes to have the Government exercise its power of eminent domain and take in charge the coal fields, the express companies, the telegraph companies, the telephone companies, and the railroad companies, I shall be found fighting in the front ranks for it.

People say the Government can not run railroads; but it runs the post offices; it runs the parcel post; it runs the Rural Free Delivery Service, of the credit for which the Government is so anxious to deprive me, I having introduced the first mandatory resolution for it some 30 years ago, when my head was red and my heart was much younger than it is to-day.

It seems to me anomalous, monstrous, that 5 men or 5,000 men or 500,000 men should have the right to say whether or not my fireplace shall be warmed at night during the cold winter and whether or not I shall ride on a train, or ship any freight at reasonable rates that will allow me a chance to live off my farm. A few days ago a Nebraska shipper sent a carload of corn to Atlanta. After the railroads had modestly taken out what they claimed for freight the Nebraska shipper—and I wish the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to hear the figures—got 52 cents. The Georgia farmer will pay that much and a half more to get 1 bushel of that corn.

Mr. President, we dare to call ourselves a progressive Nation. As a matter of fact, in some respects we are, while in others we are the most backward people in the civilized world. Ever since 1868 the English Government has owned its telegraphs; it now owns its telephones; and one can go into any English post office and either write a letter or a card or send a telegram or hold a telephone conversation with anyone in the United Kingdom at a nominal cost. Here, however, we are in 1922 still bound hand and foot to the express companies, to the telegraph companies, to the telephone companies, and to the railroad companies.

I say, and will defend it in any forum whatsoever, that my sympathies are with the great public and with the laboring people, without whose toil these men of the office would never ride into this harbor down here on the Potomac and cast the anchor of imperial yachts so magnificent that one almost inquires what king it is who has come to visit Washington City. Mr. President, the men of whom I speak never created any wealth. The brokers, the bankers, the railroad executives never created any wealth; the mine operators never did. It is the men who take hold with their hands or the men who invent with their brains who create wealth. I for one stand with Robert Burns and Thomas Jefferson, and say—

A man's a man for a' that.

Let us have laws that will do justice to high and low, to black and white, to town and country; but we shall never have them so long as we allow the money of the country to be held in the hands of the unscrupulous few, and the transportation companies to be ruled by an unscrupulous few, nor any of the public utilities to be exploited for private gain.

TRADE WITH CHINA—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4810) to authorize the incorporation of companies to promote trade in China.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

REPORT OF JOINT COMMISSION ON POSTAL SERVICE (S. DOC. 250).

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, for the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], chairman of the Joint Commission on the Postal Service, I submit the report of that commission, making recommendations relative to postal facilities at Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, and Detroit; and I ask that it may be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be received and printed.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the unfinished business be now laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the Liberian loan joint resolution.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dillingham	McCumber	Sheppard
Ball	du Pont	McLean	Shortridge
Borah	Fletcher	McNary	Smoot
Broussard	France	Moses	Sterling
Bursum	Glass	Nelson	Swanson
Calder	Hale	New	Trammell
Cameron	Harrison	Nicholson	Walsh, Mass.
Capper	Heflin	Oddie	Watson, Ga.
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Willis
Cummins	Kellogg	Rawson
Curtis	King	Robinson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. RANSDELL answered to his name when called.

Mr. OWEN and Mr. ERNST entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, September 14, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, September 13, 1922.

The House met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, we are all debtors to the continual goodness of our heavenly Father, hence we are inspired with a sense of thanksgiving and praise. How terrible art Thou and yet how gentle! O may we behold wondrous things out of Thy law. Give to our understanding clear vision that we may discern wisely Thy will concerning our public and private obligations. In the midst of the days remember mercy. May the secrets of our energy be in Thy wisdom and constraining love. Fill our memories with the sweetest, the best, and the purest in our recollections, and through all the light and through all the dark be with us. In the blessed name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONFERENCE REPORT—PENSION BILL.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit a conference report on the bill H. R. 5214 for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota submits a conference report on a bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5214) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army of wars other than the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 11872. An act providing for a recodification of the Panama Canal Zone laws.

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3917) to amend section 876 of the Revised Statutes.

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3918) to amend section 51 of chapter 4 of the Judicial Code.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of Federal control of railroads.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, President Wilson, by authority of a clause of the annual Army appropriation act for 1917, on December 28 of that year, issued his proclamation taking possession and control of the railroads in the United States and appointed W. G. McAdoo director general. The proclamation contained the following paragraph:

The director shall as soon as may be after having assumed such possession and control enter upon negotiations with the several companies looking to agreements for just and reasonable compensation for the possession, use, and control of their respective properties on the basis of an annual guaranteed compensation above accruing depreciation and the maintenance of their properties equivalent, as nearly as may be, to the average of the net operating income thereof for the three-year period ending June 30, 1917, the results of such negotiations to be reported to me for such action as may be appropriate and lawful.

This clause was no doubt inserted to comply with the Constitution, which says that "private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation." The Federal control act, approved March 21, 1918, provided more in detail for compensation to the railroads on the basis indicated.

The director general under the authority thus given entered into contracts with substantially all the roads whereby the Government guaranteed this net return, which amounted to $917,000,000 per annum. This net return was to continue during Federal control, and this control was to continue during the war and for a reasonable time thereafter, not exceeding one year and nine months after date of the proclamation of the exchange of ratification of the treaty of peace—August 14, 1923. The price of labor and other items that enter into the cost of railway operation were advancing more rapidly than the railroad administration could raise the freight and passenger rates, and hence there arose a growing deficit between what the railroads earned and what had been guaranteed them.

This deficit in the beginning of 1920 was at the rate of $100,000,000 per month, and had to be made good by appropriations out of the United States Treasury. This was the situation that confronted the President and Congress, and resulted in the passage of the Esch-Cummins law, which ended Federal control on March 1, 1920, and also terminated the guaranteed net return to take effect six months later, to wit, September 1, 1920. But for this act this deficit of $100,000,000 per month might have continued to burden the taxpayers until August 14, 1923, or a period of 36½ months longer than the above six-month period, and would have cost the Government an additional expense of $3,650,000,000.

Instead of this law creating a guaranty it terminated the one made by President Wilson in December, 1917. The contention that this six-month guaranty was based on "watered stock" is therefore on its face a pure fabrication. It was not based on capital stock or on valuation, but was based on the "average of the net operating income for the three-year period ending June 30, 1917," as agreed to by President Wilson.

Another provision of the law that has been much misunderstood and misrepresented is the one which in substance states—

That for the two years beginning March 1, 1920, the commission in the exercise of their power to prescribe just and reasonable rates "shall take as a fair return on the property used in the service of transportation a sum equal to 5½ per cent of the value of such property, but may in its discretion add thereto a sum not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent to make provision for improvement, betterments, or equipment.

This has been pointed out as a guaranty of income. The commission, however, has decided that it is not a guaranty, and that although the roads may fail to earn the amount stated there is no liability. During the two-year period referred to the railroads only earned 3.27 per cent. They have never asked for any more. The period expired on the 1st of last March, and the Government has never paid nor has it ever been asked to pay a single cent.

At the time of the passage of this law, February, 1920, prices and the cost of living were at the highest point ever reached, and the employees of the carriers were demanding increases in wages and threatening a general railway strike in case the increases were not given. The Labor Board created by the act was appealed to by the employees, and after a hearing on July 20, 1920, increases estimated to amount to over $600,000,000 per annum were granted. The carriers then applied to the commission for increased rates, to enable them to meet this addition to the operating cost, and as a result they were granted increases in freight rates as follows: Eastern group, 40 per cent; southern group, 25 per cent; western group, 35 per cent; and Montana-Pacific group, 25 per cent.

In their decision of July 29, 1920, the commission estimated that these increases would produce additional revenue of $618,000,000, and also found that such increased revenue was necessary to meet the increased wages given by the said decision of the Railroad Labor Board. It is undisputed and a matter of public official record that the cause of this increase in railroad rates was the increased wages allowed to the employees by the Labor Board of July 20, 1920. Those who claim otherwise are simply trying to deceive the public. During the next year, 1921, general deflation of prices had set in, and the Labor Board upon application by the carriers, and after hearing both sides to the controversy, on July 1 rendered a decision reducing the compensation of employees, estimated at about $300,000,000. Immediately following this action of the Labor Board the commission upon the application of farmers and shippers generally, and after extended hearings, ordered a reduction in freight rates on farm products, lumber, and other basic commodities of 10 per cent, which is still in force. Later other reductions in freight rates were ordered applicable to certain designated territory and special commodities. These reductions were estimated to equal the amount of wage reductions granted the carriers. Last spring upon application of the carriers the Labor Board took up the question of a reduction in the compensation of the station forces, unskilled labor, and shop employees, about 1,400,000 in number, and after a careful hearing where all parties in interest were heard a reduction of 10 per cent in wages of these employees was ordered. The shopmen, however, refused to abide by the decision and went on a strike. By crippling or interrupting railway transportation in the whole United States they expected to enforce their demands. When the strike appeared to fail they proposed a general strike on all the railroads. The people of the country, and especially those in the cities, are so dependent on uninterrupted railway transportation service that without it even for a few days would be a calamity, the extent of which can not be adequately imagined or described. But in the eyes of these labor leaders the danger of starvation, sickness, and death of millions of their fellow men might well be risked for the sake of nullifying the reduction of 10 per cent in the wages of the shopmen ordered by the Labor Board, the same board that in 1920 granted them and their fellow workers an increase of $600,000,000 per annum. The extremes to which the strikes may go when lead by unscrupulous agitators is well illustrated in the facts brought out in the injunction proceedings brought by the United States, and recently decided in favor of the Government.

The railroad as well as the coal strikes are now over and the danger of freezing and starvation are past at least for the present, but these recent events will serve to impress on the public mind the truth that railway transportation is a public service necessary to the life and well-being of the people, and that some reasonable and just way must be found to insure its continuous operation in the future. It was hoped that the Railroad Labor Board, upon which the employers, the employees, and the public are equally represented would be an efficient instrumentality to this end, and if its decisions would be respected in the future by both sides to the dispute there can be no doubt that this hope would be realized.

Now that the strike is over and the 10 per cent reduction in the wages of about 1,300,000 employees goes into effect it will be the proper time for the farmer, upon whom the burden of high freight rates bears the hardest, to apply for reductions, and I am going to do all I can to help to get it.

TITLE I.—DUTIABLE LIST.

SCHEDULE 1.—CHEMICALS, OILS, AND PAINTS.

On amendments Nos. 1 and 2: The House bill did not specify the basis for determining the per cent of acetic acid content of acetic acid for the application of the duties imposed upon the same. The Senate amendment specifies that the basis shall be by weight; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 3: The House bill imposed a duty of 8 cents a pound upon acetic anhydride. The Senate amendment lowers this duty to 5 cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 4: The House bill imposed a duty of 2 cents a pound upon boric acid. The Senate amendment reduces this duty to 1½ cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 5: The House bill imposed a duty of 12 cents a pound upon citric acid. The Senate amendment increases this duty to 18 cents a pound; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 17 cents a pound.

On amendments Nos. 6, 7, and 8: The House bill imposed the following duties upon lactic acid: Containing by weight of lactic acid less than 30 per cent, 1½ cents a pound; 30 per cent or more and less than 55 per cent, 3 cents a pound; and 55 per cent or more, 5 cents a pound. The Senate amendments increase these duties, respectively, to 2 cents, 4 cents, and 9 cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 10, 11, and 12: The House bill based the duty upon tannic acid containing 50 per cent or more of tannic acid by weight upon the tannic-acid content. The Senate amendment changes the basis to existence or nonexistence of medicinal use; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 13: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value upon arsenic acid. The Senate amendment makes the duty 3 cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 14 and 1353: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value upon arsenious acid or white arsenic. The Senate amendments Nos. 14 and 1353 place this article upon the free list; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 15: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value upon formic acid. The Senate amendment makes this duty 4 cents a pound; and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the reference to formic acid, having the effect of making it dutiable at 25 per cent foreign value under the basket clause of this paragraph.

On amendment No. 16: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value upon gallic acid. The Senate amendment makes the duty 8 cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 17: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value on oleic acid or red oil. The Senate amendment makes this duty 1½ cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 18: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value on oxalic acid. The Senate amendment makes this duty 4 cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 19: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value on phosphoric acid. The Senate amendment makes this duty 2 cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 20: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value on pyrogallic acid. The Senate amendment makes this duty 12 cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 21: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value upon stearic acid. The Senate amendment makes this duty 1½ cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 22 and 23: The House bill imposed a duty of 6 cents a pound upon amyl, butyl, isopropyl alcohol, and fusel oil. Amendment No. 22 reduces this duty to 3 cents a pound in the case of amyl and butyl alcohol, and makes this duty applicable to all propyl alcohol (which alcohol other than isopropyl was dutiable under paragraph 5 of the House bill at 25 per cent American value). Amendment No. 23 reduces the duty upon fusel oil to 2 cents a pound. The Senate amendment makes this duty 40 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 35 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 254: The House bill imposed a duty of 20 per cent American value on tin bichloride, tin tetrachloride, and other chemical compounds of which tin constitutes the element of chief value. The Senate amendment makes this duty 25 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 256: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value on titanium potassium oxalate and all compounds and mixtures containing titanium. The Senate amendment makes this duty 30 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

SCHEDULE 2.—EARTHS, EARTHENWARE, AND GLASSWARE.

On amendments Nos. 259 and 1382: The House bill imposed duties on brick, other than magnesite brick, ranging from 10 per cent to 23 per cent American value, and in the case of magnesite brick three-fourths of a cent a pound and 10 per cent American value. Amendment No. 259 strikes out the House provision and imposes a duty of 25 per cent foreign value upon bath brick, chrome brick, and fire brick, not specially provided for, and a duty of three-fourths of a cent a pound and 10 per cent foreign value on magnesite brick. Amendment No. 1382 places all other brick on the free list, but it provides that if any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government imposes a duty on such brick imported from the United States, an equal duty shall be imposed on such brick coming into the United States from such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government; and the House recedes on both amendments.

On amendment No. 262: The House bill imposed on earthenware tiles and tiling, except pill tiles and quarry tiles valued at not more than 40 cents a square foot, a minimum duty of 35 per cent American value and a maximum duty of 50 per cent American value. The Senate amendment makes the minimum duty 45 per cent foreign value and the maximum duty 60 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 263: The House bill imposes a duty of 38 per cent American value on earthenware tiles and tiling, except pill tiles and quarry tiles valued at more than 40 cents a square foot. The Senate amendment makes this duty 50 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 264: The House bill imposed a duty of 38 per cent American value on all articles composed wholly or in chief value of earthenware tiles or tiling, except pill tiles. The Senate amendment makes this duty 50 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 265: The House bill imposed on quarry tiles a duty of 3 cents a square foot, but not less than 20 per cent American value. The Senate amendment makes the duty 5 cents a square foot but not less than 30 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 3 cents a square foot but not less than 30 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 266: The House bill imposed upon Roman, Portland, and other hydraulic cement a duty of 5 cents per hundred pounds in packages and 4 cents per hundred pounds in bulk and a duty of 17 per cent American value on other cement not specially provided for. This amendment strikes out these duties, and amendment No. 1393 places Roman, Portland, and other hydraulic cement on the free list, and amendment No. 281 places a duty of 20 per cent foreign value on other cement not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 271: See amendment No. 156.

On amendments Nos. 272 and 1516: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 cents a ton on crude gypsum. The Senate amendment transfers this article to the free list; and the House recedes on amendment 272 and recedes on amendment 1516 with an amendment making a change in paragraph number.

On amendment No. 281: This amendment imposes a duty of 20 per cent foreign value upon cement not specially provided for, which under the House bill was dutiable at 17 per cent American value under paragraph 203; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 282: The House bill imposed a duty of two-tenths cent a pound on unmanufactured pumice stone valued at $15 or less a ton. The Senate amendment reduces this duty to one-tenth cent a ton; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 283: The House bill imposed a duty of three-tenths cent a pound on unmanufactured pumice stone valued at more than $15 per ton. The Senate amendment reduces this duty to one-fourth cent a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 285: The House bill imposed a duty of 26 per cent American value upon manufactures of pumice stone or of which pumice stone is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for. The Senate amendment makes this duty 35 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 287: The House bill imposed a duty of $3 a ton of 2,000 pounds on wrought or manufactured fuller's earth. The Senate amendment makes the duty $3.25 a long ton; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 288: This amendment imposes a duty of $1.50 a ton on glass sand containing 99 per cent or more of silica, which under the House bill was free of duty; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 289: The House bill imposed upon fluorspar a duty of $5 a ton of 2,000 pounds, but provided that after a year the duty should be reduced to $4 a ton of 2,000 pounds. The Senate amendment makes the duty $5.60 a long ton beginning at the passage of the act; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 290: The House bill imposed a duty of 4 cents a pound and 17 per cent American value on unmanufactured mica. The Senate amendment makes the duty 4 cents a pound if the value is not above 15 cents a pound and 25 per cent foreign value if the value is above 15 cents a pound. The House bill imposed on mica cut or trimmed and mica splittings a duty of 10 cents a pound and 17 per cent American value. The Senate amendment makes the duty 30 per cent foreign value. The House bill imposed a duty of 10 cents a pound and 17 per cent American value on mica plates, built-up mica, and all manufactures of mica or of which mica is the component material of chief value. The Senate amendment makes this duty 40 per cent foreign value. The House bill imposed a duty of 4 cents a pound and 20 per cent American value on ground mica. The Senate amendment makes this duty 20 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 292: The House bill imposed a duty of one-half cent a pound on talc, soapstone, and French chalk, ground, washed, powered, or pulverized, except toilet preparations. The Senate amendment makes this duty 25 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 293 and 294: The House bill imposed upon manufactures (except toilet preparations) of which talc, soapstone, or French chalk is the component material of chief value, wholly or partly finished and not specially provided for, a duty of 25 per cent American value if not decorated, and 30 per cent American value if decorated. The Senate amendments make these duties 35 per cent foreign value if not decorated and 45 per cent foreign value if decorated; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 295: This amendment imposes upon common earthenware, common salt-glazed stoneware, and stoneware and earthenware crucibles, if not ornamented or decorated, a duty of 15 per cent foreign value instead of the House bill's provision of 20 per cent American value and imposes upon such articles ornamented or decorated a duty of 20 per cent foreign value instead of the duty under paragraph 214 of the House bill of 28 per cent American value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 296: The House bill provided a duty of 20 per cent American value upon Rockingham earthenware as a manufacture of common yellow, brown, or gray earthenware not specially provided for. The Senate amendment specifically mentions Rockingham earthenware and imposes a duty upon it of 25 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 297 and 311: The House bill imposed a duty of 10 per cent American value on crude or refined graphite or plumbago not specially provided for. The Senate amendment imposes a duty of 10 per cent foreign value on amorphous graphite, 20 per cent foreign value on crystalline lump, chip, or dust, and 2 cents a pound on crystalline flake, and adds a definition of the term "crystalline flake." The House recedes from amendment No. 297 and recedes on amendment No. 311 with an amendment changing the rate on crystalline flake to 1½ cents a pound.

On amendments Nos. 300 and 303: The House bill imposed upon earthenware and crockery ware composed of a nonvitrified absorbent body, including white granite and semiporcelain earthenware, and cream-colored ware and stoneware, and upon all articles composed wholly or in chief value of such ware, a duty of 25 per cent American value if not decorated and of 28 per cent American value if decorated. The Senate amendment makes these rates, respectively, 45 per cent foreign value and 50 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 307, 309, and 310: The House bill imposed upon china, porcelain, and other vitrified wares, including chemical porcelain ware and chemical stoneware, composed of a vitrified nonabsorbent body, and upon all bisque and Parian wares, and upon all other articles composed wholly or in chief value of such ware, a duty of 35 per cent American value if not decorated and a duty of 40 per cent American value if decorated. The Senate amendments Nos. 307 and 309 make these duties, respectively, 60 per cent foreign value and 70 per cent foreign value, and amendment No. 310 provides that if any such articles contain 25 per cent or more of calcined bone the duty shall be 50 per cent foreign value if not decorated and 55 per cent foreign value if decorated; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 311: See amendment No. 297.

On amendments Nos. 313 and 314: The House bill imposed upon earthy or mineral substances wholly or partly manufactured and articles, wares, and materials composed wholly or in chief value of such substances, not specially provided for, a duty of 21 per cent American value if not decorated and of 28 per cent American value if decorated. The Senate amendments make these rates, respectively, 35 per cent foreign value and 45 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with amendments making the duties, respectively, 30 per cent foreign value and 40 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 315: The House bill imposed a duty of 15 per cent American value on gas retorts. The Senate amendment makes this duty 20 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 316: The House bill imposed a duty of 35 per cent American value on lava tips for burners. The Senate amendment makes this duty 10 cents per gross and 15 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 319: The House bill imposed a duty of 35 per cent American value on carbons and electrodes for producing electric arc light, electrodes of carbon or graphite for electrolytic purposes, brushes for electrical machines or appliances, and plates or other forms for manufacturing such brushes, and upon all articles composed wholly or in part of graphite wholly or partly manufactured and not specially provided for. The Senate amendment makes this duty 45 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 320: The House bill imposed upon plain green or colored, molded or pressed, and flint, lime, or lead glass bottles, and other containers, various rates of duty with a minimum duty of 28 per cent American value. The Senate amendment strikes out this minimum duty; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 323: This amendment makes a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment making a further clerical change.

On amendment No. 324: The House bill proposed a rate of 40 per cent American value on bottles and all articles wholly or in chief value of glass or paste, blown or partly blown in the mold or otherwise, decorated or ornamented in any manner, cut or ground (except such grinding as is necessary for fitting stoppers or for purposes other than ornamentation), sand-blasted and silvered, whether filled or unfilled, or whether their contents be dutiable or free. The Senate amendment subdivides all of this ware, composed wholly or in chief value of glass or paste or a combination of glass and paste, into the following classes with the following rates of duty: All scientific glassware 75 per cent foreign value, in respect to which item the House recedes with an amendment making the rate 65 per cent foreign value; all illuminating articles (except electric-light bulbs), 70 per cent foreign value, in respect to which item the House recedes with an amendment making the rate 60 per cent foreign value; all plated or cased glass, composed of two or more layers of clear, opaque, colored, or semitranslucent glass, or combinations of the same, 70 per cent foreign value, in respect to which item the House recedes with an amendment making the rate 60 per cent foreign value; table and kitchen articles and utensils and all articles of every description not specially provided for, blown or partly blown in the mold or otherwise, or decorated or ornamented in any manner, or cut or ground (except such grinding as is necessary for fitting stoppers or for purposes other than ornamentation), sand-blasted or silvered, whether filled or unfilled, and whether their contents be dutiable or free, 65 per cent foreign value, in respect to which item the House recedes with an amendment making the rate 55 per cent foreign value; table and kitchen articles and utensils, when pressed and unpolished, whether or not decorated or ornamented in any manner, or ground (except such grinding as is necessary for fitting stoppers or for purposes other than ornamental), whether filled or unfilled, or whether their contents be dutiable or free, 50 per cent foreign value, in respect to which item the House recedes. As a part of the conference action a clerical change was also made.

On amendments Nos. 326 to 331: The following table shows the rates imposed by the House bill and by the Senate amendments upon unpolished cylinder, crown, and sheet glass:

Dimensions.	House rate per pound.	Senate rate per pound.
	Cents.	Cents.
Above 150 square inches and not exceeding 384 square inches..	1⅜	1⅜
Above 384 square inches and not exceeding 720 square inches..	2¼	1⅝
Above 720 square inches and not exceeding 864 square inches..	2¾	1¾
Above 864 square inches and not exceeding 1,200 square inches..	3½	2
Above 1,200 square inches and not exceeding 2,400 square inches.	3¾	2¼
Above 2,400 square inches	4	2½

The House recedes on all these amendments.

On amendment No. 332: The House bill provided that the rate of duty on unpolished cylinder, crown, and sheet glass should not be less than 35 per cent, American value. The Senate amendment strikes out this minimum duty; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 333: The House bill imposed a duty of 5 cents per square foot on cylinder, crown, and sheet glass not exceeding 304 square inches. The Senate amendment reduces this duty to 4 cents per square foot; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 334, 335, and 336: The House bill imposed upon unsilvered polished plate glass the following duties: Eleven cents a square foot if not exceeding 384 square inches, 12½ cents a square foot if above that and not exceeding 720 square inches, and 20 cents a square foot if above 720 square inches. The Senate amendments make these rates, respectively, 12½ cents, 15 cents, and 17½ cents; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 337, 338, and 339: The following duties upon unsilvered cast plate glass, if containing a wire netting, are imposed by the House bill: Twelve cents a square foot if not exceeding 384 square inches, 15 cents a square foot if not exceeding 720 square inches, and 25 cents a square foot if exceeding 720 square inches. The Senate amendment makes these duties, respectively, 15 cents, 17½ cents, and 20 cents; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 340, 341, and 342: The House bill imposed upon silvered cast polished plate glass and silvered cylinder and crown glass and upon looking-glass plates the following duties: Exceeding 144 square inches and not exceeding 384 square inches, 11 cents a square foot, and above 384 square inches and not exceeding 720 square inches 13 cents a square foot, and all above that, 22 cents a square foot. The Senate amendments make these rates 13½ cents, 16 cents, and 21 cents, respectively; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 343: This amendment imposes a minimum duty of 35 per cent, foreign value, upon silvered polished plate glass, cylinder and ground glass, and looking-glass plates exceeding 144 square inches; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 347: The House bill imposed a duty of 35 per cent, American value, upon optical glass or glass used for lenses or prisms for spectacles or for optical instruments or for optical parts, scientific or commercial. The Senate amendment makes this duty 45 per cent, foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 348: This amendment imposes a duty of 45 per cent, foreign value, on azimuth mirrors, sextants, and octants, which, under the House bill, were dutiable at various rates according to the component material of chief value. The House recedes.

On amendment Nos. 349, 515, and 516: The House bill made surveying instruments in chief value of glass dutiable at 35 per cent American value under paragraph 228 and surveying instruments wholly or in chief value of metal dutiable at 40 per cent American value under the provisions of paragraph 360. Senate amendment 349 strikes surveying instruments from paragraph 228. Amendments Nos. 515 and 516 make them dutiable under the metal schedule at 35 per cent foreign value. The House recedes on amendment 349; the Senate recedes on amendments Nos. 515 and 516; the effect of this action being to make surveying instruments wholly or in chief value of metal dutiable at 40 per cent foreign value and such instruments if wholly or in chief value of glass dutiable at 45 per cent foreign value as optical instruments not specially provided for under paragraph 230.

On amendment No. 350: The House bill imposed a duty of 35 per cent American value on photographic and projection lenses, opera and field glasses, telescopes, microscopes, and other optical instruments, and frames and mountings for the same. The Senate amendment makes this duty 45 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 351: The House bill imposed a duty of 35 per cent American value on incandescent electric light bulbs and lamps. The Senate amendment makes this duty 20 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 353: The House bill imposed a duty of 30 per cent American value on stained or painted glass windows and all mirrors not exceeding 144 square inches. The Senate amendment makes this duty 60 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 50 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 354: The House bill imposed a duty of 30 per cent American value upon all glass or manufactures of glass or paste, or of which glass or paste is the component material of chief value. The Senate amendment makes this duty 60 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 50 per cent foreign value.

On amendments Nos. 355 and 356: The House bill imposed a duty of 23 per cent American value on smalts, frostings, and all ceramic and glass colors, fluxes, glazes, and enamels, if ground or pulverized, and a duty of 35 per cent American value if in any other form. The Senate amendments make these rates, respectively, 30 per cent foreign value and 40 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 358: The House bill imposed a duty of 35 per cent American value on opal, enamel, or cylinder glass tiles, tiling, and rods. The Senate amendment makes this duty 40 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 359 and 360: The House bill imposed upon cubes of marble, breccia, or onyx, not exceeding 2 cubic inches in size, a duty of one-fourth of 1 cent a pound and 17 per cent American value if loose, and a duty of 5 cents a superficial foot and 26 per cent American value if attached to paper or other material. The Senate in each case retains the specific rate and makes the ad valorem rates, respectively, 20 per cent foreign value and 35 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 361: The House bill imposed a duty of 40 per cent American value on articles of which marble, breccia, onyx, alabaster, or jet is the component material of chief value and upon all articles composed wholly or in chief value of agate, rock crystal, or other semiprecious stone, unless cut so as to fit them expressly for use in the construction of jewelry. The Senate amendment makes this duty 60 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 50 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 362: The House bill imposed a duty of 13 per cent American value on burrstones manufactured or bound up into millstones. The Senate amendment makes this duty 15 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 363: The House bill imposed a duty of 40 per cent American value on freestone, granite, sandstone, lava, and other monumental or building stone except marble, breccia, or onyx, if hewn, dressed, or otherwise manufactured. The Senate amendment makes this duty 50 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 364: The House bill imposed a duty of $2 a ton on grindstones. The Senate amendment makes this duty $1.75 per ton; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 365: The House bill imposed a duty of 17 per cent American value on slate and manufactures thereof. The Senate amendment makes this duty 15 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 366: The House bill imposed a duty of 40 per cent American value on watch crystals. The Senate amendment makes this duty 60 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

SCHEDULE 3.—METALS AND MANUFACTURES OF.

On amendment No. 368: The House bill imposed a duty of $1.25 a ton on iron in pigs, iron kentledge, and spiegeleisen. The Senate amendment reduces this duty to 75 cents a ton; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 369: The House bill imposed a duty of $1.25 a ton on scrap tin plate. The Senate amendment removes this duty, and Senate amendment 1575 puts this artcle on the free list. The House bill imposed a duty of $1.25 a ton on wrought and cast scrap iron and scrap steel, regardless of value. The Senate amendment reduces the duty to 75 cents a ton confined to material valued at not more than 7 cents a pound, the effect of the amendment being to impose a duty on such materials valued at more than 7 cents a pound under paragraph 304, the varying rates of duty depending on the value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 370: The House bill defines spiegeleisen as an iron manganese alloy containing less than 45 per cent of manganese. The Senate amendment reduces this percentage to 30; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 371: The House bill imposed a duty of 75 cents a pound on the metallic molybdenum content of molybdenum ore or concentrates. The Senate amendment reduces this to 35 cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 372: The House bill imposed on ferromanganese containing more than 1 per cent of carbon a duty of 2⅜ cents a pound on the metallic manganese content. The Senate amendment reduces this to 1¾ cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 373: The House bill defines ferromanganese to be iron manganese alloys containing 45 per cent or more of manganese. The Senate amendment reduces this percentage to 30; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 374 and 375: The House bill imposed upon various alloys containing manganese a duty of 2⅜ cents a pound on the manganese content and 28 per cent American value. The Senate amendment makes this duty 1¾ cents a pound on the manganese content and 15 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 376 and 377: The House bill imposed upon molybdenum and molybdenum compounds and alloys a duty of $1.25 a pound on the molybdenum content and 17 per cent American value. The Senate amendments make this duty 50 cents a pound on molybdenum content and 15 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 378 and 379: The House bill imposed on tungsten and tungsten compounds and ferrotungsten a duty of 72 cents a pounds on the tungsten content and 15 per cent American value. The Senate amendment makes this duty 60 cents a pound on the tungsten content and 25 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 380 and 381: The House bill imposed upon nonferrous alloys of tungsten a duty of 72 cents a pound on the tungsten content and 17 per cent American value. The Senate amendment makes this duty 60 cents a pound on the tungsten content and 25 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 382 and 383: The House bill imposed the following duties on ferrosilicon: Containing from 8 per cent to 30 per cent of silicon, 2½ cents a pound on the silicon content; containing from 30 per cent to 60 per cent, 2¾ cents a pound on the silicon content. The Senate amendment makes the duty 2 cents a pound on the silicon content if the content were from 8 per cent to 60 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 384: The House bill imposed on ferrosilicon containing from 60 per cent to 80 per cent of silicon a duty of 3½ cents a pound on the silicon content. The Senate amendment reduces this duty to 3 cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 385: The House bill imposed on ferrocerium a duty of 30 per cent American value. The Senate amendment removes this duty, but amendment 389 imposes on this material a duty of $2 a pound and 25 per cent foreign value. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 387: The House bill imposed upon tantalum a duty of 30 per cent American value. The Senate amendment removes this duty, but amendment 389 imposes on this material a duty of 40 per cent foreign value. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 388: The House bill imposed a duty of 30 per cent American value on minor ferro-alloys. The Senate amendment makes this duty 25 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 389: This amendment imposes a duty of $2 a pound on cerium metal, and amendment 1395 removes it from the free list. The amendment also places a duty of $2 a pound and 25 per cent foreign value on ferrocerium and all other cerium alloys, which under the House bill were dutiable at 30 per cent American value. The amendment also imposes a duty of 40 per cent foreign value on all ductile tantalum metal or ductile nonferrous alloys thereof. Under the House bill tantalum was dutiable at 30 per cent American value, and ductile nonferrous alloys were free under paragraph 1559 of the House bill as unwrought metals. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 390: The House bill imposed various specific duties, according to width and thickness, upon muck bars and bar iron, etc., ranging from one-fourth to five-tenths of 1 cent a pound, and in the case of such bars manufactured by the use of charcoal as a fuel the rate was three-tenths of a cent a pound. The Senate amendment strikes out the House provision and makes these articles dutiable at from two-tenths of 1 cent a pound to 1½ cents a pound, according to the value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 392 to 395: The following table shows the duties imposed by the House bill and by the Senate amendments on crude steel, billets, bars, shafting, etc., if valued above 5 cents a pound.

	House rate.	Senate rate.
	Cents per pound.	Cents per pound.
Amendment No. 392:
Valued above 5 and not above 8 cents per pound	1½	1⅞
Amendment No. 393:
Valued above 8 and not above 12 cents per pound	2	2½
Amendment No. 394:
Valued above 12 and not above 16 cents per pound	2½	3½
		Per cent of foreign value.
Amendment No. 395:
Valued above 16 cents and not above 20 cents per pound	3½	20
Valued above 20 and not above 24 cents per pound	4	20
Valued above 24 and not above 32 cents per pound	5	20
Valued above 32 and not above 40 cents per pound	6	20
Valued above 40 cents per pound	20	20

In using the above table it should be borne in mind that in the House bill the value dividing line as well as the ad valorem rates were based upon American value, while the Senate amendment and the conference agreement are based upon foreign value.

The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 396 and 397: The House bill imposed on steel in all forms and shapes containing more than six-tenths of 1 per cent of any metallic element used in alloying steel a duty of 15 per cent American value, in addition to the rates of duty provided for in the dutiable list. Senate amendment 397 makes this additional duty 8 per cent foreign value, and amendment 396 definitely makes this duty additional only to the rates of duty provided in paragraph 304 of the bill. The House recedes on amendment No. 396 with an amendment making the additional duty apply to all articles in the schedule; and recedes on amendment No. 397.

On amendments Nos. 398, 399, 400, and 402: The House bill imposed an additional duty upon any articles containing molybdenum or tungsten in excess of 1½ per cent. Amendments 399 and 400 limit this percentage to six-tenths of 1 per cent, and amendment 402 limits the additional duty in the case of materials provided for in paragraph 304 of the bill. The rate of additional duty imposed by the House on the excess molybdenum content was $1.25 a pound. Amendment 398 reduces this to 65 cents a pound. The House recedes on all of these amendments.

On amendments Nos. 403 to 406: The House bill in fixing the thickness of iron and steel plates as a dividing line in computing the duties provided for one hundred and forty one-thousandths of 1 inch. The Senate amendments reduce this basis to one hundred and nine one-thousandths of 1 inch; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 407: The House bill imposed a duty of 28 per cent American value on metal sheets with layers of metal or metals imposed thereon. The Senate amendment makes this duty 30 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 408: This amendment imposes a duty of 50 per cent foreign value on thermostatic metal, which under the House bill was dutiable at 28 per cent American value as bimetal sheet. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 410: The House bill imposed a duty of 1$\frac{1}{10}$ cents a pound on tin plates, terneplates, and taggers tin. The Senate amendment reduces this rate to 1 cent a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 416 and 418: The House bill imposed a duty of seven-twentieths of a cent a pound on all structural shapes of iron or steel, not assembled, manufactured, or advanced beyond hammering, rolling, or casting, and a duty of 25 per cent American value if wholly or partially fabricated. The Senate amendments make these rates, respectively, one-fifth of a cent a pound and 20 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 419: This amendment imposes a duty of 25 per cent foreign value upon sashes, frames, and building forms of iron or steel, which in the House bill were probably dutiable at 25 per cent American value under paragraph 312; and the House recedes.

	Valued at $3 and less than $4 dozen.	16 cents each and 30 per cent.
	Valued at $4 or more per dozen.	20 cents each and 30 per cent.

In using the above table it should be borne in mind that in the House bill the value-dividing line as well as the ad valorem rates were based upon American value while the Senate amendment and the conference agreement are based upon foreign value.

The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with amendments as indicated above.

On amendment No. 511: The House bill imposed the following duties on surgical and dental instruments: Valued at not more than $5 per dozen, 60 cents per dozen; valued at more than $5 per dozen, 12 cents per dozen for each $1 per dozen of such value; and in addition thereto in all cases 35 per cent American value. The Senate amendment imposes a duty of 45 per cent foreign value on surgical instruments, regardless of value, and 35 per cent foreign value on dental instruments, regardless of value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 515 and 516: See amendment No. 349.

On amendment No. 520: This amendment provides for the admission free of duty of all instruments specified in paragraph 360 imported for educational purposes; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 521: The House bill imposed upon pliers and nippers the following duties: Four inches and under, 8 cents each; over 4 and not over 6 inches, 10 cents each; over 6 inches, 12 cents each; and in addition thereto on all the foregoing 25 per cent American value. The Senate amendment makes the duty 60 per cent foreign value, regardless of length; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 524: The House bill imposed a duty of 40 per cent American value on sword blades and swords and side arms. The Senate amendment makes this duty 50 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 525: The House bill imposed a duty of 20 per cent American value on muzzle-loading muskets and rifles and parts thereof. The Senate amendment makes this duty 25 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 527: The House bill provided a duty of 35 per cent American value on breech-loading and repeating shotguns and rifles in addition to the specific duties. The Senate amendment makes this additional duty 45 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 531: The House bill imposed a duty of 40 per cent American value on barrels and stocks for breech-loading shotguns and rifles in addition to the specific duties. The Senate amendment makes this additional duty 50 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 532: The House bill imposed a duty of 45 per cent American value on parts for breech-loading shotguns and rifles and fittings for the stocks and barrels thereof. The Senate amendment makes this duty 55 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 534: The House bill provided that all breech-loading shotguns and rifles imported without locks or other fittings shall pay a duty of $10 each and 40 per cent American value. The Senate amendment did not change the specific duty but made the ad valorem duty 55 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 535: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value upon pistols and revolvers in addition to the specific duties. The Senate amendment makes this additional duty 60 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment making the additional duty 55 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 537: The House bill imposed a duty of 35 per cent American value on watchcases, parts of watches, and chronometers and parts thereof. The Senate amendment makes this duty 50 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 45 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 538: The House bill imposed upon enameled dials for watches and other instruments 8 cents per dial and 35 per cent American value. The Senate amendment does not change the specific duty but makes the ad valorem duty 50 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment making the ad valorem duty 45 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 544: This amendment subjects mechanisms for measuring distance or fares to the same duty as clocks and clock movements, avoiding a possible confusion with paragraph 372; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 546: The House bill imposed a duty of 35 per cent American value on clocks and clock movements and similar devices in addition to the specific duties upon all such articles having jewels in the escapement. The Senate amendment makes this ad valorem duty 50 per cent foreign value but does not change the additional specific duties; and the House recedes with an amendment making the additional ad valorem duty 45 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 547: The House imposed a rate of 40 per cent American value on parts and materials imported separately for use in clocks. The Senate amendment makes this duty 55 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 50 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 551: This amendment imposes a duty of 25 per cent foreign value on motor cycles, which under the House bill were dutiable under paragraph 371 at 30 per cent American value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 554: The House bill provides that if any country imposes a duty on automobiles or parts thereof when imported from the United States in excesss of the duty imposed upon such articles, there shall be imposed upon such articles when imported from such country a duty equal to that imposed by such country on such articles imported from the United States but not to exceed in any case 50 per cent American value. This amendment strikes out the House provision; and the House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment restoring the House provision and making certain clerical changes. The effect of this amendment is to make the maximum rate that can be imposed 50 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 556: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by action of the conferees on amendment 551; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 557: The House bill provides that if any country imposes a duty on bicycles, motor cycles and parts therefor when imported from the United States in excess of the duty imposed upon such articles, there shall be imposed on such articles when imported from such country a duty equal to that imposed by such country on such articles imported from the United States but not to exceed in any case 50 per cent American value. This amendment strikes out the House provision; and the House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment restoring the House provision and making certain clerical changes. The effect of this amendment is to make the maximum rate that can be imposed 50 per cent foreign value.

On amendments Nos. 558, 559, 1338, 1391, and 1392: Amendment No. 558 imposes on sewing machines and parts thereof valued at not more than $75 each a duty of 25 per cent foreign value, valued at more than $75 each 40 per cent foreign value; and amendment 1392 strikes sewing machines off the free list. The House recedes on amendment 1392; and recedes on amendment No. 558 with an amendment making the duties, respectively, 15 per cent foreign value and 30 per cent foreign value. Amendment No. 558 also imposes a duty of 25 per cent foreign value on cash registers, and amendment No. 1391 strikes these articles from the free list. The House recedes on amendment No. 1391 and from the disagreement to the duty imposed by amendment No. 558. Amendment No. 558 together with amendment No. 559 imposes a duty of 15 per cent foreign value on lawn mowers, and amendment No. 1338 strikes these articles off the free list. The Senate recedes from amendment No. 1338; and the House recedes from its disagreement to so much of amendment No. 558 as includes lawn mowers on the dutiable list, and recedes on amendment No. 559 with an amendment making the duty 30 per cent foreign value. Amendments Nos. 558 and 559 also impose a duty of 15 per cent foreign value on printing presses and machine tools and parts thereof, which under the House bill were dutiable under the paragraph to which the amendments are made at 35 per cent American value. The House recedes from its disagreement to amendment No. 559 with an amendment making the duty 30 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 560: The House bill imposed a duty of 35 per cent American value on embroidery machines, lace-making machines, and machines for making lace curtains, nets, and nettings. The Senate amendment makes this duty 30 per cent foreign value, and imposes upon knitting, braiding, and insulating machines not specially provided for a duty of 50 per cent foreign value, and upon all other textile machinery or parts thereof not specially provided for a duty of 35 per cent foreign value. The amendment also imposes a duty of 25 per cent foreign value upon cream separators, which under the House bill were probably free of duty as agricultural implements. The amendment also imposes a duty of 30 per cent foreign value upon combined adding and typewriting machines, which under the House bill were dutiable at 35 per cent American value under the paragraph to which the amendment relates. The House recedes with an amendment changing the duty on knitting, braiding, and insulating machines from 50 per cent foreign value to 40 per cent foreign value, making the duty on cream separators apply only to those valued at more than $50 each, and placing on the free list those valued at not more than $50 each.

On amendment No. 561: This amendment changes from 35 per cent American value to 30 per cent foreign value the House duty on machines and parts thereof not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 562: This amendment, together with amendment No. 563, imposes a duty of 35 per cent foreign value on scythes, sickles, grass hooks, and corn knives, which under the House bill were free of duty as agricultural implements. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment making these articles dutiable, and recedes on amendment No. 563 with an amendment making the rate 30 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 563: This amendment changes from 25 per cent American value to 35 per cent foreign value the House duty on shovels, spades, scoops, and drainage tools; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 30 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 565: The House bill imposed on metallic magnesium and metallic magnesium scrap a duty of $1 per pound, and upon magnesium alloys, powder, sheets, ribbons, tubing, wire, and all other articles, wares, or manufactures of magnesium not specially provided for $1 per pound on the metallic magnesium content and 20 per cent American value. The Senate amendment strikes out these duties and substitutes on the crude metallic magnesium, ingots, magnesium alloys and scrap a duty of 10 cents a pound; upon coils, plates, sheets, bars, rods, and other unfinished forms 20 cents a pound on the metallic magnesium content; and upon ribbons, tubing, wire, powder, and all other finished articles 40 cents a pound on the metallic magnesium content and 20 per cent foreign value. The House recedes with an amendment restoring the classification of the House bill, but making the duty on metallic magnesium and metallic magnesium scrap 40 cents a pound, and on magnesium alloys, powder, sheets, ribbons, tubing, wire, and all other manufactures of magnesium not specially provided for 40 cents a pound on the metallic magnesium content and 20 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 566: This amendment increases from 1½ cents a pound to 2 cents a pound the House duty on antimony metal; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 567 and 1347: Amendment No. 567 imposes a duty of three-fourths of 1 cent a pound on needle antimony, and amendment No. 1347 strikes this material off the free list; and the House recedes on amendment No. 1347, and recedes on amendment No. 567, with an amendment making the duty one-fourth of 1 cent a pound.

On amendments Nos. 568 and 1360: Amendment No. 568 imposes a duty of 7½ per cent foreign value on bismuth, and amendment No. 1360 strikes it off the free list; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 569 and 1387: Amendment No. 569 imposes a duty of 15 cents a pound on cadmium, and amendment No. 1387 strikes it off the free list; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 570: This amendment imposes a duty of 6 cents a pound on metallic arsenic, which under the House bill is free of duty as unwrought metal; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 572: This amendment imposes a duty of 30 per cent foreign value on nickel silver sheets, strips, rods, and wire, which were dutiable at 35 per cent American value under paragraph 393 of the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 575: This amendment imposes a duty of 35 per cent foreign value upon aluminum or tin foil less than six one-thousandths of an inch in thickness, which under paragraph 393 of the House bill was dutiable at 35 per cent American value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 576 and 578: The House bill imposed a duty of 16 cents a pound on bronze powder, powdered tin, brocades, flitters, and metallics. The Senate amendment reduces this duty to 12 cents a pound and makes it also applicable to aluminum powder and powdered foil, which under paragraph 393 of the House bill were dutiable at 35 per cent American value; and the House recedes from its disagreement to amendment No. 576 with an amendment making the duty on bronze powder 14 cents a pound, and recedes from amendment No. 578.

On amendment No. 579: This amendment reduces from 8 cents a hundred leaves to 6 cents a hundred leaves the House duty on bronze, or Dutch metal, or aluminum in leaf; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 581: This amendment increases from 50 cents a hundred leaves to 60 cents a hundred leaves the House duty on gold leaf; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 55 cents a hundred leaves.

On amendment No. 583: The House bill imposed a duty of 10 cents a pound and 30 per cent American value on tinsel wire and lame made wholly or in chief value of gold, silver, or other metal and a duty of 10 cents a pound and 35 per cent American value on bullions and metal threads made wholly or in chief value of tinsel wire or lame. The Senate amendment makes the duty on tinsel wire 5 cents a pound and 10 per cent foreign value, the duty on lame 5 cents a pound and 20 per cent foreign value, and the duty on bullions and metal threads made wholly or in chief value of tinsel wire, lame or lahn, 5 cents a pound and 35 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment accepting the Senate ad valorem rates but making the specific rate in each case 6 cents.

On amendments Nos. 584 and 587: The House bill imposed a duty of 45 per cent American value on ribbons made wholly or in chief value of tinsel wire, lame or lahn, and india rubber, bullions, or metal threads. The Senate amendments change this duty to 55 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 585 and 586: The House bill imposed a duty of 45 per cent American value on beltings, toys, and other articles made wholly or in chief value of tinsel wire or lahn and india rubber, bullions, or metal threads. The Senate amendments impose a duty of 45 per cent foreign value upon these articles and include in this duty beltings, toys, and other articles made wholly or in chief value of metal threads or of tinsel wire or lahn; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 587: See amendment No. 584.

On amendment No. 590: This amendment decreased from 35 cents a pound to 25 cents a pound the House duty on quicksilver; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 591 and 1356: Amendment No. 591 imposes a duty of 12½ cents a pound on azides and fulminates, and amendment No. 1356 strikes these articles off the free list; and the House recedes on both amendments.

On amendment No. 592: This amendment imposes a duty of 1½ cents a pound on dynamite and other high explosives put up in sticks, cartridges, or other forms, suitable for blasting, which under the House bill were free of duty under paragraph 1578; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 594: This amendment changes from 15 per cent American value to 25 per cent foreign value the House duty on new types; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 20 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 596: This amendment decreases from 5 cents a pound to 1 cent a pound the House duty on nickel oxide; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 598: This amendment reduces from 5 cents a pound to 3 cents a pound the House duty on nickel and nickel alloys; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 599: This amendment together with amendment No. 600 imposes a duty of 25 per cent foreign value on nickel castings, wire, and tubes, which under the House bill were dutiable at 35 per cent American value under paragraph 393; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 600: This amendment changes from 30 per cent American value to 25 per cent foreign value the House duty on nickel in certain finished forms; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 601: This amendment imposes an additional duty of 10 per cent foreign value on cold rolled, cold drawn, or cold worked nickel alloys; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 602: This amendment strikes out the House duty of 2 cents a pound on tin in bars, blocks, pigs, granulated, and scrap, and amendment No. 1575 puts it on the free list; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 604 and 605: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value on metal bottle caps, collapsible tubes, and sprinkler tops if not decorated and a duty of 40 per cent American value if decorated. The Senate amendments make these duties, respectively, 30 per cent foreign value and 45 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 607: The House bill provided that no duty should be imposed on lead in copper mattes until after 2,000 tons of lead had been imported in any one year. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and provides that such duty shall not be imposed unless the lead is actually recovered; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 608 and 609: The House bill provided that the determination of the lead content of lead ores should be based upon wet assay without deduction. The Senate amendments require only a proper assay; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 615: The following table shows the rates imposed by the House bill and the Senate amendment on zinc. The House bill also provided for higher rates of duty for a period of two years after the passage of the act, which was not contained in the Senate amendment; and the House recedes on amendment 615.

Article	House rate per pound.	Senate rate per pound.
	Cents.	Cents.
Slab zinc and zinc dust	1½	1½
Zinc sheets	1½	2
Zinc sheets plated with nickel, etc	1½	2½
Old zinc	1	1½

On amendment No. 617: This amendment changes from 30 per cent American value to 60 per cent foreign value the House duty on print rollers and print blocks; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 618: This amendment imposes a duty of 25 per cent foreign value on polished steel rolls valued at 25 cents a pound or over, which under paragraph 393 of the House bill were dutiable at 35 per cent American value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 619: This amendment imposes a duty of 60 per cent foreign value on twist drills and other metal cutting tools containing more than six-tenths of 1 per cent of tungsten or molybdenum, which under paragraph 372 of the House bill were dutiable at 35 per cent American value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 621: This amendment changes from 45 per cent American value to 60 per cent foreign value the House duty on nonspecified articles composed wholly or in chief value of platinum, gold, or silver, or plated with these metals, or colored with gold lacquer; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 622: This amendment changes from 35 per cent American value to 40 per cent foreign value the House duty on nonspecified articles of metal other than platinum, gold, or silver, and not plated with such metals, and not colored with gold lacquer; and the House recedes.

SCHEDULE 4.—WOOD AND MANUFACTURES OF.

On amendments Nos. 624 and 1596: The House bill imposed a duty of one-half cent a cubic foot on timber, hewn, sided, or squared otherwise than by sawing, not less than 8 inches square, and round timber used for spars or in building wharves. Senate amendment 624 strikes out this duty, and amendment No. 1596 places these articles on the free list, as well as pulp woods, which under paragraph 414 of the House bill were dutiable at 25 per cent American value. The House recedes on both these amendments.

On amendment No. 625: The House bill imposed a duty of $1 per thousand feet on logs of fir, spruce, cedar, or western hemlock, with a proviso exempting such logs from duty when imported from any country which during the preceding 12 months has not maintained any embargo or other restriction upon the exportation of such class of logs. The Senate amendment strikes out this paragraph; and the House recedes with an amendment restoring the language of the House bill and changing the number of the paragraph.

On amendments Nos. 628 and 1600: The House bill imposed upon Spanish cedar, lignum-vitæ, mahogany, and other cabinet woods a duty of 10 per cent American value when in the log and 15 per cent American value when in the form of sawed boards or planks and imposed a duty of 20 per cent American value on veneers of wood and wood unmanufactured, not specially provided for. The Senate amendment No. 1600 placed these cabinet woods in the log on the free list, and amendment No. 628 made the duty on the sawed boards and planks of these cabinet woods 15 per cent foreign value and placed a duty of 20 per cent foreign value on veneers of wood and wood unmanufactured, not specially provided for. The Senate recedes on amendment No. 1600, thus imposing a duty of 10 per cent foreign value on these cabinet woods in the log; and the House recedes on amendment No. 628 with an amendment restoring the language of the House bill and changing the paragraph number, but the effect of this action is to restore the House rates based on foreign value instead of American value.

On amendment No. 629: The House bill imposed a duty of 10 per cent American value on paving posts, railroad ties, telephone, trolley, electric light, and telegraph poles. The Senate amendment strikes out this duty, and amendment No. 1601 places these articles on the free list; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 633: The House bill imposed a duty of 10 per cent American value on pickets, palings, hoops, and staves of wood. The Senate amendment strikes out this duty, and amendment No. 1602 places these articles on the free list; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 634 and 1544: The House bill imposed a duty of 50 cents per thousand on shingles. Amendment No. 634 strikes out this duty and amendment 1544 places shingles on the free list. The House recedes on amendment 634, and recedes on amendment 1544, with an amendment making a change in the paragraph number.

On amendment No. 638: The House bill imposed a duty of 20 per cent American value on boxes, barrels, and other articles containing oranges, lemons, limes, and grapefruit. The Senate amendment makes this duty 25 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 645: The House bill imposed a duty of 20 per cent American value on reeds manufactured from rattan or reeds and cane wrought or manufactured from rattan and cane webbing. The Senate amendment makes this duty 15 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 20 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 646: The House bill provided that for the purposes of assessing duties handmade reeds or cane should be held comparable in value to machine-cut reeds or cane corresponding in size. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 647 and 648: These amendments impose a duty of 60 per cent foreign value upon furniture made with frames wholly or in part of osier or willow and covered wholly or in part with rattan, reed, grass, osier, or willow, or fiber of any kind, and upon furniture made with frames wholly or in part of wood, rattan, reed, bamboo, or malacca, and covered wholly or in part with osier or willow, these articles being dutiable under the House bill at 40 per cent American value under the basket clause of the paragraph amended; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 649: The House bill imposed a duty of 50 per cent American value on furniture made with frames wholly or in part of wood, rattan, reed, bamboo, or malacca, and covered wholly or in part with rattan, reed, grass, or fiber of any kind. The Senate amendment makes this duty 60 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 650: The House bill imposed a duty of 2 cents a pound on split bamboo. The Senate amendment reduces this to 1 cent a pound; and the House recedes, making the duty 1¼ cents a pound.

On amendment No. 652: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value on osier or willow prepared for basket makers' use. The Senate amendment makes this duty 35 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 654: The House bill imposed a duty of 40 per cent American value on articles not specially provided for wholly or in part manufactured of rattan, bamboo, osier, or willow. The Senate amendment makes this duty 45 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 657, 659, 660, and 661: The House bill imposed upon porch and window blinds, baskets, curtains, shades, or screens of bamboo, wood, straw, or compositions of wood, not specially provided for, a duty of 25 per cent American value; and if stained, dyed, painted, printed, polished, grained, or creosoted, a duty of 30 per cent American value. The Senate amendments Nos. 660 and 661 make these duties, respectively, 40 per cent foreign value and 50 per cent foreign value. The House recedes with amendments making the duties, respectively, 35 per cent foreign value and 45 per cent foreign value. The Senate amendment No. 657 adds to these dutiable articles under the paragraph chair seats, which under the House bill were dutiable at various rates according to the material of which made; and the House recedes. Senate amendment No. 659 makes the articles enumerated in the paragraph dutiable if made of papier-mâché or palm leaf. Such articles under the House bill if made of papier-mâché were dutiable at 26 per cent American value under paragraph 1313 of the bill, and if made of palm leaf were dutiable at 20 per cent American value under paragraph 1437 of the House bill. The House recedes on amendment No. 659.

On amendment No. 663: This amendment imposes a duty of 15 cents a gross on spring clothespins, which under the House bill were dutiable according to the material of which made; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 665: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value on wooden house or cabinet furniture and manufactures of wood or of which wood or bark is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for. The Senate amendment makes this duty 35 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 33⅓ per cent foreign value.

SCHEDULE 5.—SUGAR, MOLASSES, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

On amendments Nos. 667 and 668: The House bill imposed a duty of 1.16 cents per pound on sugar testing by the polariscope not above 75 sugar degrees, and 0.04 of a cent per pound for each additional sugar degree shown by the polariscopic test. The Senate amendments made these rates 1.25 and 0.05 of a cent per pound, respectively. The House recedes from its disagreement to these amendments with an amendment making these rates 1.24 and 0.046 of a cent per pound, respectively. The effect of this action is to impose upon 96° Cuban sugar a duty of 1.765 cents per pound in lieu of the House duty of 1.6 cents per pound and of the rate of 1.84 cents per pound under the Senate amendment. The rate imposed on 96° sugar imported from other countries under the House bill was 2 cents a pound, under the Senate amendment 2.3 cents per pound, and 2.206 cents per pound under the conference agreement.

On amendment No. 669: The House bill provided that any person manufacturing or refining in the United States sugar, testing over 99°, produced from beet or cane grown in the United States, should for each pound so manufactured or refined during any month in any State be permitted to import, at any time before the expiration of nine months after the last day of such month (for the sole purpose of being manufactured or refined by him in such State) 2 pounds of sugar testing not above 96° at three-fourths of the rate of duty to which such sugar would otherwise be subject. The Senate amendment strikes out these provisions; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 671: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the action of the conferees with respect to amendment No. 1488; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 676: The House bill made the duty applicable to certain named saccharides applicable to other of the higher saccharides required for scientific purposes. The Senate amendment makes the duty applicable to "all other saccharides." The effect of this amendment is to make certain saccharides which were dutiable at 25 per cent American value as chemicals not specially provided for under paragraph 5 of the House bill dutiable at 50 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 679 and 680: Amendment No. 679 changes from 30 per cent American value to 40 per cent foreign value the House duty upon sugar candy and confectionery not specially provided for, and upon sugar after being refined, when tinctured, colored, or in any way adulterated. Amendment No. 680 strikes out the provision in the House bill that the value of immediate coverings other than the outer covering shall be included in the dutiable value; and the House recedes on both of these amendments.

SCHEDULE 6.—TOBACCO AND MANUFACTURES OF.

On amendment No. 681: The House bill made dutiable at the same rates as wrapper tobacco, filler tobacco when mixed or packed with more than 50 per cent of wrapper tobacco. The Senate amendment changes this percentage to 35; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 682: The House bill imposed a duty of $1 per pound on Turkish filler tobacco. The Senate amendment strikes out this duty, making the ordinary rates for filler tobacco apply to Turkish filler tobacco; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 683 and 684: The House bill imposed upon filler tobacco not specially provided for a duty of 45 cents a pound if unstemmed and 60 cents a pound if stemmed. The Senate amendments reduce these duties, respectively, to 35 cents and 50 cents; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 685: The House bill provided that filler tobacco not specially provided for, commonly used without removing the stem, should be subject to the same duty as if stemmed. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 686 and 687: The House bill imposed a duty of 55 cents a pound on scrap tobacco. The Senate amendments reduce this duty to 35 cents a pound; and the House recedes.

SCHEDULE 7.—AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS AND PROVISIONS.

On amendment No. 688: The House bill imposed a duty of 1 cent a pound on cattle less than 2 years old and 1½ cents on cattle 2 years old or over. The Senate amendment strikes out this duty and imposes a duty of 1½ cents a pound on cattle weighing less than 1,050 pounds each and of 2 cents a pound on cattle weighing 1,050 pounds each or more; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 689: This amendment increases from 2 cents a pound to 3½ cents a pound the House duty on fresh beef and veal; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 3 cents a pound.

On amendment No. 690: The House bill imposed a duty of 1 cent a pound on sheep and goats. The Senate amendment makes this duty $2 a head; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 691: The House bill imposed a duty of 1½ cents a pound on fresh mutton. The Senate amendment increases this to 2½ cents a pound, and includes in the duty fresh goat meat; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 692: This amendment increases from 2 cents a pound to 5 cents a pound the House duty on fresh lamb; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 4 cents a pound.

On amendment No. 694: The House bill imposed a duty of 1½ cents a pound on bacon, hams, and pork shoulders, prepared or preserved. The Senate amendment increases this duty to 2 cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 695: The House bill imposed a duty of 20 per cent American value on lard compounds and lard substitutes. The Senate amendment makes this duty 5 cents a pound; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 4 cents a pound.

On amendments Nos. 696 and 698: The House bill imposed a duty of 20 per cent American value on reindeer meat and a duty of 1½ cents a pound on venison and other game, not specially provided for. The Senate amendments increased the duty on venison and other game to 4 cents a pound and make this rate applicable to reindeer meat instead of the House ad valorem rate; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 699 and 1536: The House bill imposed a duty of 15 per cent American value on sausage casings, weasands, intestines, bladders, tendons, and integuments, not specially provided for. The Senate amendment strikes out this duty, and Senate amendment No. 1536 puts these articles on the free list. The House recedes on amendment No. 699, and recedes on amendment No. 1536 with an amendment making a change in paragraph number.

On amendment No. 700: This amendment changes from 15 per cent American value to 20 per cent foreign value the House duty on fresh, prepared, or preserved meats, not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 701: This amendment increases from 1 cent a gallon to 2½ cents a gallon the House duty on fresh milk; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 702: This amendment increases from one-half of 1 cent a gallon to 1 cent a gallon the House duty on sour milk and buttermilk; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 703: The House bill imposed upon cream the following duties: Having less than 30 per cent of butter fat, 5 cents a gallon; having 30 per cent or more of butter fat, 10 cents a gallon. The Senate amendment makes the duty on all cream 22½ cents a gallon; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 20 cents a gallon.

On amendment No. 704: This amendment provides that fresh or sour milk containing more than 7 per cent of butter fat shall be dutiable as cream, and cream containing more than 45 per cent of butter fat shall be dutiable as butter; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 706: This amendment reduces from 8 cents a pound to 6 cents a pound the House duty on cream powder. The House recedes with an amendment making the duty 7 cents a pound.

On amendment No. 708: This amendment makes butter substitutes other than oleomargarine dutiable at 8 cents a pound, which under the House bill were dutiable according to component material of chief value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 709: The House bill imposed a duty of 5 cents a pound on cheese valued at less than 30 cents a pound and 25 per cent American value on cheese valued at 30 cents or more a pound and a duty of 5 cents a pound on cheese substitutes. The Senate amendment strikes out these duties and imposes on cheese and substitutes therefor a duty of 5 cents per pound but not less than 25 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 710: This amendment increases from 2 cents a pound to 3 cents a pound the House duty on live poultry; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 711: This amendment increases from 4 cents a pound to 6 cents a pound the House duty on dead poultry; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 712: This amendment changes from 20 per cent American value to 8 cents a pound the House duty on dead birds other than poultry; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 713: This amendment changes from 22 per cent American value to 35 per cent foreign value the House duty on dead birds prepared or preserved in any manner; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 714: This amendment increases from 6 cents a dozen to 8 cents a dozen the House duty on poultry eggs in the shell; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 715: This amendment increases from 4 cents a pound to 6 cents a pound the House duty on whole eggs, egg yolk, and egg albumen, frozen or otherwise prepared or preserved; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 716: This amendment increases from 15 cents a pound to 18 cents a pound the House duty on dried whole eggs, dried egg yolk, and dried egg albumen; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 717 and 1344: Amendment No. 1344 strikes from the House bill a provision excepting black or silver foxes from the paragraph admitting animals for breeding purposes free of duty; and the Senate recedes. Amendment 717 strikes out the House provision imposing a duty of $350 a head upon black or silver foxes; and the House recedes. The effect of the conference agreement is to make these foxes dutiable, under paragraph 715 of the bill as agreed to in conference, at 15 per cent foreign value, as live animals, not specially provided for.

On amendment No. 720: This amendment increases from 2½ cents a pound to 3 cents a pound the House duty on honey; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 722 and 723: The House bill imposed a duty of 1 cent a pound on fish, fresh, frozen, or packed in ice. The Senate amendments retain this duty except in the case of salmon, halibut, mackerel, or swordfish, which are made dutiable at 2 cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 726: This amendment reduces from 1¾ cents a pound to 1¼ cents a pound the House duty on dried fish; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 727 and 728: These amendments impose a duty of 2½ cents a pound on smoked herring, skinned or boned, regardless of the weight of the package in which imported, whereas under the House bill such herring was dutiable at this rate only when imported in bulk or in immediate containers weighing with their contents more than 30 pounds each, the duty under the House bill being 20 per cent American value when otherwise imported; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 729, 732, 737, and 739: These amendments reduce from 30 pounds to 15 pounds the dividing line used for computing duties on fish imported in containers; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 730, 734, and 740: The House bill in imposing specific duties on certain fish included the weight of the immediate container with the contents. The Senate amendments strike out this provision and compute the duties on the net weight; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 732: See amendment No. 729.

On amendment No. 733: This amendment reduces from 1½ cents a pound, gross weight, to 1 cent a pound, net weight, the House duty on herring and mackerel, pickled or salted, when in bulk or immediate containers weighing with their contents more than 15 pounds each; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 734: See amendment No. 730.

On amendment No. 736: This amendment changes from 26 per cent, American value, to 30 per cent, foreign value, the House duty on fish packed in oil; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 737: See amendment No. 729.

On amendment No. 738: This amendment changes from 20 per cent, American value, to 25 per cent, foreign value, the House duty on fish, pickled, salted, smoked, or otherwise prepared or preserved (except in oil) in immediate containers weighing with their contents not more than 15 pounds each; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 739: See amendment No. 729.

On amendment No. 946: The Senate amendment imposes upon cotton cloth when not less than 40 per cent of the cloth is printed, dyed, or colored with vat dyes an additional duty of 4 per cent foreign value. The House bill imposed no additional duty by reason of such vat dyeing; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 949 and 950: The House bill imposed on cotton cloth with extra threads introduced by means of the lappet or swivel an additional rate of 7½ per cent American value to the basic rate and on cotton sateens woven with eight or more harnesses an additional rate of 10 per cent American value to the basic rate as cotton cloth. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and inserts in lieu thereof additional duties to the basic duties as cotton cloth as follows: On cotton cloths woven with eight or more harnesses or with Jacquard motions or with drop boxes or with lappet or swivel attachments 12 per cent foreign value and limits the duties imposed upon cotton cloth in paragraphs 904 or 907 of the House bill to 45 per cent foreign value. In addition to these duties there is imposed by the Senate amendment on cotton cloths provided for in paragraphs 902, 903, 904, 906, and 907 of the bill as amended by the Senate on all yarns finer than No. 70 and on all yarns finer than No. 70 contained in threads or cloth, if constituting more than 10 per cent in weight of such threads or cloth, 10 cents per pound; and on all laps, sliver, and roving and on all yarns not finer than No. 70, and on all yarns not finer than No. 70 contained in threads and cloth if containing cotton of 1⅛-inch staple or longer, 10 cents per pound. The House recedes with an amendment the effect of which is to make the additional duties imposed upon cotton cloth in paragraph 903 of the bill as agreed to in conference the following: Cotton cloths woven with eight or more harnesses, or with Jacquard, lappet, or swivel attachments, 10 per cent foreign value, and on all cotton cloths other than the foregoing woven with drop boxes 5 per cent foreign value, and limits the duty or duties imposed upon cloth in paragraphs 903, or 903 and 906 of the bill as agreed to in conference, to 45 per cent foreign value, and with a further amendment making a change in paragraph numbers.

On amendment No. 952: This amendment changes the duty imposed by the House upon tracing cloths from 5 cents a square yard and 17 per cent American value to 5 cents a square yard and 20 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 953: The House bill imposed upon cotton window hollands, and oilcloths (except silk oilcloths and oilcloths for floors), and filled or coated cloths not specially provided for, a duty of 3 cents a square yard and 17 per cent American value. The Senate amendment makes this duty on such cloths 3 cents a square yard and 20 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 954: This amendment changes the House duty upon waterproof cloth composed wholly or in chief value of cotton or other vegetable fiber from 5 cents a square yard and 20 per cent American value to 5 cents a square yard and 30 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 955: The House bill imposed on cloth in chief value of cotton, containing silk or artificial silk, a duty of 8 cents a square yard and 17 per cent American value, but not less than 33⅓ per cent American value. The Senate amendment changes these rates to the rates of duty as cotton cloth and in addition thereto 5 per cent foreign value, but not more than 45 per cent foreign value; the House recedes with an amendment making a change in paragraph number.

On amendment No. 957: The House bill imposed a duty of 28 per cent American value on Jacquard woven blankets, and on Jacquard woven napped cloths various specific and ad valorem duties as cotton cloth under paragraph 903. The Senate amendment imposes a duty of 45 per cent foreign value on these articles and fabrics; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 958: The Senate amendment changes from 30 per cent American value to 45 per cent foreign value the House duty on tapestries and other Jacquard woven upholstery cloths; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 960: This amendment changes from 33⅓ per cent American value to 50 per cent foreign value the House duty on pile fabrics composed wholly or in chief value of cotton, including plush and velvet ribbons and manufactures of such fabrics; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 966: This amendment changes from 30 per cent American value to 40 per cent foreign value the House duty on quilts or bedspreads composed wholly or in chief value of cotton, woven of two or more sets of warp threads or of two or more sets of filling threads; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 967: This amendment changes from 20 per cent American value to 25 per cent foreign value the House duty on quilts or bedspreads wholly or in chief value of cotton not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 968: This amendment changes from 20 per cent American value to 25 per cent foreign value the House duty on sheets, pillowcases, blankets, towels, polishing cloths, dust cloths, and mop cloths composed wholly or in chief value of cotton, not Jacquard figured or terry-woven nor made of pile fabrics, and not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 969: This amendment changes from 23 per cent American value to 30 per cent foreign value the House duty upon table and bureau covers, centerpieces, runners, scarfs, napkins, and doilies, made of plain-woven cotton cloth, not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 971: This amendment changes from 25 per cent American value to 35 per cent foreign value the House duty on fabrics with fast edges not exceeding 12 inches in width, and articles of such fabrics, and tubings, garters, suspenders, braces, cords, tassels, and cords and tassels; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 972: This amendment changes from 15 cents a pound and 12½ per cent American value to 15 cents a pound and 20 per cent foreign value the House duty on boot, shoe, or corset lacings made of cotton or other vegetable fiber; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 973: This amendment changes from 25 cents a pound and 20 per cent American value to 25 cents a pound and 25 per cent foreign value the House duty on loom harness, healds, and collets, made wholly or in chief value of cotton or other vegetable fiber; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 974: This amendment changes from 50 cents a pound and 20 per cent American value to 50 per cent foreign value the House duty on labels for garments or other articles, of cotton or other vegetable fiber; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 975: This amendment changes from 20 per cent American value to 30 per cent foreign value the House duty on belting for machinery, composed wholly or in chief value of cotton, or other vegetable fiber, or cotton or other vegetable fiber and india rubber; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 977: This amendment changes from 35 per cent American value to 60 per cent foreign value the House duty on knit fabric, in the piece, composed wholly or in chief value of cotton or other vegetable fiber, made on a warp-knitting machine; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 55 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 978: This amendment changes from 23 per cent American value to 35 per cent foreign value the House duty on knit fabric, in the piece, made on other than a warp-knitting machine; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 979: The House bill imposed a duty on gloves, composed wholly or in chief value of cotton or other vegetable fiber, made of fabric knit on a warp-knitting machine, of 40 per cent American value. The Senate amendment provides a duty upon such gloves, if single fold of such fabric when unshrunk and not sueded and having less than 40 rows of loops per inch in width on the face of the glove, 50 per cent foreign value; when shrunk or sueded or having 40 or more rows or loops per inch in width on the face of the glove and not over 11 inches in length, $2.50 a dozen pairs, and for each additional inch in excess of 11 inches 10 cents a dozen pairs; if of two or more folds of fabric, any fold of which is made on a warp-knitting machine and not over 11 inches in length, $3 a dozen pairs; and for each additional inch in excess of 11 inches, 10 cents a dozen pairs, with a maximum duty of 75 per cent foreign value. This amendment also changes from 33⅓ per cent American value to 50 per cent foreign value the House duty upon such gloves made of fabrics knit on other than a warp-knitting machine, and changes the House duty on gloves made of woven fabrics from 23 per cent American value to 25 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment imposing a minimum duty of 40 per cent foreign value on gloves made of fabric knit on a warp-knitting machine, and with a further amendment making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 982: The House bill imposed on hose and half hose, fashioned, seamless, or mock-seamed, finished or unfinished, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, made wholly or in part on knitting machines, or knit by hand, various compound rates if valued at not more than $5 a dozen pairs; and if valued at more than $5 a dozen pairs, 35 per cent American value. The Senate amendment strikes out the House rates and imposes a duty of 50 per cent foreign value, providing that if such hose or half hose contains cotton wholly or in chief value of 1⅜-inch staple or longer the duty shall be 10 cents per pound and 50 per cent foreign value. The House recedes with an amendment striking out the special provision for hose and half hose containing cotton of 1⅜-inch staple or longer, and changing the paragraph number.

SCHEDULE 10.—FLAX, HEMP, AND JUTE, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

On amendment No. 1001: This amendment imposes a duty of three-fourths of 1 cent a pound upon crin vegetal, or palm-leaf fiber, which under the House bill was dutiable at 20 per cent American value as an unenumerated manufactured article; and the House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 1002: This amendment increases from three-fourths of 1 cent a pound to 2 cents a pound the House duty upon hemp and hemp tow; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 1 cent a pound.

On amendment No. 1004: This amendment increases from 1½ cents a pound to 4 cents a pound the House duty upon hackled hemp; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 2 cents a pound.

On amendment No. 1005: This amendment changes from 13 per cent American value to 25 per cent foreign value the House duty upon sliver and roving of vegetable fiber; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 20 per cent foreign value.

On amendments Nos. 1006 and 1007: The House bill imposed upon jute yarns or roving, single, 5-pound and finer, a duty of 9 cents a pound. The Senate amendments make this duty 7 cents a pound but not more than 40 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1008: The House bill imposed upon single yarns in the gray, made of flax, hemp, or ramie, not finer than 8 lea, a duty of 8 cents a pound. The Senate amendment makes the duty 10 cents a pound and makes it applicable to all these yarns not finer than 12 lea; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1012: The House bill imposed upon single yarns made of flax, hemp, or ramie, in addition to the duty thereon in the gray, a duty of 5 cents a pound, when boiled. The Senate amendment reduces this additional duty to 2 cents a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1013: The House bill provided that the duty on single yarns made of flax, hemp, or ramie in the case of yarns not finer than 8 lea shall not be less than 20 per cent American value and in the case of such yarns finer than 8 lea not less than 23 per cent American value. The Senate amendment provides that in the case of all such yarns it shall not be less than 30 per cent foreign value nor more than 40 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment providing that the duty shall not be less than 25 nor more than 35 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 1014: The House bill imposed upon threads, twines, and cords composed of two or more yarns of flax, hemp, or ramie, a duty of 16 cents a pound, if the size of the single yarn is not finer than 8 lea. The Senate amendment makes the duty 18¼ cents a pound and makes it applicable to all yarns not finer than 11 lea; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1018: This amendment imposes on threads, twines, and cords composed of two or more yarns of flax, hemp, or ramie in addition to the specific duties a duty of 2 cents a pound when boiled and of 6 cents a pound when bleached, dyed, or otherwise treated. The House recedes with an amendment agreeing to the duty of 2 cents a pound when boiled, but making the duty when bleached, dyed, or otherwise treated 5 cents a pound.

On amendment No. 1020: This amendment changes from 23 per cent American value to 40 per cent foreign value the minimum duty imposed by the House bill on threads, twines, and cords composed of two or more yarns of flax, hemp, or ramie; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 30 per cent.

On amendments Nos. 1021 and 1022: Amendment 1021 strikes out the House duty of 2 cents a pound on cordage, wholly or in chief value of hemp. Amendment 1022 reinserts this article with a duty of 3 cents a pound. The House recedes on amendment No. 1021, and recedes on amendment No. 1022 with an amendment making the duty 2½ cents a pound.

On amendment No. 1023: The House bill provided that fishing nets composed wholly or in chief value of flax, hemp, or ramie shall pay the same duty per pound as the highest rate upon any of the thread, twine, or cord of which the mesh is made. The Senate amendment provides that in case of such matters the duty shall be the sum of the rates of the constituent threads, twine, or cord of which the mesh is made; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 1024: The House bill provided a duty of 26 per cent American value on hose for conducting liquids or gases, composed wholly or in chief value of vegetable fiber. The Senate amendment makes this duty 17 cents a pound and 10 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1025: The House bill imposed a duty of 1 cent a pound and 13 per cent American value on jute fabrics, not specially provided for, bleached, printed, stenciled, painted, dyed, colored, or rendered noninflammable. The Senate amendment makes this duty 1 cent a pound and 10 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1026 and 1031: The House bill imposed a duty of 28 per cent American value on woven fabrics of flax, hemp, or ramie not specially provided for. Senate amendment 1026 changes this duty to 55 per cent foreign value in the case of such fabrics (except those used as paddings or interlinings in clothing, exceeding 30 and not exceeding 100 threads to the square inch, weighing not less than 4½ and not more than 12 ounces to the square yard and exceeding 12 inches and not exceeding 24 inches in width. The House bill provided for woven fabrics of flax, hemp, or jute, commonly used as paddings or interlinings in clothing, exceeding 30 and not exceeding 100 threads to the square inch, weighing not less than 4½ and not more than 12 ounces to the square yard, the rate of duty of 33⅓ per cent American value. For such woven fabrics of flax or hemp, containing more than 100 threads and not exceeding 110 threads, the House bill provided a duty of 28 per cent American value; and for such woven fabrics of jute, but exceeding 100 threads to the square inch, the House bill provided a duty of 1 cent a pound. Senate amendment 1026 imposes a duty of 55 per cent foreign value on such woven fabrics of flax or hemp, exceeding 30 and not exceeding 110 threads, and upon such woven fabrics of jute, not exceeding 30 threads to the square inch, a duty of 50 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1029: This amendment changes from 28 per cent American value to 40 per cent foreign value the House duty on woven fabrics of flax, hemp, or ramie or other vegetable fiber except cotton not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1030: This amendment imposes a duty of 35 per cent foreign value on plain-woven fabrics of flax, hemp, ramie, or other vegetable fiber, except cotton, weighing less than 4½ ounces per square yard, these materials being dutiable under paragraph 1009 of the House bill at 28 per cent American value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1031: See amendment No. 1026.

On amendment No. 1033: This amendment changes from 33⅓ per cent American value to 45 per cent foreign value the House duty on pile fabrics of vegetable fiber other than cotton, cut or uncut, whether or not the pile covers the whole surface, and manufactures in any form; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1035: This amendment changes from 28 per cent American value to 40 per cent foreign value the House duty on table damask composed wholly or in chief value of vegetable fiber other than cotton and manufactures composed wholly or in chief value of such damask; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1036: The House bill imposed a duty of 28 per cent American value on flax towels, sheets, and pillowcases, and paragraph 1019 of the House bill imposed the same duty on hemp towels, sheets, and pillowcases, and paragraph 1012 of the House bill imposed the same rate of duty on flax and hemp napkins. The Senate amendment imposes duties on these articles as follows: Towels and napkins of flax or hemp, not over 120 threads to the square inch, 55 per cent foreign value; over 120 threads to the square inch, 40 per cent foreign value; sheets and pillowcases of flax or hemp, 40 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 1042: This amendment changes from 28 per cent American value to 35 per cent foreign value the House duty on fabrics with fast edges not over 12 inches in width, and articles made therefrom, and tubings, garters, suspenders, braces, cords, tassels, and cords and tassels, if composed of vegetable fiber other than cotton, or other than cotton and india rubber; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1043: This amendment changes from 23 per cent American value to 30 per cent foreign value the House duty on flax tapes designed for use in manufacturing measuring tapes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1046: This amendment changes from 36 per cent American value to 45 per cent foreign value the House duty on hemmed or hemstitched handkerchiefs of vegetable fiber other than cotton, and makes the same duty applicable to such handkerchiefs unfinished, having drawn threads, which under the House bill were dutiable as handkerchiefs not hemmed; and the House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 1048: This amendment changes from 33⅓ per cent American value to 35 per cent foreign value the House duty on wearing apparel of vegetable fiber other than cotton, not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1049: The House bill imposed a duty on flax shirt collars and cuffs of 28 cents a dozen and 17 per cent American value. The Senate amendment changes this duty to 40 cents a dozen and 10 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1050: The House bill imposed a rate of 1 cent a pound and 17 per cent American value on bags or sacks made from plain woven fabrics. The Senate amendment makes this rate 1 cent a pound and 10 per cent foreign value in case such articles are not bleached, printed, stenciled, painted, dyed, colored, or rendered noninflammable, and 1 cent a pound and 15 per cent foreign value if so bleached, printed, etc.; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1051: This amendment imposes the following duties on bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and similar fabrics suitable for covering cotton, composed of single yarns made of jute, jute butts, or other vegetable fiber, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, not exceeding 16 threads to the square inch: Weighing not less than 15 ounces nor more than 32 ounces to the square yard, six-tenths of 1 cent per square yard; weighing more than 32 ounces, three-tenths of 1 cent a pound. Under paragraph 1517 of the House bill these fabrics were on the free list; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1053: This amendment changes from 28 per cent American value to 35 per cent foreign value the House duty on linoleum; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1055: This amendment changes from 28 per cent American value to 40 per cent foreign value the House duty on woven articles and manufactures of vegetable fiber other than cotton or of which such fibers or any of them is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1057: This amendment imposes a duty of 35 per cent foreign value on carpets, carpeting, mats, matting, and rugs, made wholly of cotton, flax, hemp, or jute, or a mixture thereof, these articles being dutiable under the House bill at various rates according to the material of which made; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1058: This amendment changes from 26 per cent American value to 45 per cent foreign value the House duty on floor coverings, not specially provided for; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 40 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 1060: This amendment decreases from 9 cents per square yard to 7 cents per square yard the House duty on matting of cocoa fiber or rattan; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 8 cents per square yard.

On amendment No. 1061: This amendment reduces from 7 cents per square foot to 5 cents per square foot the House duty on mats made of cocoa fiber or rattan; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 6 cents per square foot.

SCHEDULE 11.—WOOL, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

On amendment No. 1062: The House bill imposed a duty of 28 per cent American value but not more than 7 cents per pound and, when on the skin, 24 per cent American value but not more than 6 cents per pound on wools not improved by the admixture of merino or English blood. The Senate amendment changes the rates on such wools if in the grease to 12 cents per pound; if washed, to 18 cents per pound; if scoured, to 24 cents per pound; if on the skin, to 11 cents per pound; and adds a provision that such wools may be imported under bond under regulations fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and if within three years from the date of importation or withdrawal from bonded warehouse proof is furnished that the wools have been used in the manufacture of floor coverings the duty shall be remitted, and when such wools imported under bond are used in the manufacture of articles other than floor coverings, the duty imposed on any wools so used in violation of the bond shall be, in addition to the regular duties, 20 cents per pound, which shall not be remitted or refunded because of the exportation of the articles in which such wool was used. The Senate amendment also defines the terms "wools in the grease" and "washed wools." The House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 1063: The House bill imposed a duty on wools, not specially provided for, and hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals, if imported in the grease or washed, of 25 cents per pound of clean content; if in the scoured state, of 26 cents per pound; if on the skin, of 24 cents per pound of clean content, and provided that none of such wools shall pay a higher rate of duty than 35 per cent American value. The Senate amendment changes these rates as follows: In the grease or washed, 33 cents per pound of clean content; in the scoured state, 33 cents per pound; on the skin, 32 cents per pound of clean content. The House recedes with an amendment making the rates 31 cents, 31 cents, and 30 cents per pound, respectively.

On amendment No. 1064: The House bill imposed duties as follows: Top, slubbing, roving, and ring waste, 25 cents per pound; on garnetted waste, 20 cents per pound; on noils, carbonized, 20 cents per pound; on noils, not carbonized, 16 cents per pound; thread or yarn waste, and all other wool waste not specially provided for shoddy and wool extract, 14 cents per pound; mungo, woolen rags, and flocks, 6 cents per pound. The Senate amendment changes these rates to 33 cents, 26 cents, 26 cents, 21 cents, 18 cents, 18 cents, and 8 cents per pound, respectively, and specifies that wastes of the hair of the Angora goat, Cashmere goat, alpaca, and other like animals shall be dutiable at the rates provided for similar types of wool waste. The House recedes with an amendment making the rates 31 cents, 24 cents, 24 cents, 19 cents, 16 cents, 16 cents, and 7½ cents per pound, respectively.

On amendment No. 1065: The House bill imposed on wool which has been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, and not specially provided for, including tops and roving, valued at not more than 40 cents per pound, a duty of 16⅔ cents per pound and 10 per cent American value; if valued at more than 40 cents per pound, 27½ cents per pound and 10 per cent American value. The Senate amendment includes "hair of the kinds provided for in this schedule," and changes the rate to 36 cents per pound and 20 per cent foreign value. The House recedes with an amendment making the rate 33 cents per pound and 20 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 1066: The House bill imposed on yarn made wholly or part of wool, valued at not more than 55 cents per pound, a duty of 20 cents per pound and 15 per cent American value; valued at more than 55 cents per pound and not more than $1.50 per pound, a duty of 30 cents per pound and 18 per cent American value; valued at more than $1.50 per pound, a duty of 30 cents per pound and 20 per cent American value. The Senate amendment changes the duty on such yarn valued at not more than 30 cents per pound to 26 cents per pound and 30 per cent foreign value; valued at more than 30 cents but not more than $1 per pound to 39 cents per pound and 35 per cent foreign value; valued at more than $1 per pound to 39 cents per pound and 40 per cent foreign value. The House recedes with an amendment making the specific rates 24 cents, 36 cents, and 36 cents, respectively.

On amendment No. 1067: The House bill imposed duties as follows: On woven fabrics weighing not more than 4 ounces per square yard, wholly or in part of wool, if valued at not more than $1.25 per pound, 30 cents per pound and 22 per cent American value; if valued at more than $1.25 per pound, 36 cents per pound and 27½ per cent American value; and if the warp of any such woven fabrics is wholly of cotton or other vegetable fiber, if valued at not more than $1.25 per pound, 25 cents per pound and 22 per cent American value, and if valued at more than $1.25 per pound, 25 cents per pound and 27½ per cent American value. The Senate amendment limits the full compensatory duty, for duty on raw wool, given manufactures of wool to the amount of wool content and changes the duties on such woven fabrics as follows: Valued at not more than 80 cents per pound, 40 cents per pound and 50 per cent foreign value; valued at more than 80 cents per pound, 49 cents per pound upon the wool content thereof and 50 per cent foreign value; and if the warp of any such woven fabrics is wholly of cotton or other vegetable fiber, 39 cents per pound and 50 per cent foreign value. The House recedes with an amendment making the specific rates 37 cents, 45 cents, and 36 cents, respectively.

On amendment No. 1068: The House bill imposed on woven fabrics, weighing more than 4 ounces per square yard, wholly or in part of wool, the following duties: If valued at more than 75 cents per pound, 20 cents per pound and 18 per cent American value; valued at more than 75 cents per pound but not more than $1.25 per pound, 25 cents per pound and 21 per cent American value; valued at more than $1.25 per pound but not more than $2.50 per pound, 30 cents per pound and 24 per cent American value; valued at more than $2.50 per pound, 36 cents per pound and 27½ per cent American value. The Senate amendment changes the rates on such woven fabrics as follows: If valued at not more than 60 cents per pound, 26 cents per pound and 40 per cent foreign value; valued at more than 60 cents per pound but not more than 80 cents per pound, 40 cents per pound and 50 per cent foreign value; valued at more than 80 cents per pound but not more than $1.50 per pound, 49 cents per pound upon the wool content thereof and 50 per cent foreign value; valued at more than $1.50 per pound, 49 cents per pound on the wool content thereof and 50 per cent foreign value, and limits the full compensatory duty for duty on raw wool given manufactures of wool to the amount of wool content. The House recedes with an amendment making the specific rates 24 cents, 37 cents, 45 cents, and 45 cents, respectively.

On amendment No. 1069: The House bill imposed on woven fabrics wholly or in part of wool, cut into garment or suiting lengths, or such as have been dampened, sponged, or shrunk, an additional rate of 2 per cent American value. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1071 and 1072: The Senate amendments limit the application of the duties provided for pile fabrics to such as are wholly or in chief value of wool; such pile fabrics in chief value of other than wool but in part of wool are dutiable at various rates of duty according to the component material of chief value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1073: This amendment changes from 36 cents per pound and 27½ per cent American value to 45 cents per pound and 50 per cent foreign value the House duty on pile fabrics, wholly or in chief value of wool; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 40 cents per pound and 50 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 1074: The House bill imposed on blankets, wholly or in part of wool, not exceeding 3 yards in length, plain woven, with not more than one color in warp or filling, and not advanced beyond weaving by any process of finishing, the following duties: Valued at not more than 75 cents per pound, 20 cents per pound and 20 per cent American value; valued at more than 75 cents per pound but not more than $1.50 per pound, 25 cents per pound and 20 per cent American value; valued at more than $1.50 per pound, 30 cents per pound and 20 per cent American value. The Senate amendment extended the provision to include all blankets and similar articles, carriage and automobile robes, and steamer rugs made of blanketing, wholly or in chief value of wool, not exceeding 3 yards in length, and changes the duties as follows: If valued at not more than 50 cents per pound, 20 cents per pound and 30 per cent foreign value; valued at more than 50 cents per pound but not more than $1 per pound, 30 cents per pound and 32½ per cent foreign value; valued at more than $1 per pound but not more than $1.50 per pound, 33 cents per pound and 35 per cent foreign value; valued at more than $1.50 per pound, 40 cents per pound and 40 per cent foreign value. The House recedes with an amendment making the specific rates 18 cents per pound, 27 cents per pound, 30 cents per pound, and 37 cents per pound, respectively.

On amendment No. 1075: The House bill imposed on felts, not woven, wholly or in part of wool, the following duties: If valued at not more than 75 cents per pound, 20 cents per pound and 20 per cent American value; if valued at more than 75 cents per pound and not more than $1.50 per pound, 25 cents per pound and 20 per cent American value; if valued at more than $1.50 per pound, 30 cents per pound and 25 per cent American value. The Senate amendment changes the duties on such felts, if valued at not more than 50 cents per pound, to 20 cents per pound and 30 per cent foreign value; if valued at more than 50 cents per pound but not more than $1.50 per pound, 30 cents per pound and 35 per cent foreign value; if valued at more than $1.50 per pound, 40 cents per pound and 40 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with an amendment making the specific rates 18 cents per pound, 27 cents per pound, and 37 cents per pound, respectively.

On amendment No. 1076: The House bill imposed on fabrics with fast edges not exceeding 12 inches in width, and articles made therefrom; tubings, garters, suspenders, braces, cords, and cords and tassels, if wholly of wool, 36 cents per pound and 30 per cent American value; if in part of wool, 25 cents per pound and 30 per cent American value. The Senate amendment changes the provision "if in part of wool, whether or not wool constitutes chief value," to "in chief value of wool," and the rate to 49 cents per pound upon the wool content thereof and 50 per cent foreign value; the effect of this change is to make dutiable the fabrics and articles specified if not in chief value of wool but in part of wool, according to the component material of chief value at various rates of duty. The House recedes with an amendment making the duty 45 cents per pound upon the wool content thereof and 50 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 1077: The House bill imposed on knit fabrics, made of wool or of which wool is the component part, whether or not constituting chief value, duties as follows: Valued at not more than $1.25 per pound, 25 cents per pound and 20 per cent American value; valued at more than $1.25 per pound, 36 cents per pound and 25 per cent American value. The Senate amendment changes these rates upon such knit fabrics if valued at not more than $1 per pound to 33 cents per pound and 40 per cent foreign value; if valued at more than $1 per pound to 49 cents per pound and 50 per cent foreign value. The House bill imposed on hose and half hose, and gloves and mittens, made of wool or of which wool is the component part, whether or not constituting chief value, the following duties: If valued at not more than $3 per dozen pairs, 30 cents per pound and 25 per cent American value; if valued at more than $3 per dozen pairs, 36 cents per pound and 30 per cent American value. The Senate amendment changes the rates on such articles as follows: Valued at not more than $1.75 per dozen pairs to 39 cents per pound and 35 per cent foreign value; valued at more than $1.75 per dozen pairs, 49 cents per pound and 50 per cent foreign value.

The House bill imposed on knit underwear, finished or unfinished, made of wool or of which wool is the component part, whether or not constituting chief value, duties as follows: Valued at not more than $2.50 per pound, 30 cents per pound and 20 per cent American value; valued at more than $2.50 per pound, 36 cents per pound and 25 per cent American value. The Senate amendment changes the rates on such articles as follows: Valued at not more than $1.75 per pound, 39 cents per pound and 30 per cent foreign value; valued at more than $1.75 per pound, 49 cents per pound and 50 per cent foreign value.

The House bill imposed on outerwear, knit or crotcheted, made of wool or of which wool is the component part, whether or not constituting chief value, the following duties: Valued at not more than $2.50 per pound, 30 cents per pound and 28 per cent American value; valued at more than $2.50 per pound, 36 cents per pound and 33⅓ per cent American value. The Senate amendment changes the rates on such articles as follows: Valued at not more than $1 per pound, 39 cents per pound and 40 per cent foreign value; valued at more than $1 per pound and not more than $2 per pound, 44 cents per pound and 45 per cent foreign value; valued at more than $2 per pound, 49 cents per pound and 50 per cent foreign value. The Senate amendment also changes the House provisions "or of which wool is the component part, whether or not constituting chief value" to "or in chief value of wool," the effect of which is to make the articles described if not in chief value of wool but in part of wool subject to various duties according to the component material or chief material. The House recedes with an amendment changing the specific rates in the Senate amendment wherever they appear as follows: 33 cents to 30 cents per pound, 39 cents to 36 cents per pound, 44 cents to 40 cents per pound, and 49 cents to 45 cents per pound.

On amendment No. 1078: The House bill imposed on clothing and articles of wearing apparel, not knit or crocheted, of wool or of which wool is the component part, whether or not constituting chief value, the following duties: Valued at not more than $2.50 per pound, 20 cents per pound and 25 per cent American value; valued at more than $2.50 per pound but not more than $5 per pound, 25 cents per pound and 25 per cent American value; valued at more than $5 per pound, 36 cents per pound and 30 per cent American value. The Senate amendment changes the duty on such articles as follows: Valued at not more than $2 per pound, 26 cents per pound and 40 per cent foreign value; valued at more than $2 per pound but not more than $4 per pound, 33 cents per pound and 45 per cent foreign value; valued at more than $4 per pound, 49 cents per pound and 50 per cent foreign value. The Senate amendment also changes the phrase "made of wool or of which wool is a component part, whether or not constituting chief value" to "composed wholly or in chief value of wool"; the effect of which is to exclude such clothing and articles of wearing apparel in part but not in chief value of wool from the provisions of this paragraph and make clothing and articles of wearing apparel not in chief value of wool, dutiable at various rates according to component material of chief value. The House recedes with an amendment changing the specific rates from 26 cents to 24 cents per pound, 33 cents to 30 cents per pound, 49 cents to 45 cents per pound.

On amendment No. 1080: This amendment changes the duty of 5 cents per square foot and 30 per cent American value to 55 per cent foreign value on Oriental, Axminster, Savonnerie, Aubusson, and other carpets and rugs, not made on a power-driven loom; and carpets and rugs of oriental weave or weaves, produced on a power-driven loom; and chenille Axminster carpets and rugs; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1081: The House bill imposed duties as follows: On Axminster carpets and rugs, not specially provided for, 2 cents per square foot and 25 per cent American value; on Wilton carpets and rugs, 3 cents per square foot and 25 per cent American value; on Brussels carpets and rugs, 2 cents per square foot and 25 per cent American value; on velvet and tapestry carpets and rugs, 1¼ cents per square foot and 25 per cent American value. The Senate amendment changes these rates to 40 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1083: This amendment changes from 1 cent per square foot and 20 per cent American value to 25 per cent foreign value the House duty on ingrain carpets and ingrain rugs or art squares, of whatever material composed; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1084: This amendment changes the House provision "in part of wool, whether or not constituting chief value" to "in chief value." The effect of this amendment is to exclude from the provision of this paragraph all floor coverings not specially provided for, not in chief value of wool, and make them dutiable according to the component material of chief value at various rates of duties; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1085: This amendment changes from 2 cents per square foot and 25 per cent American value to 30 per cent foreign value the House duty on all other floor coverings not specially provided for, composed wholly or in chief value wool; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1087: This amendment changes the duty on screens, hassocks, and all other articles composed wholly or in part of carpets or rugs, and not specially provided for, from 22 per cent American value to 30 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1088: The House bill imposed on all manufactures not specially provided for, composed of wool or of which wool is a component part, whether or not constituting chief value, a duty of 25 per cent American value. The Senate amendment changes the rate of duty to 55 per cent foreign value, and changes the provision "of which wool is a component part, whether or not constituting chief value" to "in chief value of wool." The effect of this provision is to make all manufactures not specially provided for, in part but not in chief value of wool, dutiable according to the component material of chief value at various rates of duty. The House recedes with an amendment making the duty 50 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 1091: The House bill provided that all samples of manufactures of wool not admitted under bond for exportation within six months shall be subject to the same rates of duty and the same valuation as the manufactured articles which they are intended to represent. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision, the effect of which is to make such samples dutiable in accordance with the component material of chief value in the condition in which imported; and the House recedes.

SCHEDULE 12.—SILK AND SILK GOODS.

On amendment No. 1092: The House bill imposed upon silk partially manufactured from raw silk, waste silk, or cocoons, and silk noils exceeding 2 inches in length, not twisted or spun, a duty of 35 cents a pound, with a minimum duty of 25 per cent American value. The Senate amendment makes the duty 35 per cent foreign value and includes at this duty articles partially manufactured of silk and artificial silk in combination, if not twisted or spun, which under the House bill were dutiable under paragraph 1213 at 35 per cent American value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1093: This amendment makes the duty imposed by paragraph 1202 of the House bill upon spun silk or schappe silk yarn applicable to yarn of silk and artificial silk used in combination, which under paragraph 1213 of the House bill was dutiable at 35 per cent American value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1100: The House bill provided a minimum duty of 26 per cent American value upon spun silk and schappe silk yarn and roving. The Senate amendment provides for a minimum duty of 40 per cent foreign value in the case of single yarns or roving and a minimum duty of 45 per cent foreign value in the case of two or more ply yarns; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1102: The House bill imposed upon thrown silk not more advanced than singles, tram, or organzine various specific duties ranging from 50 cents to $1.50 a pound, with a minimum ad valorem duty of 12½ per cent American value. The Senate amendment substitutes for these duties a duty of 25 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1103 and 1104: The House bill imposed upon sewing silk, twist, floss, and silk threads or yarns made from raw silk a minimum duty of 20 per cent American value if in the gum and 26 per cent American value if ungummed or further advanced. The Senate amendments make these minimum duties, respectively, 35 per cent foreign value and 40 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1105: The House bill imposed upon woven fabrics in the piece, wholly or in chief value of silk, depending upon weight, silk content, kind, and condition of manufacture, various specific and ad valorem duties and a minimum ad valorem duty of 31 per cent American value. The Senate amendment strikes out all of these duties and imposes a duty of 55 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes. On this class of fabrics the specific rates under the act of 1909 were equivalent to 55 per cent on the average and in some cases were much higher.

On amendments Nos. 1106 and 1311: The House bill imposed upon plushes composed wholly or in chief value of silk various specific and ad valorem duties depending upon weight and whether or not the filling is of cotton, with a minimum duty of 33⅓ per cent American value, and upon velvet or plush ribbons various specific duties dependent upon measurement and silk color, with a minimum duty of 33⅓ per cent American value. The House bill, in paragraph 1453, also imposed a duty of 10 per cent American value on hatter's plush. The Senate amendments strike out these House duties and substitute therefor a duty of 60 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes on both amendments.

On amendment No. 1109: This amendment changes from 33⅓ per cent American value to 55 per cent foreign value the House duty on fabrics wholly or in chief value of silk, not exceeding 12 inches in width, and articles made therefrom, and tubings, garters, suspenders, cords, tassels, and cords and tassels, if composed of silk or wholly or in chief value of silk and india rubber, and not embroidered; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1110: This amendment changes from 35 per cent American value to 55 per cent foreign value the House duty on knit fabrics in the piece composed wholly or in chief value of silk; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1111: This amendment changes from 45 per cent American value to 60 per cent foreign value the House duty on knit underwear, hose, half hose, and gloves composed wholly or in chief value of silk; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1112: This amendment changes from 40 per cent American value to 60 per cent foreign value the House duty on knit or crocheted outerwear and other goods composed wholly or in chief value of silk; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1113 and 1114: The House bill imposed on handkerchiefs and woven mufflers composed wholly or in chief value of silk a duty of 33⅓ per cent American value if not hemmed and a duty of 40 per cent American value if hemmed or hemstitched. The Senate amendments change these duties, respectively, to 55 per cent foreign value and 60 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1115: This amendment strikes out the House duty of 50 cents a dozen and 20 per cent American value on silk shirt collars, the effect of this amendment being to make this article dutiable at 60 per cent foreign value under paragraph 1210 of the bill as agreed to in conference; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1116: The House imposed upon men's and boys' shirts wholly or partly of silk a duty of 40 per cent American value, but not less than 10 per cent in addition to the duty on the component materials. The Senate amendment strikes out this paragraph of the House bill, the effect being to subject these articles to a duty of 60 per cent foreign value under paragraph 1210 of the bill as agreed to in conference; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1119: This amendment changes from 40 per cent American value to 60 per cent foreign value the House duty on wearing apparel not knit or crocheted, composed wholly or in chief value of silk, and not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1120: The House bill provided that articles composed wholly or in chief value of any of the materials or goods dutiable under paragraph 1212 of the House bill should pay not less than the rate of duty on such goods under the dutiable list. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1122: This amendment changes from 35 per cent American value to 60 per cent foreign value the House duty on manufactures of silk or of which silk is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1125: The House bill imposed the following duties on yarns, threads, filaments, and lame of artificial or imitation silk or of artificial or imitation horsehair, or of the waste of such materials: If singles, 45 cents a pound; if tram, 50 cents a pound; if organzine, 60 cents a pound, and provided a minimum duty of 23 per cent American value. The House bill also provided that in the case of ribbons and other fabrics and articles composed wholly or in chief value of any of the foregoing a duty of 45 cents a pound and 37½ per cent American value. The Senate amendment provides duties upon yarns made from artificial silk waste as follows: If singles, 25 cents a pound; if further advanced by grouping or twisting two or more yarns together, 30 cents a pound; and imposed upon yarns, threads, and filaments or artificial or imitation silk or of artificial or imitation horsehair the following duties: If singles, 45 cents a pound; if further advanced by grouping or twisting two or more yarns together, 50 cents a pound. This amendment imposes upon products of cellulose, not compounded, such as are ordinarily used in braiding or weaving and in imitation of silk, straw, or similar substances, a duty of 55 cents a pound. The Senate amendment also provides a minimum duty on all the foregoing of 45 per cent foreign value. The Senate amendment also provides that in the case of ribbons and other fabrics and articles composed wholly or in chief value of any of the foregoing a duty of 45 cents a pound and 60 per cent foreign value. The Senate amendment also imposes a duty of 10 per cent foreign value on unmanufactured artificial silk waste, dutiable under paragraph 1456 of the House bill at 10 per cent American value, and imposes a duty of 20 cents a pound but not less than 25 per cent foreign value on artificial silk waste partially manufactured and not further advanced than sliver or roving, the rate of duty on which under the House bill was doubtful; and the House recedes.

SCHEDULE 13.—PAPER AND BOOKS.

On amendment No. 1127: The Senate amendment imposes on pulpboard in rolls, for use in the manufacture of wallboard, a duty of 5 per cent foreign value. The House bill made no such provision, but included pulpboard in rolls within the general provision for pulpboard at 10 per cent American value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1128: The Senate amendment provides that if any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government imposes a duty on any article specified in paragraph 1302 of the House bill when imported from the United States in excess of the duty therein provided there shall be imposed upon such article, when imported from such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government, a duty equal to that imposed by such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government on such article imported from the United States. The House bill contained no such provision; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1129: This amendment changes from 1½ cents a pound and 15 per cent American value to 20 per cent foreign value the duty on filter masse or filter stock, composed wholly or in part of wood pulp, wood flour, cotton, or other vegetable fiber; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1130: This amendment changes from 23 per cent American value to 25 per cent foreign value the House duty on indurated fiber ware, masks composed of paper pulp, or papier-mâché, manufactures of pulp, and manufactures of papier-mâché, not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1131: The Senate amendment represents a clerical amendment with the exception of "carbon paper, coated." The House bill imposed a duty of 5 cents per pound on such paper. The Senate amendment changes this duty to 6 cents per pound and 15 per cent foreign value when weighing not over 6 pounds to the ream, or 5 cents per pound and 15 per cent foreign value where the paper weighs over 6 and less than 10 pounds per ream; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1132, 1134, and 1135: The House bill provided on papers commonly known as tissue paper, stereotype paper, and copying paper, and all papers not specially provided for, weighing not over 8 pounds to the ream, a duty of 6 cents per pound and 15 per cent American value, and weighing over 8 pounds and less than 12½ pounds to the ream a duty of 5 cents per pound and 15 per cent American value. The Senate amendments change the duty on such paper weighing over 6 pounds and not over 8 pounds to the ream to 5 cents per pound and 15 per cent foreign value, and on such paper weighing not less than 10 pounds and less than 12½ pounds to the ream the following rates: Weighing not less than 10 pounds and less than 10.78 pounds per ream (tissue-paper basis of 288,000 square inches), 30 per cent foreign value (as paper n. s. p. f. in par. 1309 of the House bill); weighing not less than 10.78 pounds and less than 12½ pounds per ream, 3 cents per pound and 15 per cent foreign value (under par. 1307 of the House bill); and the House recedes on all these amendments.

On amendment No. 1136: The Senate amendment imposes a duty of 4 cents per pound and 15 per cent foreign value on india and bible paper weighing over 10 pounds and less than 18 pounds to the ream. The House bill provided for such paper at the rate of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound and 10 per cent American value as printing paper not specially provided for; and the House recedes, with an amendment making the Senate duty apply to such paper weighing 10 pounds or more and less than 18 pounds to the ream.

On amendment No. 1137: The Senate amendment changes the House duty on papers with coated surface or surfaces, not specially provided for, from 5 cents per pound to 5 cents per pound and 15 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1139: This amendment changes from 4½ cents per pound and 17 per cent American value to 4½ cents per pound and 15 per cent foreign value the House duty on papers, including wrapping paper, with the surface or surfaces wholly or partly decorated or covered with a design, fancy effect, pattern, or character, except designs, fancy effects, patterns, or characters produced on a paper machine without attachments, or produced by lithographic process, if embossed, or printed otherwise than lithographically, or wholly or partly covered with metal or its solutions, or with gelatin or flock; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 1140: This amendment changes the House duty on paper wholly or partly covered with metal or its solutions, and weighing less than 15 pounds per ream, from 5 cents per pound and 17 per cent American value to 5 cents per pound and 15 per cent foreign value; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1141 and 1507: The House bill imposed on gummed papers, including decalcomania paper not printed, a duty of 5 cents per pound. Amendment No. 1141 changes the provision "including decalcomania paper not printed" to "including simplex decalcomania paper not printed," and amendment No. 1507 places "duplex decalcomania paper not printed" on the free list. The House recedes on amendment No. 1141, and recedes on amendment No. 1507 with an amendment making a change in paragraph number.

On amendment No. 1142: This amendment changes from 5 cents per pound and 17 per cent American value to 5 cents per pound and 15 per cent foreign value the House duty on cloth-lined or reinforced paper; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 1143: This amendment changes the House duty on papers with paraffin or wax coated surface or surfaces, vegetable parchment paper, grease-proof and imitation parchment papers which have been supercalendered and rendered transparent or partially so, all other grease-proof and imitation parchment paper, not specially provided for, from 3 cents per pound and 13 per cent American value to 3 cents per pound and 15 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1145: This amendment changes the House duty on wet transfer paper or paper prepared wholly with glycerin or glycerin combined with other materials, containing the imprints taken from lithographic plates, from 30 per cent American value to 65 per cent foreign value. The amendment also includes a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1146: This amendment changes from 20 cents per pound to 25 cents per pound the House duty on labels and flaps printed in less than eight colors (bronze printing to be counted as two colors), but not printed in whole or in part in metal leaf; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1147: This amendment changes from 30 cents to 35 cents per pound the House duty on cigar bands printed in less than eight colors (bronze printing to be counted as two colors), but not printed in whole or in part in metal leaf; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1148: This amendment changes from 30 cents to 35 cents per pound the House duty on labels and flaps printed in eight or more colors (bronze printing to be counted as two colors), but not printed in whole or in part in metal leaf; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1149: This amendment changes from 40 cents to 50 cents per pound the House duty on cigar bands of the same number of colors and printing as described in amendment No. 1148; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1150: This amendment changes from 50 cents to 60 cents per pound the House duty on labels and flaps printed in whole or in part in metal leaf; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1151: This amendment changes from 55 cents to 65 cents per pound the House duty on cigar bands printed in whole or in part in metal leaf; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1152, 1154, 1155, and 1156: These amendments change the House duties on all other articles composed wholly or in chief value of paper lithographically printed in whole or in part (except boxes, views of American scenery or objects, and music, and illustrations when forming part of a periodical or newspaper, or of bound or unbound books, accompanying the same), not specifically provided for in paragraph 1306 of the House bill, as follows: Not exceeding eight one-thousandths of an inch in thickness, from 20 to 25 cents per pound; exceeding eight and not exceeding twenty one-thousandths of an inch in thickness, and less than 35 square inches cutting size in dimensions, from 8½ to 10 cents per pound; exceeding 35 square inches cutting size in dimensions, from 8 to 9½ cents per pound; exceeding twenty one-thousandths of an inch in thickness, from 6 to 7½ cents per pound; and the House recedes on all these amendments.

On amendment No. 1159: The Senate amendment limits the application of rates under paragraph 1307 of the House bill to such papers therein provided for as weigh 7 pounds or over per ream and changes the House rate of 3 cents a pound and 15 per cent American value on such papers as follows: Weighing not over 3.9 pounds per ream to 6 cents a pound and 15 per cent foreign value; over 3.9 pounds and less than 6½ pounds per ream (par. 1304 of the House bill) to 5 cents a pound and 15 per cent foreign value; weighing not less than 6½ pounds and less than 7 pounds to the ream (par. 1304 of the House bill) to 30 per cent foreign value (papers not specially provided for, under par. 1309 of the House bill); and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1162: This amendment is clerical, except for the special provision for paper envelopes, not specially provided for, if lithographed. On amendment No. 1254: The House bill imposed a minimum duty of 37½ per cent American value on leather gloves. The Senate amendment makes the minimum duty 50 per cent foreign value and places a maximum limit of 70 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1255: This amendment imposes a duty of 25 per cent foreign value on gloves of leather, made from horsehides or pigskins, which under the House bill were dutiable at various rates according to length and whether for men or women and children; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1256, 1257, and 1613: The House bill imposed a duty of 25 per cent American value upon catgut, whip gut, worm gut, oriental gut, and manufactures thereof. The Senate amendments place surgical catgut and unmanufactured worm gut upon the free list and change the duty on the remainder of the materials and articles dutiable under the paragraph of the House bill to 50 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes with amendments making the duty 40 per cent foreign value and making this duty applicable to surgical catgut.

On amendment No. 1258: This amendment changes from 30 per cent American value to 50 per cent foreign value the House duty on gas mantles and on other unenumerated mantles treated with chemicals or metallic oxides. The House recedes with an amendment making the duty 40 per cent foreign value.

On amendment No. 1259: This amendment imposes a duty of 35 per cent foreign value upon harness valued at more than $70 a set, saddles valued at more than $40 each, saddlery, and parts (except metal parts) for any of the foregoing. These articles were free of duty under paragraph 1600 of the House bill; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty apply to single harness valued at more than $40, and making a clerical change in the House bill.

On amendment No. 1260: Cabinet locks, padlocks, and latches were not specifically mentioned in the House bill and fell under the basket clause as manufactures of metal not specially provided for at 35 per cent American value. The Senate amendment provides a classification for these articles according to construction and width, as set forth in the following table:

Article.	Rate of duty.
	House bill (American value).	Senate bill.	Conference.
Cabinet locks, not of pin tumbler construction:
If not over 1½ inches in width.	35 per cent....	70 cents per dozen.	70 cents per dozen.
Over 1½ and not over 2½ inches in width.	.....do.....	$1 per dozen.	$1 per dozen.
Over 2½ inches in width.....	.....do.....	$1.50 per dozen.	$1.50 per dozen.
Padlocks, not of pin tumbler or cylinder construction:
Not over 1½ inches in width...	.....do.....	35 cents per dozen.	35 cents per dozen.
Over 1½ and not over 2½ inches in width.	.....	50 cents per dozen.	50 cents per dozen.
Over 2½ inches in width.....	.....do.....	75 cents per dozen.	75 cents per dozen.
Padlocks, of pin tumbler or cylinder construction:
Not over 1½ inches in width...	.....do.....	$1 per dozen...	$1 per dozen.
Over 1½ to 2½ inches in width..	.....do.....	$1.50 per dozen.	$1.50 per dozen.
Over 2½ inches in width.....	.....do.....	$2 per dozen...	$2 per dozen.
All other locks or latches of pin tumbler or cylinder construction.	.....do.....	$2 per dozen plus 20 per cent.	$2 per dozen plus 20 per cent.

In using the above table it should be borne in mind that in the House bill the ad valorem rates were based upon American value while the Senate amendment and the conference agreement are based upon foreign value.

The House recedes.

On amendment No. 1262: This amendment changes from 15 per cent American value to 25 per cent foreign value the House duty upon unenumerated manufactures of amber, bladders, or wax; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 20 per cent foreign value.

The Senate amendment removes the additional ad valorem duty on pencil leads not in wood or other material and imposes a duty of 10 cents a gross on leads commonly known as refills not exceeding six one-hundredths of an inch in diameter and not exceeding 2 inches in length and a proportional duty in addition on longer leads, and imposes a duty of 40 per cent foreign value on colored or crayon leads or copy or indelible leads; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1300: This amendment changes from 30 per cent American value to 20 per cent foreign value the House duty on photographic cameras and parts thereof not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1301: This amendment changes from 20 per cent American value to 15 per cent foreign value the House duty on photographic dry plates not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1302: The House bill imposed a duty of 20 per cent American value on photographic and moving picture films, sensitized but not exposed or developed. The Senate amendment makes this duty four-tenths of 1 cent a linear foot of the standard width of 1⅜ inches and proportional rates on other widths; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1303: The House bill imposed a duty of 30 per cent American value on photographic film negatives for moving picture exhibits or for reproducing pictures for such exhibits, if exposed, whether developed or not. The Senate amendment changes this rate to 2 cents a linear foot in the case of such negatives exposed but not developed and 3 cents a linear foot if exposed and developed; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1304: This amendment changes from 30 per cent American value to 1 cent a linear foot the House duty on photographic film positives for use in connection with moving-picture exhibits; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1305: This amendment changes from 25 per cent American value to 1 cent a linear foot the duty imposed by the House bill on photographic and motion-picture films or film negatives taken from the United States and exposed in a foreign country by an American producer in the course of production of a picture, 60 per cent or more of which is made in the United States; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1309: This amendment changes from 45 per cent American value to 60 per cent foreign value the House duty on pipe bowls, pipes, cigar and cigarette holders, and cases for the same, mouthpieces and cases for the same, pouches for chewing or smoking tobacco, cigarette books, cigarette book covers, cigarette paper, except cork paper, and all unenumerated smokers' articles unless made of china, porcelain, parian, bisque, earthen or stone ware; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1310 and 1484: These amendments impose a duty of 20 per cent foreign value on crude or unmanufactured meerschaum and removes this material from the free list; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1311: See amendment No. 1106.

On amendment No. 1314: This amendment makes blanks and pistons of thermostatic containers dutiable at the same rate as the containers, such blanks and pistons being dutiable under the House bill at various rates according to the material of which composed; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1317, 1318, 1319, and 1320: The following table shows the duties imposed upon thermostatic containers and parts by the House bill, the Senate amendments, and the conference agreement. In each of these amendments the House recedes with an amendment making the changes indicated in the table.

	House.	Senate.	Conference.
Capacity 1 pint or less.	10 cents each.....	20 cents each.....	15 cents each.
Capacity more than 1 pint.	20 cents each.....	40 cents each.....	30 cents each.
Additional ad valorem duty.	30 per cent (American value).	50 per cent (foreign value).	45 per cent (foreign value).
Unenumerated parts..	35 per cent (American value).	60 per cent (foreign value).	55 per cent (foreign value).

On amendments Nos. 1324, 1326, 1327, and 1328: The House bill imposed a duty of 35 per cent American value on umbrellas, parasols, and sunshades covered with material other than paper, not embroidered or appliquéd, and walking canes, and a duty of 30 per cent American value on handles and sticks for umbrellas, parasols, sunshades, and contained a proviso that none of these articles should pay a less rate of duty than the rate provided for the component material of chief value. The Senate amendment No. 1328 strikes out the proviso and amendments Nos. 1324, 1326, and 1327 make the duty on walking canes and on handles or sticks for umbrellas, parasols, and sunshades 40 per cent foreign value and the duty on umbrellas, parasols, and sunshades covered with material other than paper or lace, not embroidered or appliquéd, 40 per cent foreign value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1331: This amendment changes from 15 per cent American value to 25 per cent foreign value the duty on white bleached beeswax; and the House recedes.

TITLE II.—FREE LIST.

SCHEDULE 15.

On amendment No. 1340: This amendment provides that no article specified by name in the dutiable list shall be free of duty under the paragraph placing agricultural implements on the free list; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1341: See amendment No. 188.

On amendment No. 1344: See amendment No. 717.

On amendment No. 1347: See amendment No. 567.

On amendment No. 1349: See amendment No. 123.

On amendment No. 1353: See amendment No. 14.

On amendment No. 1356: See amendment No. 501.

On amendment No. 1357: This amendment strikes from the free list bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and similar fabrics, composed of single yarns made of jute, or other material not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, and not exceeding 16 threads to the square inch, and weighing not less than 15 ounces to the square yard; and amendment 1051 places duties on these fabrics. Amendment No. 1357 also places on the free list waste bagging and waste sugarsack cloth, which fabrics were dutiable at 10 per cent American value under paragraph 1456 of the House bill, unless they were wastes of the fabrics enumerated in paragraph 1517 of the House bill, in which case they were also on the free list under the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1358: See amendment No. 784.

On amendment No. 1359: This amendment places on the free list binding twine manufactured from henequen, which under paragraph 1019 of the House bill was dutiable at 28 per cent American value as a manufacture of vegetable fiber; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1360: See amendment No. 568.

On amendment No. 1366: This amendment specifically places animal carbon suitable only for fretilizing purposes upon the free list, so as to prevent its being classed as bone black and made dutiable at 20 per cent ad valorem under paragraph 66 of the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1370: This amendment permits the free entry of books, maps, music, engravings, photographs, etchings, lithographic prints, bound or unbound, and charts more than 20 years old, which were dutiable at 20 per cent American value under paragraph 1310 of the House bill. This amendment also provides that if such articles have been rebound within 20 years the binding shall be dutiable as provided in paragraph 1310; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1372: Under the House bill books and pamphlets printed wholly or chiefly in languages other than English were dutiable under paragraph 1310 at 20 per cent American value. The Senate amendment places these books and pamphlets on the free list; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1374: The House bill permitting schools and colleges and public libraries and religious, educational, and fine arts, etc., institutions to import free of duty not to exceed two copies, for their own use and not for sale, of any book, map, music, engraving, photograph, etching, lithographic print, or chart. The Senate amendment removes the limitation of two copies; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1376 and 1377: The House bill provided that books and libraries or persons from foreign countries, if actually used abroad by them not less than one year, and not intended for any other person or persons, nor for sale, if not exceeding $250 in value, should be admitted free of duty. Amendment No. 1377 strikes out the value limit, and amendment No. 1376 reinstates the provisions of existing law that "usual and reasonable furniture and similar household effects" of such persons, which under the House bill were dutiable according to material of chief value, may be entered free of duty; and the House recedes on both amendments.

On amendment No. 1381: This amendment specifically enumerates on the free list Brazilian or pichurim beans which were not specifically enumerated under paragraph 1562 of the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1382: See amendment No. 259.

On amendment No. 1384: See amendment No. 886.

On amendment No. 1387: See amendment No. 569.

On amendment No. 1389: The House bill provided that if any country imposes a duty upon calcium acetate when imported from the United States an equal duty shall be imposed upon calcium acetate coming into the United States from such country. This amendment struck out the House provision; and the House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment restoring the House provision with clerical changes.

On amendment No. 1391: See amendment No. 558.

On amendment No. 1392: See amendment No. 558.

On amendment No. 1393: See amendment No. 266.

On amendment No. 1395: See amendment No. 389.

On amendment No. 1397: See amendment No. 845.

On amendment No. 1400: The House bill provided that if any country imposes a duty upon coal, coke, and other articles used for fuel specified in paragraph 1545 of the House bill when imported from the United States, an equal duty shall be imposed upon such articles coming into the United States from such country. This amendment strikes out the House provision; and the House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment restoring the House provision with clerical changes.

On amendment No. 1419: See amendment No. 897.

On amendments Nos. 1421, 1522, and 1553: The House bill placed potassium and sodium cyanide upon the free list. Amendment No. 1522 strikes potassium cyanide out of paragraph 1636 of the House bill and amendment No. 1553 strikes sodium cyanide out of paragraph 1654 of the House bill. Amendment No. 1421 places potassium and sodium cyanide salts, not specially provided for, on the free list in one paragraph; and the House recedes on all of these amendments.

On amendment No. 1425: The House bill left on the free list crude dyeing and tanning materials of vegetable origin treated solely for proper packing or for prevention of decay or deterioration pending manufacture. The Senate amendment permits these articles to come in free if advanced in value or condition by shredding, grinding, chipping, crushing, or any similar process; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1428: See amendment No. 1216.

On amendment No. 1433: This amendment places upon the free list fish imported to be used for purposes other than human consumption, which under the provisions of paragraph 718 of the House bill would have been dutiable as fish not specially provided for at 1 cent a pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1439: This amendment places on the free list gloves made wholly or in chief value of leather made from hides of cattle of the bovine species, which under paragraph 1433 of the House bill were dutiable at various rates dependent on length and on whether intended for wear by men or women and children; and the House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 1442: This amendment places on the free list henequen, which was dutiable under paragraph 1458 of the House bill at 20 per cent American value as a manufactured article not specially provided for; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1444: This amendment provides that no article specified by name on the dutiable list shall be free of duty under the paragraph of the bill placing fertilizer on the free list; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1446: See amendment No. 41.

On amendment No. 1448: The House bill left gunpowder and all other explosive substances used for mining, blasting, or artillery purposes, not specially provided for, on the free list. Senate amendment No. 592 removes dynamite and other high explosives put up in sticks, cartridges, or other forms, suitable for blasting, from the free list and makes them dutiable at 1½ cents a pound; and Senate amendment No. 1448 includes sporting powder with gunpowder and all other explosive substances not specially provided for on the free list, but provides that if any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government imposes a duty upon such articles when imported from the United States an equal duty shall be imposed upon such articles coming into the United States from such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1468: See amendment No. 58.

On amendment No. 1482: The House placed mechanically ground wood pulp and chemical wood pulp on the free list but added a proviso that whenever the President ascertains that any country restricts the exportation or imposes any export charge upon printing paper, wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp, he should proclaim this fact and thereafter there should be levied upon mechanically ground wood pulp and chemical wood pulp when imported from such country, a duty of 10 per cent American value and in addition thereto an amount equal to the highest export charge imposed by such country upon an equal amount of wood pulp or an amount of wood necessary to manufacture such wood pulp, or an amount of printing paper ordinarily manufactured from such wood pulp. The Senate amendment strikes out this proviso; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1484: See amendment No. 1310.

On amendment No. 1488: The House bill made no distinction between molasses for human consumption and molasses not to be used for human consumption but included all molasses and sirups testing not above 48 per cent total sugars in paragraph 503 of the House bill dutiable at 0.25 of 1 cent a gallon and 0.275 of 1 cent additional for each per cent of total sugars and fractions above 48 per cent total sugars. The Senate amendment removed from the House classification molasses testing not above 56 per cent total sugars and not to be used for human consumption and placed them on the free list. The house recedes from its disagreement to amendment No. 1488 with an amendment adopting the Senate language and changing the percentage of total sugars to 52 per cent and making such molasses dutiable under paragraph 502 of the bill as amended at one-sixth of 1 cent per gallon.

On amendment No. 1492: This amendment puts on the free list nets or sections of nets for use in otter trawl fishing, if composed wholly or in chief value of manila or vegetable fiber. These nets, if made of flax, hemp, or ramie, would have been dutiable under paragraph 1006 of the House bill at various rates according to the thread, twine, or cord of which the nets are made, and if made of other vegetable fiber would have been dutiable under paragraph 1019 of the House bill at 28 per cent American value as a manufacture of vegetable fiber. The House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change and a change in paragraph number.

On amendment No. 1494: The House bill placed on the free list coconuts and broken coconut meat or copra, not shredded, desiccated, or prepared in any manner, palm nuts and palm-nut kernels. The Senate amendment struck out the House provision and placed the following oil-bearing seeds and nuts on the free list: Copra, coconuts, hempseed, palm nuts, palm-nut kernels, tung nuts, rapeseed, perilla, and sesame seed, and seeds and nuts not specially provided for when the oils derived therefrom are free of duty; and the House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change in the paragraph number.

On amendment No. 1499: See amendment No. 165.

On amendment No. 1507: See amendment No. 1141.

On amendment No. 1509: This amendment places on the free list pads for horses, which under paragraph 1120 of the House bill were dutiable as a manufacture of wool, not specially provided for, at 25 per cent American value; and the House recedes with an amendment making a change in paragraph number.

On amendment No. 1512: The House bill provided for the free entry of personal effects not merchandise, if not exceeding $300 in value, of citizens of the United States dying in foreign countries. The effect of the House bill provision was to make such articles exceeding $300 in value dutiable at various rates according to their character and material of which composed. The Senate amendment strikes out the limitation of value, thus providing for the free entry of such articles regardless of value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1514: This amendment places on the free list fancy or racing pigeons which under paragraph 711 of the House bill if valued at $5 or less were dutiable at 50 cents each and if valued at more than $5 each were dutiable at 20 per cent American value; and the House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 1516: See amendment No. 272.

On amendment No. 1518: This amendment places on the free list sheets of platinum, unmanufactured, which under paragraph 393 of the House bill were dutiable at 45 per cent American value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1520: The House bill placed on the free list potassium chloride, potassium sulphate, kainite, wood ashes, and all crude potash salts not specially provided for but provided that for a period of five years after the passage of the act the following duties should be collected on the actual potash content of all the foregoing: 2½ cents a pound for the first two years; 2 cents a pound for the third year; 1½ cents a pound for the fourth year; and 1 cent a pound for the fifth year; and thereafter free. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision; and the House recedes with an amendment making the duty 1½ cents a pound for three years after the passage of the act and thereafter putting these materials on the free list.

On amendment No. 1522: See amendments Nos. 232 and 1421.

On amendment No. 1524: The House bill provided for the free entry of professional books, implements, instruments, and tools of trade, occupation, or employment in the actual possession of immigrants if owned and used by them abroad, if not exceeding $250 in value, the effect of which was to make those exceeding $250 in value dutiable at various rates according to their character or material of which composed. The Senate amendment strikes out the limitation in value, thus providing for the free entry of such articles regardless of value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1527: This amendment places on the free list radio vacuum tubes which under the House bill were dutiable according to the component material of chief value; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 1533: The House bill provided that rice, cleaned, for use in the manufacture of canned foods should be admitted free of duty. The Senate amendment limits the free entry of such rice to rice known as Patna rice; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1535: See amendment No. 896.

On amendment No. 1536: See amendment No. 699.

On amendment No. 1539: This amendment places smelts on the free list when fresh, frozen, or packed in ice, which under paragraph 718 of the House bill were dutiable at 1 cent per pound; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1541: The Senate amendment places the following seeds on the free list: Chickpeas or garbanzos, cowpeas, and sugar beet. Under paragraph 765 of the House bill chickpea seeds and garbanzos seeds were dutiable at 1 cent a pound and cowpeas at one-half cent a pound. Amendment No. 871 strikes out these duties. Under paragraph 762 of the House bill sugar-beet seeds were dutiable at 1 cent a pound. Amendment No. 860 strikes out this duty. The House recedes with an amendment making a change in paragraph number.

On amendment No. 1544: See amendment No. 634.

On amendment No. 1551: The Senate amendment places skins of all kinds, not specially provided for, tanned but not finished, on the free list, which under the provisions of paragraph 1600 of the House bill were on the free list as leather not specially provided for; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 1553: See amendment No. 1421.

On amendment No. 1559: The House bill put standard newsprint paper on the free list but added a proviso that whenever the President finds that any country restricts the exportation of, or imposes any export duty on printing paper, wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp, he shall so declare by proclamation and thereafter there shall be levied upon standard newsprint paper when imported from such country a duty of 10 per cent American value, and in addition an amount equal to the highest export charge imposed by such country upon either an equal amount of printing paper or an amount of wood pulp or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp necessary to manufacture such printing paper. The Senate amendment strikes out this proviso; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1561: This amendment places on the free list altars, pulpits, communion tables, baptismal fonts, shrines, or parts of any of the foregoing, and statuary imported in good faith for presentation (without charge) to, and for the use of, any corporation or association organized and operated exclusively for religious purposes. The House bill had no such provision and such articles were dutiable according to the component material of chief value. The House recedes with an amendment making a change in paragraph number.

On amendment No. 1563: This amendment places trap rock on the free list which under the House bill was dutiable as a nonenumerated unmanufactured article at 10 per cent American value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1569: See amendment No. 896.

On amendment No. 1572: The House bill provided that all intermediate containers of tea in packages of less than 5 pounds each, except mats, should be dutiable at the rate chargeable on such containers if imported empty. The Senate amendment eliminates this exception; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1575: This amendment, together with amendment No. 602, places on the free list tin in bars, blocks, or pigs, grain or granulated and scrap tin, which under paragraph 386 of the House bill were dutiable at 2 cents a pound. The amendment, together with amendment 369, also places on the free list scrap tin plate, which under paragraph 301 of the House bill was dutiable at $1.25 a ton. The House recedes with an amendment making a change in paragraph number.

On amendment No. 1577: See amendment No. 900.

On amendment No. 1582: This amendment puts wafers, nonedible, on the free list. Under the House bill they were dutiable at various rates according to the component material of chief value; and the House recedes, with an amendment making a change in paragraph number.

On amendment No. 1587: The House bill provided for the free admission of master records of soft wax or metal matrices obtained therefrom, for use in the manufacture of sound records for export purposes. The Senate amendment provides that these articles shall be admitted free under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 1589: The House bill provided for free admission of articles of personal adornment of persons arriving in the United States necessary and appropriate for their wear and use. The Senate amendment provides that all jewelry and similar articles of personal adornment valued at $300 or more, brought in by a nonresident, shall, if sold within three years after arrival, be liable to duty at the rate in force at the time of the sale, to be paid by the importer; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1590: The House bill provided for the free admission of articles acquired by United States residents returning from abroad for personal and household use or as souvenirs or curios, but not bought on commission or intended for sale up to $250 in value. The Senate amendment limits this to articles not exceeding $100 in value; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1596: See amendment No. 624.

On amendment No. 1600: See amendment No. 628.

On amendment No. 1601: This amendment places on the free list paving posts, railroad ties, and telephone, trolley, electric-light, and telegraph poles of cedar or other woods, which under paragraph 405 of the House bill were dutiable at 10 per cent American value. The House recedes with an amendment making a change in paragraph number.

On amendment No. 1602: This amendment, together with amendment No. 633, places on the free list pickets, palings, hoops, and staves of wood of all kinds, which under paragraph 407 of the House bill were dutiable at 10 per cent American value; and the House recedes with an amendment making a change in paragraph number.

On amendment No. 1603: This amendment places on the free list logs of fir, spruce, cedar, or western hemlock, which under paragraph 402 of the House bill were dutiable at $1 a thousand feet; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 1611: The House bill provided that stained or painted window glass or stained or painted glass windows imported by houses of worship should be imported free of duty. The Senate amendment limits the free importation of such articles to such articles which are works of art and valued at $15 or more per square foot and ordered after the passage of this act; and the House recedes. The effect of this amendment is to make such articles valued at less than $15 per square foot and those valued at $15 or more per square foot but not works of art dutiable at 50 per cent foreign value under paragraph 230 as agreed to in conference.

On amendment No. 1613: See amendment No. 1256.

TITLE III.—SPECIAL PROVISIONS.

On amendment No. 1615: Section 301 of the House bill authorized the President to negotiate reciprocity treaties to become effective upon ratification by the Senate and approval by Congress. This amendment strikes out this provision; and the House recedes. See amendment No. 1667.

On amendment No. 1616: The House bill authorized the President to impose additional duties upon articles imported from a country which imposed upon products of the United States burdens which he deemed "higher and reciprocally unequal and unreasonable." The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and substitutes section 317 therefor; and the House recedes. See amendment No. 1667.

On amendment No. 1617: The House bill authorized the President, within a period of three years after the passage of this act, to negotiate trade agreements with foreign countries and to reduce, not more than 20 per cent and for not more than five years, the duties imposed by this act. Neither ratification nor approval by Congress was required. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision; and the House recedes. See amendment No. 1667.

On amendment No. 1621: The House bill, in the section relating to countervailing duties, did not provide for bounties and grants made by persons, partnerships, associations, cartels, or corporations. The Senate amendment so provides; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1623: Section 307 of the House bill provided that all articles of foreign manufacture or production capable of being marked, stamped, branded, or labeled, without injury, should be marked, stamped, branded, or labeled, in legible English words to indicate the country of origin. It also required all packages containing imported merchandise to be marked in the same manner. In case of failure, the article or the package was to be held in customs custody until properly marked. The Senate amendment strikes out these provisions and provides for a similar marking, but if the article is not properly marked, no delivery of the merchandise held in customs custody is to be made to the importer until the entire shipment is properly marked. The Senate amendment further provides that, unless the article is exported, there shall be levied, in addition to the regular duty, a duty of 10 per cent, or, if the article is free of duty, a duty of 10 per cent is imposed; and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the words "to the importer," in order to prevent any delivery until the article is properly marked.

On amendments Nos. 1631 and 1637: These amendments are necessary because of the action of the conferees on amendment No. 1623; and the House recedes with amendments making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 1638: The House bill placed the administration of the quarantine against cattle and hides under the Secretary of the Treasury. The Senate amendment transfers it to the Secretary of Agriculture; and the House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 1641: Section 311 of the House bill specified the articles which could be imported under bond for exportation within six months. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and incorporates them in section 308, and in addition permits the entry under bond of containers for compressed gases which comply with the laws and regulations for the transportation of such containers in the United States, and authorizes the cancellation of the six months' bond if the articles imported for experimental purposes are destroyed during the experiment; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1649: The Senate amendment permits the destruction of waste material resulting from manufacture in bonded warehouse; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1650, 1651, 1652, and 1653: The House bill provided for the manufacture of cigars in bonded manufacturing warehouses from tobacco imported from any one country. The Senate amendment extended this provision to the manufacture of cigarettes and tobacco and eliminated the requirement that the tobacco be imported from one country; and the Senate recedes on all these amendments.

On amendment No. 1654: Section 315 of the House bill is stricken out and rewritten by the Senate amendment in order to harmonize with paragraph 388 of the House bill. The Senate amendment also provides for the cancellation of the charge against the bond on the exportation of the refined metal produced from the dutiable metal imported, in order to remove the discrimination against the bonded smelter and in favor of the nonbonded smelter, which resulted from the tariff act of 1913; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1655: The Senate amendment strikes out and rewrites section 316 of the House bill, relating to drawback, and restores existing law with certain changes. An amount of domestic wheat equal to not less than 30 per cent of the amount of imported wheat must have been used in order to gain the privilege of drawback upon the exportation of flour or by-products. The rule for the distribution of drawback, where more than one product results, from the manipulation of the imported merchandise, is changed, and the drawback is distributed according to the relative value of the product exported; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1657: The Senate amendment permits the drawback upon flavoring extracts manufactured in the United States when an internal-revenue tax has been paid upon the domestic alcohol used; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1658: The Senate amendment strikes out the provision in the House bill that only domestic tax-paid alcohol may be used in the manufacture of medicinal or toilet preparations in order to gain the benefit of the drawback; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1665: The Senate amendment inserts a new section containing provisions for an elastic tariff. It authorizes the President to increase or decrease the duties specified in this act and to shift to the American valuation system under certain conditions.

Subdivision (a) authorizes the President to increase or decrease duties and to change classifications whenever necessary to equalize the ascertained differences in costs of production. No duty, however, may be increased or decreased more than 50 per cent of the duties specified in Title I, and no authority is given to transfer from the dutiable list to the free list, or vice versa; nor may any duty be changed from specific to ad valorem, or vice versa. The action of the conferees specifies that the differences in costs of production are to be ascertained in the United States and in the principal competing foreign country and removes the limit imposed by this amendment providing that section 315 shall remain in effect only until July 1, 1924.

Subdivision (b) authorizes the President to substitute American valuation for foreign valuation whenever necessary to equalize ascertained differences in costs of production of products within paragraphs 27 and 28 of Title I, under conditions and limitations similar to those prescribed in subdivision (a). The action of the conferees extends the provisions of this subdivision to all articles provided for in Title I but prohibits an increase in rates upon an article so transferred.

Subdivision (c) prescribes the factors which the President is to take into consideration in determining differences in costs of production, and also provides that investigations to assist the President in ascertaining such differences are to be made by the United States Tariff Commission. The action of the conferees eliminates the provision of the Senate amendment that the Tariff Commission hearings shall be public and that the President shall make the findings, hearings, and testimony in all proceedings public as soon as practicable after the issuance of a proclamation.

The President is not authorized to increase rates beyond the specified maximum ad valorem rate fixed in any paragraph of this act. The House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes and the changes indicated.

On amendment No. 1666: The Senate amendment inserts a new section making unlawful unfair methods of competition and unfair acts in the importation of merchandise into the United States which threaten the stability or existence of American industry.

Investigations of cases arising under this section are to be made by the United States Tariff Commission and its findings are subject to review, on questions of law, by the United States Court of Customs Appeals. The final findings of the commission are then transmitted to the President and he is authorized, in case such unfair methods or acts are established to his satisfaction, to impose additional duties upon merchandise imported in violation of the act, and in extreme cases he is authorized to prohibit the offending person from importing any merchandise into the United States; and the House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 1667: The Senate amendment inserts a new section giving the President discretionary powers to impose additional duties or prohibition upon imports from any country discriminating against the overseas commerce of the United States.

This section follows the precedent established by a maximum and minimum provision of the Payne-Aldrich Act, which had for its purpose the obtaining of equality of treatment for American overseas commerce. The Senate amendment, however, is more flexible than the provision of the Payne-Aldrich Act and is designed to reach every form of discrimination, direct or indirect, whereby American commerce is placed at a disadvantage as compared with the commerce of any foreign country.

Sections 301 and 303 of the House bill provide for special negotiations whereby exclusive concessions may be given in the American tariff in return for special concessions from foreign countries. Section 302 of the House bill places in the hands of the President power to penalize the commerce of any foreign country which imposes on its imports, including those coming from the United States, duties which he deems to be "higher and reciprocally unequal and unreasonable." Under the Senate amendment, however, the United States offers, under its tariff, equality of treatment to all nations, and at the same time insists that foreign nations grant to our external commerce equality of treatment; and the House recedes with an amendment rewriting subdivisions (e) and (f) and making further clerical changes.

On amendment No. 1668: The Senate amendment inserts a new section enlarging the powers of and imposing well-defined duties upon the United States Tariff Commission; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1682: The House bill repealed section 3022 of the Revised Statutes and Title I of the emergency tariff act. The Senate amendment strikes out this repeal at this point in the bill and provides for their repeal in the repealing sections of Title IV; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1683: The House bill provided that nothing in this act should be construed as permitting oaths to be demanded or fees to be charged. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision as unnecessary, in view of the several amendments relating specifically to oaths and fees; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1684: The Senate amendment prevents an implied repeal of the provisions of subsection 30 of section 28 of the act of August 5, 1909, relating to the powers and duties of the Assistant Attorney General in charge of customs; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1685: The Senate amendment inserts a new section imposing a duty of 90 per cent foreign value upon automobiles, automobile bodies, automobile chassis, and parts thereof exported prior to February 11, 1919, from the United States, for the use of the American Expeditionary Forces or for the Governments associated with the United States in the war with Germany, and which have been sold; and the House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 1686: The Senate amendment inserted a section authorizing the establishment of "foreign trade zones"; and the Senate recedes.

TITLE IV.—ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

On amendment No. 1690: The Senate amendment enlarges the definition in the House bill of the word "vessel" so that it will include a hydroplane; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1692: The House bill defined the word "port" to mean a "port of entry." The Senate amendment strikes out this definition in order to retain the existing distinction between a port and a port of entry; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1695: The Senate amendment enlarges the definition in the House bill of "merchandise" to include merchandise the importation of which is prohibited, in order to meet the situation created by recent court decisions holding that the phrase "capable of being imported" means "legally capable of being imported"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1698: The House bill included in the definition of the word "person" the provision that reference to any officer includes the person authorized to perform the duties of the office. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision, for the various sections refer specifically to the officer; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1701, 1702, and 1703: The Senate amendments change the definition in the House bill of the word "master" to conform with existing law in order to remove possible confusion in the navigation laws; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1714: The definition in the House bill of the word "appraiser" included the person directed to act as the appraiser. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and provides specifically in section 500 for the person who is to act; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1715: The House bill defined the phrase "date of exportation." The Senate amendment strikes out this definition in order that the phrase will retain the well-established meaning now given it by the courts; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1716: The Senate amendment strikes out the definition in the House bill of "proof spirit" in order to permit the definition in section 3249 of the Revised Statutes to apply; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1717: The Senate amendment strikes out the definition in the House bill of "proof gallon" in order to permit the definition in section 3250 of the Revised Statutes to apply; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1718: The Senate amendment strikes out the definition in the House bill of "wine gallon" in order that the existing definition and practice may apply; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1719: The Senate amendment strikes out the definition in the House bill of the word "ton" because it conflicted with the use of the word in connection with the tonnage of vessels and in order that the existing definition and practice may prevail; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1720: The Senate amendment strikes out the definition in the House bill of "United States" and inserts a definition to conform with Titles I and II; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1721: The House bill provided for the "American valuation plan" as the basis for assessing ad valorem duties and defined "value" to mean, first, the selling price of the comparable and competitive domestic article; second, in the absence of such value, the selling price of the imported article or a constructive selling price in the United States based on any facts accessible to the appraiser establishing such price. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision in the House bill and substitutes, with minor changes, the foreign valuation system of existing law. The Senate amendment provides that the value of imported merchandise shall be (1) the foreign value or the export value, whichever is higher; (2) in the absence of the foreign value and the export value, then the United States value, which is defined to be the American selling price of the imported article less the charges accruing subsequent to the shipment of the merchandise to the United States, in order to reach a constructive foreign value; and (3) in the absence of the foreign value, the export value, and the United States value, then the cost of production.

The Senate amendment also defines the American selling price of the domestic article to be the wholesale price in the principal markets of the United States of any article manufactured or produced in the United States, and in the event that the President proclaims, under the provisions of subdivision (b) of section 315, that the value shall be determined according to the American selling price, then the value of the imported merchandise shall be determined by ascertaining the American selling price of a similar competitive domestic article; and the House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 1722: Sections 403 and 404 of the House bill carried into law the prior administrative definitions of "purchased" merchandise and of merchandise imported "otherwise than by purchase," which were adopted in order to secure necessary statements upon invoices. The Senate amendment strikes out these two sections and specifically requires in section 481 the statement on invoices of such facts as are necessary for an appraisement and classification of merchandise; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1726: The House bill required a statement in the manifest of the names of the owners of the vessel according to the vessel's register. The Senate amendment strikes out this requirement, as the names can be obtained whenever necessary from the register; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1728: The House bill contained no provision for a list of the baggage on board the vessel in the absence of the owner. The Senate amendment requires such list; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1732: The House bill permitted vessels of regular lines to proceed to their port of destination without reporting at the first port of arrival. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and requires all vessels to report at the first port of arrival as a safeguard against smuggling and the illicit traffic in liquor; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1734 and 1735: The House bill placed the report and entry of vessels under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of Commerce now has such jurisdiction, and the Senate amendments restore that jurisdiction to the Secretary of Commerce, and possible confusion in the administration of the navigation laws is eliminated. The amendments necessary to prevent a conflict between the jurisdiction of the two departments have been made throughout Title IV; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1737: The House bill provided only for delivery of the original manifest at the time of making entry of the vessel. The Senate amendment requires the delivery of an additional copy; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1738: See amendment No. 1734.

On amendment No. 1743: The House bill imposed a stated fine of $500 upon every master who failed to make the report or entry of his vessel. The Senate amendment imposes an elastic fine of not more than $1,000; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1751: The Senate amendment corrects a typographical error in the House bill by striking out the penalty of $500 and restoring the penalty of $5,000 imposed under existing law; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1757: The House bill made no distinction between merchandise and baggage. The existing law and practice makes such distinction, and the Senate amendment retains this distinction. The necessary amendments are made throughout Title IV; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1772: The Senate amendment provides that a vessel arriving in distress is not required to make entry, a provision of existing law omitted in the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1783: See amendment No. 1734.

On amendments Nos. 1793 and 1794: See amendment No. 1757.

On amendment No. 1800: See amendment No. 1757.

On amendment No. 1803: See amendment No. 1757.

On amendment No. 1807: The House bill was a codification of sections 2891, 2892, 2894, and 2896 of the Revised Statutes. The Senate amendment strikes out the provision in the House bill and rewrites the section in order to make it conform, with minor changes, with existing law and practice; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 1808, 1809, and 1810: See amendment No. 1757.

On amendments Nos. 1812 and 1813: See amendment No. 1757.

On amendment No. 1822: See amendment No. 1757.

On amendment Nos. 1826, 1827, and 1828: See amendment No. 1757.

On amendment No. 1839: The House bill imposed a penalty of $100 upon a customs officer who quits his station or neglects or fails to perform his duties. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1845: The House bill imposed a penalty of $100 for interfering with a customs officer in the performance of his duty. The Senate amendment increases this penalty to $500; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1854: The House bill made possible a distinction between the owner and the consignee of imported merchandise. The Senate amendment makes the consignee the only person responsible in the importation of merchandise, and the necessary changes have been made throughout the title; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1856: See amendment No. 1854.

On amendment No. 1861: The House bill subjected vehicles to the provisions of law relating to vessels. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and specifically provides for vehicles wherever necessary, because vessels are within the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce and vehicles are within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1873: See amendment No. 1757.

On amendment No. 1886: The House bill failed to provide for the forfeiture of an article the importation of which is prohibited. The Senate amendment makes this provision; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1890: The House bill authorized the through transportation of sealed cars. The Senate amendment rewrites the provision, leaving it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to stop the cars at the border and to examine the merchandise if he deems it necessary to safeguard against smuggling; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1892: The House bill provided that in case the person in charge of the sealed car fails to proceed promptly to the port of destination and deliver the merchandise he shall be subject to a penalty equal to the value of the merchandise if subject to duty, or subject to a penalty of $25 if the merchandise is free of duty. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and restores existing law, which imposes a penalty in such case of not more than $1,000 fine or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both, regardless of whether or not the merchandise is subject to duty; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1895: The Senate amends the provision of section 3114 of the Revised Statutes so that it will be applicable to all vessels documented under the laws of the United States engaged in the foreign or coasting trade. The existing statute applies only to such vessels engaged in the foreign and coasting trade on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States, and because of the date on which the section became law it has been construed as not applicable to the coasting trade on the Pacific coast. Section 3115 of the Revised Statutes provides for the remission of the duties imposed under section 3114 where the repairs were necessary to enable the vessel to proceed to her port of destination, and is reenacted without change in order to make certain its application to section 3114 as amended; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1896: Section 481 of the House bill required a consular invoice at the time of entry, or, in the absence of such invoice, a pro forma invoice and a bond to produce the certified invoice. The Senate amendment embodies these provisions in subdivision (b) of section 484, where all of the provisions of law relating to entry of merchandise and the papers or documents required at the time of entry are grouped in one section. Section 482 of the House bill required all certified invoices to be made out in triplicate and to be signed by the seller, manufacturer, or owner. The Senate amendment struck out this section and incorporated its provisions in section 482, so that all provisions relating to the requirements of a declaration before the consul may be found in one section. Section 483 of the House bill related to the disposition of the consular invoice. This section is stricken out by the Senate amendment and included in section 482 for the same reason. Section 484 of the House bill specified the statements to be included in the invoice. The Senate amendment strikes out this section, and its provisions, with certain changes, are incorporated in section 481, which contains all of the provisions relating to the contents of the consular invoice. The House bill only required the invoice to state from whom the merchandise was purchased; the Senate amendment requires the invoice to state in addition the person to whom the merchandise is sold. The House bill did not require a statement of the kind of currency; the Senate amendment requires such statement in the invoice. The Senate amendment also authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to require additional facts if he deems it necessary; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1897: Section 485 of the House bill related to the declaration before the consul. It required a repetition in the declaration of many of the statements required in the invoice. The Senate amendment, in section 482, provides concisely for all of the statements not provided for in the invoice, and then requires a declaration that all of the statements in the invoice and entry are true and correct; and the House recedes with an amendment authorizing the shipper to obtain a quadruplicate copy of the consular invoice, if the merchandise is intended for immediate transportation.

On amendment No. 1898: Section 486 of the House bill attempted to codify various sections of existing law relating to certification before the consul. The section failed to include several provisions relating to the duties of the consular officers. Inasmuch as these matters are within the jurisdiction of the Department of State and are now governed by the regulations of that department, the Senate amendment strikes out this section and restores existing law; and the House recedes with an amendment to conform with the action of the conferees on amendment No. 1897.

On amendment No. 1900: Section 488 of the House bill authorized the collector to require a statement as to cost of production and partially defines cost of production, authorized him to accept such statement in lieu of the certified invoice, and authorized him to require a statement in the case of consigned merchandise by a person other than the manufacturer. The Senate amendment strikes out this section and, in section 484, authorizes the collector or the appraiser to require a statement showing the cost of production; cost of production is defined in section 402; the statement can not be accepted in lieu of the certified invoice, for it does not furnish all of the information necessary; and the authority to require the statement in the case of consigned merchandise is placed in section 481; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1903: The Senate amendment strikes out section 490 of the House bill and places, in section 484, all of the provisions relating to the entry of merchandise which were in sections 481, 488, 490, 491, and 493 of the House bill. The House bill provided merely for a statement in the form of an invoice where the certified consular invoice was not produced. The Senate amendment requires the production of a shipper's or seller's invoice in such cases. The House bill did not specifically except the cases where a formal entry is not possible. The Senate amendment specifically excepts these cases and, in sections 490, 498, 552, and 553 provides for their entry. The House bill required the production of a bill of lading at the time of making entry. The Senate amendment, in subdivision (c) of section 484, authorizes the collector to accept a shipping receipt or other satisfactory evidence in cases where there is no bill of lading, such as shipments by express or parcels post; it also authorizes the collector to accept a bond in cases where a bill of lading has been issued but is not produced at the time of making entry, and provides that any person injured as a result of the delivery may sue directly on the bond. The House bill required statements at the time of entry as to value and classification of the merchandise; the Senate amendment requires these statements in the invoice and authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to require at the time of entry such additional facts as he deems necessary; and the House recedes with an amendment requiring the consignee to make a declaration under oath that he is unable to produce a certified invoice, whenever he makes an entry without such invoice.

On amendment No. 1904: The Senate amendment strikes out all of section 491 and the first paragraph of section 492 of the House bill and incorporates their provisions in section 485, where all of the provisions relating to the declaration at the time of entry are enumerated. Section 491 of the House bill provided for a declaration to be signed by the owner, importer, consignee, or agent, but did not provide for the specific statements to be included within the declaration. The Senate amendment enumerates the statements to be made in the declaration and requires a declaration as to the truth of all statements in the invoice and other documents filed at the time of entry. Section 491 of the House bill authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe regulations for the entry of periodicals, and this provision is placed in subdivision (b) of 485 of the Senate amendment. The House bill also authorized the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce to require statements for statistical purposes. These provisions are eliminated from the declaration and placed in subdivision (e) of section 484, as they relate to entry.

The first paragraph of section 492 of the House bill provided for an owner's declaration in the event that the entry is made by an agent. The Senate amendment includes this provision in subdivision (c) of section 485. Under the present law the consignee is always liable for additional or increased duties, even though he is not the actual owner of the merchandise. The Senate amendment relieves him of this liability if he declares that he is not the actual owner, if he furnishes the name and address of the owner, and if he produces within 90 days a declaration of the actual owner. The Senate amendment also requires separate forms for the declaration in the case of merchandise imported in pursuance of a purchase or agreement to purchase, and merchandise imported otherwise than in pursuance of the purchase or agreement to purchase; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1908: Section 493 of the House bill is stricken out by the Senate amendment and placed in subdivision (f) of section 484, in order that all of the provisions relating to entry may be found in one section; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1910: The House bill, in the provision for a bond for the return of merchandise not sent to the public stores, included a provision that an importer or consignee who desired to make entry but who was not in possession of the invoices and other documents should give a bond for their production. This provision is stricken out by the Senate amendment and included within section 490, in order not to confuse the bond for the return of packages with the bond for the production of missing documents; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1913: The House bill required the bond given for the production of packages to include a condition for the payment of increased or additional duties. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision, for it was a change in existing law and the present practice does not indicate a necessity for it, for the Government is in possession of a sufficient quantity of the merchandise to insure against any failure to pay the increased or additional duties; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1914: The provisions of the House bill are stricken out in conformity with the action of the conferees on amendment No. 1913; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1915: See amendment No. 1854.

On amendment No. 1916: The Senate amendment restores a provision omitted in the House bill authorizing the consignee to make corrections in his entry at any time before the invoice or the merchandise has come under the observation of the appraiser for the purposes of appraisement. This is a reenactment with a slight change of Paragraph I, Section III, of the act of 1913. This paragraph, however, has recently been construed as not giving the privilege to make corrections after the documents have been delivered to the appraiser, and the Senate amendment extends the privilege by the addition of the phrase "for the purpose of appraisement," in accordance with the intent of the original paragraph and with a long-standing practice; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1917: The House bill repealed Paragraph I of Section III of the act of 1913, imposing upon the collector the duty to cause the merchandise to be appraised, and did not contain a substitute. The Senate amendment restores this necessary provision; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1920: The Senate amendment restores the provision of existing law, omitted in the House bill, that the additional duties shall not be construed to be penal; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1921: The Senate amendment restores the provision of existing law giving the Secretary of the Treasury authority to remit additional duties in the case of a manifest clerical error; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1923: The House bill provided that additional duties shall be remitted upon a finding of the Board of General Appraisers that there was no intention to defraud or to conceal or misrepresent the facts, but failed to prescribe the procedure. The Senate amendment authorizes the Board of General Appraisers to prescribe the procedure; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1924: The Senate amendment is a reenactment with a slight change of a provision of existing law creating a presumption of fraud in proceedings other than a criminal prosecution in the event that the appraised value exceeds the declared value by more than 100 per cent; and the House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 1927: The Senate amendment conforms with the action of the conferees on amendment No. 1903; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1928: The Senate amendment strikes out the words "in said pending cases"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 1929: The Senate amendment inserts the authority of the collector to liquidate the entry in accordance with the final appraisement; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1930: The House bill provided for a tentative entry and a tentative appraisement of imported merchandise, to give the importer an opportunity to secure the necessary facts in order to make a proper entry under the American valuation system. The provision is unnecessary because of the change in basis of valuation; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1933: The House bill provided that in case all of the documents were not produced the collector should place the merchandise in a bonded warehouse. The Senate amendment gives the collector a discretion, and he may take a bond to produce the missing documents and permit entry under the provisions of section 484 without sending the merchandise to a bonded warehouse; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1936: See amendment No. 1854.

On amendment No. 1946: The House bill required the collector to destroy all merchandise subject to an internal-revenue tax if he was of the opinion that it would not sell for a sufficient amount to pay such taxes. Section 3368 of the Revised Statutes was recently amended to permit cigarettes and tobacco to be given to hospitals for the use of veterans of the World War.

The Senate amendments retains this provision; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1953: See amendment No. 1854.

On amendment No. 1955: Section 502 of the House bill is stricken out by the Senate amendment and incorporated in section 498, which includes all of the provisions applicable to entry under regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1956: Section 503 of the House bill provided for a bond in the case of entry under regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury. This section is stricken out, and under the provisions of section 498 the Secretary may require a bond under his rules and regulations if he deems it necessary; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1963: The House bill failed to authorize the collector to examine the baggage in order to ascertain whether it contained articles free of duty or prohibited. The Senate amendment vests him with this authority; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1975: Section 506 of the House bill provided for entry under the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury. These provisions are incorporated in section 498, which covers all importations that can not be entered and declared under sections 484 and 485. The Senate amendment also includes merchandise within the provisions of the act of June 8, 1896, which was repealed in the House bill. This act permits the packing in one package of numerous small packages of slight value belonging to different persons; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1983: The House bill did not prescribe a minimum number of packages to be sent to the public stores for examination. The Senate amendment prescribes that not less than one package of every invoice and not less than 1 package of every 10 packages shall be designated and sent for examination unless the Secretary of the Treasury prescribes a lesser number. The Senate amendment also authorizes the collector or the appraiser to require additional packages; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1988: Section 508 of the House bill prescribed the duty of the appraiser. This section is stricken out by the Senate amendment and is incorporated in section 500, where the duties of the appraiser, the assistant appraiser, and examiner are enumerated in conformity with existing law and practice. The Senate amendment also includes a provision of existing law authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to designate an official of the customs as acting appraiser at ports where there are no appraisers; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1990: The House bill did not prescribe the method of filing an appeal for reappraisement. The Senate amendment provides that the appeal must be filed with or mailed to the Board of General Appraisers; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1991: The House bill limited the period within which the collector could appeal to 30 days. The Senate amendment extends this period to 60 days to conform with existing law, as a 30-day period was considered insufficient; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1992: The Senate amendment establishes the date of the appraiser's report as the beginning of the 60-day period, in accordance with the decisions of the board; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1993: See amendment No. 1854.

On amendment No. 1995: The Senate amendment establishes the date of the personal delivery or the date of mailing of the written notice of appraisement as the date on which the 10-day period commences; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 1997: The Senate amendment restores the necessary provision of existing law omitted in the House bill that the consignee must comply with all of the provisions of law relating to the entry and appraisement of merchandise before he can file a valid appeal for a reappraisement; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2006: The present practice has required the production of original documents. The Senate amendment authorizes the admission in evidence of copies of official documents when certified by an official authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2004: The House bill did not permit a review of a decision of a general appraiser except as to the value of merchandise. The Senate amendment is intended to permit such a review, especially of decisions upon jurisdictional questions; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2006: The Senate amendment requires a copy of the application by a collector for a review of a decision of a general appraiser to be mailed to the consignee or his agent or attorney; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2007: See amendment No. 1854.

On amendment No. 2010: The Senate amendment specifically permits argument before a board of three general appraisers; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2017: The Senate amendment authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to disseminate certain information in conformity with existing practice; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2018: The Senate amendment extends the dissemination to information relating to the classification and assessment of duties; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2020: The Senate amendment reenacts a provision of existing law and extends it to include a final decision of the Board of General Appraisers. It prevents the Secretary of the Treasury from reversing or modifying any ruling or decision adversely to the United States, except in concurrence with an opinion of the Attorney General recommending the same or a final decision of the Board of General Appraisers; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2021: The Senate amendment reenacts without change a provision of existing law not included in the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2024: See amendment No. 1854.

On amendment No. 2030: Section 513 of the House bill permitted the abandonment of perishable merchandise only when the quantity to be abandoned was 10 per cent or more of the invoice quantity, and it required delivery to the collector in every instance. The Senate amendment strikes out this section and rewrites it in section 505, permits the abandonment of 5 per cent or more of the total quantity of perishable merchandise, and makes a delivery unnecessary if it is so far destroyed as to be nondeliverable; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2032: The Senate amendment strikes out all of sections 515, 516, 517, 518, and 519 of the House bill and restores existing law because it was deemed impracticable to make a complete codification of the statutes relating to the importation of liquor; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2041: The House bill authorizes inspection of importers' books and imposes an additional duty of 15 per cent in case of failure to permit such inspection. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and inserts the provisions of existing law relating to the inspection of exporters' books and the inspection of importers' books, and authority to prohibit the importation or to withhold delivery of merchandise is given in case of a refusal by the importer; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2042: The Senate amendment strikes out section 524 of the House bill relating to legal tender and restores existing law, as it was deemed impracticable to codify all of the statutes and decisions relating to legal tender; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2053: Title IV applies to decisions of the collector upon the questions not within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury, particularly questions under the navigation laws within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Commerce. The Senate amendment is intended to eliminate all doubt as to the extension of a remedy by protest of matters not falling within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2054: Under the existing law there is no remedy in the event that the importer has made a clerical error, for the remedy is confined to the case of a manifest clerical error. The effect of the Senate amendment permits the filing of protest and a reliquidation of the entry for a clerical error discovered within one year after date of the entry, or within 60 days after liquidation when liquidation is made more than 10 months after the date of entry; and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the phrase "in any entry or liquidation," in order to avoid misinterpretation.

On amendment No. 2056: The House bill changed existing law and required the importer to make additional statements in his protest. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and restores existing law, which has been well defined by decisions; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2059: The Senate amendment permits a protest to be amended at any time prior to the first docket call; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2066: The House bill provided that whenever an American manufacturer or producer should prove that it was impracticable for him to make an importation of merchandise he could appear in any case in which the question was involved, or he could present his facts to the collector, and he was given the right to appeal for reappraisement or to make a protest. The provisions of the House bill were susceptible of doubtful interpretation. The Senate amendment strikes out this section and provides for a more detailed and practical method of getting the facts before the appraising officers. If the American manufacturer, producer, or wholesaler is not satisfied with the appraiser's action, he may, under subdivision (a) of section 516, file an appeal for reappraisement or file a protest under the provisions of subdivision (b). In both instances the action will be taken upon an actual importation. The Senate amendment also assures a proper notice to the opposing parties and assures the privacy of documents and papers; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2072: The Senate amendment authorizes a board of three general appraisers or a general appraiser to obtain analyses of imported merchandise by Government laboratories or bureaus; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2077: The provisions of section 533 of the House bill are stricken out by the Senate amendment and rewritten and rearranged in section 520. The only material change is in permitting a correction in the case of a manifest clerical error within 60 days after liquidation, when liquidation is made more than 10 months after the date of entry instead of within one year after the date of entry; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2078: The House bill was a revision of the existing statute of limitations. No important changes were made, and in order to retain the benefit of numerous court decisions the Senate amendment reenacts existing law, except for the addition of the phrase "after the expiration of 60 days after the date of liquidation when liquidation is made more than 10 months after date of entry"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2079: The House bill provided for the furnishing of information by executive departments and independent establishments. The present practice is operating satisfactorily, and the Senate amendment strikes out this section in order to prevent the assertion of a statutory right to obtain confidential information; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2080: The Senate amendment reenacts without change the provisions of the emergency tariff act relating to the conversion of currency; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2081: The Senate amendment changes the names of the present naval officers to "comptrollers of customs" and defines their duties in accordance with existing practice; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2082: Under the present law reimbursements for labor and services of customs officials are covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The Senate amendment provides that they shall be refunded to the appropriation from which the labor and services were originally paid; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2083: The Senate amendment authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to use, in the District of Columbia, not more than eight customs officials to assist in the enforcement of this act; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2084: A recent decision of the circuit court of appeals holds that existing law does not prevent the importation of merchandise bearing the same trade-mark as merchandise of the United States, if the imported merchandise is genuine and if there is no fraud upon the public. The Senate amendment makes such importation unlawful without the consent of the owner of the American trade-mark, in order to protect the American manufacturer or producer; and the House recedes with an amendment requiring that the trade-mark be owned, at the time of the importation, by a citizen of the United States or by a corporation or association created or organized within the United States.

On amendment No. 2085: The House bill provided for the transportation under bond of merchandise from the port of arrival to another port for entry if the port of destination is shown in the papers. The Senate amendment removes this restriction and permits the transportation to any port which the consignee designates; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2086: See amendment No. 1886.

On amendment No. 2088: See amendment No. 1886.

On amendment No. 2092: The provisions of the House bill were capable of an interpretation conflicting with the navigation laws of the United States. This possible conflict is eliminated by the Senate amendment; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2093: The House bill did not provide for the compensation of the customs officers appointed to supervise the receipt of merchandise into bonded warehouses; the Senate amendment provides that this compensation shall be reimbursed to the Government by the proprietor of the warehouse, in conformity with existing law; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2097: The Senate amendment eliminates the provision of the House bill that merchandise in bonded warehouses must be exported in the original packages in which it was imported to be entitled to a drawback, in order to harmonize with the provisions of section 562; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2098: The Senate amendment permits the destruction of merchandise entered under bond, in order to make it unnecessary to export worthless merchandise to avoid the payment of duties; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2106: In order to prevent the construction under the House bill that wool can not be cleaned in a bonded warehouse, the Senate amendment specifically provides that the scouring and carbonizing of wool shall not be considered a process of manufacture; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2107: The House bill authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to abate or refund duties upon proof of actual injury or destruction by fire or other casualty while in bonded warehouse, or while in transportation under bond, or while in the custody of officers of the customs, although not in bond, or while within the limits of any port of entry and before landing. The Senate amendment transfers this authority from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Board of General Appraisers; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2111: The Senate amendment is made in conformity with the action of the conferees on amendment No. 2107 and prescribes the procedure; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2112: See amendment No. 1854.

On amendment No. 2117: The Senate amendment authorizes officers of the Department of Commerce to board vessels in the enforcement of the navigation laws; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2130: The Senate amendment incorporates the provisions of the "Narcotic drugs import and export act," which became a law after the passage of the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2144: The House bill imposed a penalty of $5,000 upon the person in charge of any vehicle for a failure to make a report or entry or for unloading merchandise before a report or entry. The Senate amendment reduces this penalty to $500, for the penalty of $5,000 is considered excessive; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 2152 and 2153: The House bill imposed a penalty equal to the value of the merchandise upon the master of a vessel who allows merchandise to be unladen within four leagues from the coast of the United States and before the vessel has come to the proper place for discharging the merchandise. The Senate amendment makes this penalty twice the value of the merchandise but not less than $1,000; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 2160 and 2161: The Senate amendments make the penalty twice the value of the merchandise but not less than $1,000, in order to conform with the penalty agreed upon in amendment No. 2152; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2184: The House bill rewrote the provisions of paragraph G of section 3 of the act of 1913. The Senate amendment strikes out this section and reenacts without change the existing law, in order to retain the benefit of numerous court decisions; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2185: The House bill rewrote the provisions of paragraph H of section 3 of the act of 1913. The Senate amendment strikes out this section and reenacts existing law without change, for the reason as stated in the case of amendment No. 2184; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2186: The House bill was a codification of two existing statutes relating to smuggling. The Senate bill strikes out this section and reenacts without change the two sections of existing law, for the reason as stated in the case of amendment No. 2184; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 2187, 2188, and 2189: The House bill is a codification of the statutes relating to searches and seizures. The Senate bill strikes out these provisions in order to restore existing law; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2213: See amendment No. 1757.

On amendment No. 2221: See amendment No. 1757.

On amendment No. 2224: See amendment No. 1757.

On amendment No. 2228: The House bill was a codification of sections 2941 and 3628 of the Revised Statutes. Section 2941 prevents certain officers of the customs from holding a commercial or mercantile position but it does not impose a criminal penalty. The House bill as a result of the codification imposed a penalty of $1,000 or imprisonment for two years. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and restores existing law; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2291: The House bill provided that the collector should have power to adjourn a sale for a period not exceeding 30 days. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision so that the collector will have power to adjourn a sale for any period; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2294: See amendment No. 1757.

On amendment No. 2296: Section 614 of the House bill is a codification of existing law relating to the delivery under bond of vessels, vehicles, and merchandise. The delivery of a vessel is within the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce and is provided for under the navigation laws. The Senate amendment strikes out this section and allows the existing law to stand; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2299: See amendment No. 1757.

On amendment No. 2300: The Senate amendment permits the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer sale to the most advantageous district; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2389: See amendment No. 1757.

On amendments Nos. 2394 and 2395: The House bill limited the compensation to be paid the informer in fraud cases to $5,000. The Senate amendment provides a compensation of 25 per cent of the net amount recovered but not more than $50,000, in order to recover greater amounts in such cases; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2396: Under existing law a bail bond was not considered as a recovery of a fine incurred. The Senate amendment so provides, so that the informer will receive his compensation if the accused forfeits his bond; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2402: The Senate bill increases the penalty because of the increase in the compensation payable under amendments 2394 and 2395; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2404: The Senate amendment restores a provision of existing law giving a civil action to the person who pays a customs officer a portion of the compensation, in order to supplement the criminal prosecution; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2410: The Senate amendment confers general authority upon the Secretary of the Treasury to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2412: The House bill provided that nothing in this act should be construed as repealing any of the provisions of the Judicial Code or of the Criminal Code. The Senate amendment strikes out this section, for some of the provisions of the act do repeal provisions of such codes; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 2415, 2417, 2418, 2419, 2420, 2422, 2423, 2424, 2425, 2426, 2427, 2428, and 2429: Title IV of the House bill contemplated a complete codification of the laws relating to customs administration. Sections 643 and 644 of the House bill repealed the sections of the Revised Statutes and the acts and parts of acts so codified. The Senate amendments abandoned the attempt to prepare a complete code and confined Title IV to a revision, codification, and reprint of the more important customs laws. The Senate amendments strike out the repeal provisions of the House bill and substitute a repeal of the sections of the Revised Statutes and of the acts and parts of acts which are so revised, codified, or reprinted, or which have been superseded, or which are now obsolete; and the House recedes on all of the above amendments except amendment No. 2415, on which it recedes with an amendment inserting certain obsolete sections of the Revised Statutes which had been repealed in the House bill but which the Senate amendment failed to repeal.

On amendment No. 2430: The House bill repealed the act of June 28, 1916, chapter 180, relating to the storing, cleaning, packing, etc., of garbanzos in bonded warehouses, and providing for the compensation of customs officers for services in the supervision of such warehouses. The House bill also repealed Title III of the emergency tariff act of May 27, 1921. The Senate amendment strikes out the repeal of the act of June 28, 1916, and repeals Titles I, III, and V of the emergency tariff act. The House bill in section 320 repealed Title I of the emergency tariff act; and Senate amendment No. 1682 agreed to in conference struck out the repeal of Title I in that section. Title V of the emergency tariff act, known as the dye and chemical control act, was not repealed by the House bill; and the House recedes with an amendment agreeing to the retention of the act of June 28, 1916, and to the repeal of Titles I and III of the emergency tariff act, but with an amendment keeping the dye and chemical control act in effect for one year after the passage of this act and with power in the President to extend its operation for not exceeding one year more in respect to any of the articles specified in paragraphs 27 or 28 of Title I of the bill as agreed to in conference, if he finds in respect to such articles either (1) that the duties specified in such paragraph do not equal the differences in cost of production between domestic and foreign articles, or (2) that an industry in the United States is being or is likely to be materially injured by reason of the importation of any such articles.

On amendment No. 2431: The House bill provided that the provisions of this title are declared to be a revision and codification of the laws modified or repealed and are to be so held and construed. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision because the ordinary rules of statutory construction should apply; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2436: The Senate amendment provides that this act may be cited as the "Tariff act of 1922"; and the House recedes.

J. W. FORDNEY,
W. R. GREEN,
NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. FISH. To make a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FISH. I make the point of order that the conferees have exceeded their authority in including new matter in the bill which was not in disagreement between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will have to be a little more definite as to just what the matter is.

Mr. FISH. I refer to the so-called dye embargo, page 485 of the bill.

Mr. DYER. What is the number of it?

Mr. FISH. It is very difficult to find out in this bill.

Mr. DYER. Can the gentleman give us the number and the page?

Mr. FISH. It is No. 2430.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not quite gather the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. FISH. It is that the conferees have exceeded their authority in including new matter which was not in disagreement between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is on page 485?

Mr. FISH. Yes; amendment No. 2430.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suggest to the Chair, in addition to the point of order made by the gentleman from New York, that there are other points of order that will be made, and I do not wish to lose any right to make them during this discussion. I merely call the attention of the Chair to that fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggests that the gentleman had better reserve the points of order.

Mr. GARNER. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas reserves all points of order on the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in addition to the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], I make the point of order against the language beginning in the last line of page 484 and down to and including the end of line 8, on page 486. I understood the gentleman from New York limited the point of order to page 485?

Mr. FISH. No; I gave the number of the amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. All right.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I think it is desirable to have a quorum here. I should regret in any event there should be necessity for an appeal from the decision of the Chair on a point of order, but that might happen, and it indicates the importance of having a quorum here to listen to the discussion. It is a most important bill, and I think a quorum should be present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 278 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members may have five legislative days in which to print their own remarks on the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that Members may have five legislative days in which to print their own remarks on the tariff bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Reserving the right to object, why not make it 10 days? We are going to be very busy here for the next five days. I do not know that I want to extend my remarks at all.

Mr. FORDNEY. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I will modify my request and make it 10 days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that Members may have 10 days in which to print their own remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, is that 10 calendar days or 10 legislative days?

Mr. FORDNEY. Ten calendar days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, what does the language "his own remarks" mean? Does that prevent a quotation from testimony?

Mr. FORDNEY. It would prevent a long list of newspaper articles.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Would it prevent the insertion of a quotation from testimony?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I think not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A quotation from testimony is not the Member's own remarks.

Mr. FORDNEY. He could make it a part of his remarks.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If you admit that, then you could admit a newspaper article.

Mr. FORDNEY. I think the term "his own remarks" is well understood.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. When the point of no quorum was made a point of order was being discussed. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] to again state his point of order.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the point of order is that the conferees have exceeded their authority by including new matter not in disagreement between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman please state the facts on which he relies.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, this House voted down the dye embargo after a full and fair discussion. The other body also voted down the so-called dye embargo after a thorough debate. There is no disagreement therefore between the two Houses on the question of a dye embargo. In spite of that the conferees have brought back to the House a dye embargo in violation of a record vote of both Houses. The purpose, Mr. Speaker, of the emergency tariff bill, especially section 5 of that bill which was passed in May, 1921, and extended again three months later was to provide protection for the dye industry in this country until a permanent tariff bill had been enacted. As I remember, the wording reads "until otherwise provided for by law." This tariff bill when it goes into effect will be the new law and includes a high rate of protection for the dye industry of America. It is absolutely out of order, being new matter not germane, and in violation of the direct vote of both Houses to include an embargo in the permanent tariff bill. Furthermore, it is against every principle of the protective system.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Speaker of the House should go a long way to carry out the expressed vote of the House and protect the rights, interests, and prerogatives of the membership. For a hundred years or more the Speakers of the House of Representatives have protected the membership from encroachment by the conferees. They have restricted invariably the power of the conferees either to write new legislation into a bill or to inject legislation that is not germane. Never in my short experience in the House has there been such a political trick perpetrated on the membership of this body.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair may interrupt the gentleman from New York, the Chair would like to see if he understands exactly the position of the gentleman. As the Chair understands it, the House left the emergency tariff law with the exception of May 27 untouched.

Mr. FISH. Yes; but the act of May 27 was extended.

The SPEAKER. And it says "shall continue in force until otherwise provided by law." The House tariff bill did not affect that at all.

Mr. FISH. There were two acts—the first act of May 27 extended the embargo three months. That was again extended six months and the words added until "otherwise provided by law."

The SPEAKER. Did the tariff bill which was passed by the House at all affect that? It left it unchanged, did it not?

Mr. FISH. That came later.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but when it did come it left it unchanged?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It did not repeal Title V.

Mr. YOUNG. But it did raise the rates of duties on dyestuffs.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I think I can explain the situation in this way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to have the facts.

Mr. FISH. "Unless otherwise provided by law" seems to me to be perfectly obvious; the purpose of the emergency tariff legislation was that the rates contained therein should remain until a permanent tariff bill was enacted into law. This bill provides as a result of the action of the House and the Senate high protective duties on dyestuffs. When this bill is enacted into law it automatically does away with the emergency act without any reference to the emergency act. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, this is the worst example of the workings of so-called invisible government that I have witnessed since I have been in the House. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing his point of order and that he must confine himself to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Has the gentleman examined the law passed by the House and Senate to determine whether or not by necessary implication it repeals the emergency tariff which the Speaker has referred to.

Mr. FISH. It is not necessary to take that up because the Senate and the House have both passed on this matter of the embargo.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman permit a further question? As I understand it, the gentleman's point is that the law on the statute books is to remain in effect by the terms until otherwise provided for.

Mr. FISH. That is the reading of the law.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. And this section does not mention specifically that law, but passes a law on the same subject. Does that by implication repeal the emergency tariff law?

Mr. FISH. When this bill is written into law it will.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman says that this is the worst illustration of invisible government——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that that question is not in issue.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not the question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. But I have not asked my question yet.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman bases his question on the remark of the gentleman from New York which was not in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. How does the gentleman know that my question is based on that?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Because the gentleman said enough for me to make the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman from Ohio may be an expert and one of the best conferees on dyestuffs, but he can not read my mind.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I am going to try to confine myself to the point of order. I wanted merely to correct the gentleman from New York, if I may, in saying that this is the worst illustration——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already ruled that that is not in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I submit to the Chair that I could not be ruled against before I have stated the question. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I submit that all the precedents by Speakers of this House have been along the line of restricting the power of conferees to write any new legislation or legislation that is not germane, in that way to protect the prerogatives and the rights of the membership. I look to the Speaker of this House to carry out those precedents, and also to carry out the often repeated statement that he believes that the rules of this House were made to protect the rights of the Members of the House [applause]; that he believes that wherever it is possible he should be liberal in protecting the rights and prerogatives of the membership.

What right, Mr. Speaker, had the conferees to take up this new matter? I submit that there are always two sides to a question. You can always find a peg to put your hat on. There is always some quibble that can be raised to make up a case. But you can not, Mr. Speaker, make up a case like this in utter disregard to the wishes of both Houses, because if you did it would be repugnant to the elected representatives of the American people to let six men write a new tariff bill [applause], or to let six men write a new schedule into a tariff bill after that schedule had been expressly repudiated by both Houses. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, there are many precedents I could quote here, one from section 6410 of Hinds', where Speaker Thomas B. Reed ruled as follows:

> It is a well-established principle that no conference committee can introduce a new subject and one that was not in dispute between the two Houses.

All the precedents carry out the proposition which I maintain that the conferees have exceeded their authority by including new matter not in disagreement between the two Houses, and I submit that it is the duty of the Speaker to protect the rights and prerogatives of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is recognized.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, there is one statement that the gentleman from New York made that was correct, and that was that this House, and also the Senate, by a very meager vote, defeated what he styles "the dye embargo." But that is not the subject matter under discussion—the dye embargo, as passed upon either by the House or by the Senate. This is an entirely different subject, the proof of which is that on two different occasions the House and the Senate have by a practically unanimous vote extended the operation of this particular proposition.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon me, I would prefer to continue. On August 24, 1921, by a practically unanimous vote, the Congress extended the provisions of Title V of the emergency tariff law, known as the dye and chemical control act of 1921, for three months; and again, on November 16, 1921, as the gentleman from New York has said, it continued it indefinitely.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Continued it in force until otherwise provided by law. I trust the gentleman will permit me to proceed. The bill as it passed the House in nowise affected the operation of this particular proposition, to wit, the dye and chemical control act of 1921.

The SPEAKER. That is the point the Chair wished to be assured on. The Chair wished to be assured on that fact.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I desire to state the facts in this matter, not to engage in any argument as to whether or not the action of the conferees was right in either one. What I maintain is that the conference committee acted absolutely within its rights.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will allow me to state my proposition, I will proceed. What was done was this: In the House bill the House repealed specifically Titles I and III of the emergency tariff act.

The SPEAKER. Did it affect dyes?

Mr. LONGWORTH. In no respect whatever. Title V, which is the chemical dye control act, was left untouched by the House. The House made no reference whatever to it. The Senate specifically repealed Title V of the dye and chemical control act. Therefore the conferees had entire jurisdiction with regard to Title V, whether it should accept the Senate amendment repealing it or disagree to the Senate amendment by which it would not be repealed, or perfect the Senate amendment by any germane amendment. I call the attention of the Chair to article 539 of the Manuel, which reads as follows:

> The managers of a conference must confine themselves to the differences committed to them and may not include subjects not within the disagreements, even though germane to a question in issue. But they may perfect amendments committed to them if they do not in so doing go beyond the differences.

Now, I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the differences are absolute between the House and the Senate. The House expresses no opinion on Title V and takes no action with reference to it. The Senate repeals it. Therefore the conferees under the law that I have just stated may perfect this amendment if they do not in so doing go beyond the differences.

Now, what did the House do?

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Permit me to finish my argument. The House simply did this: It amended the Senate amendment in this respect: Instead of repealing the law, which we had the right to do, we perfected that amendment. We continued the law in force for one year, with the further provision that the President, in his discretion, might continue that law in force for another year with reference to the articles provided for in pargraphs 27 and 28 of the tariff law. The conferees in no wise exceeded the limits of their powers. They acted specifically within the limits, between taking no action whatever and taking action to repeal the law.

Mr. BURTNESS. Did not the House bill repeal section 5 of the emergency act to the same extent as if it had repealed it specifically?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The only thing that the House bill did was to very slightly raise the existing duties on dyes. It made no provision whatever for the limitation of the importation in any respect.

Mr. BURTNESS. But even if the bill should pass and become a law in the form in which it passed the House, would not section 5 of the emergency tariff act be repealed and be at an end?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Absolutely not.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit me to answer his statement?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No. I will permit the gentleman to ask me a question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is not this a complete answer to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] to the gentleman from Nebraska? The gentleman from Ohio just said that the House bill made no reference to Title V of the emergency act, which is true; but we provided that the act should expire within three months from the time of its enactment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not mean the last enactment, but the original emergency act was for three months.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; the original emergency act was for six months.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Whether it was for three months or for six months is entirely immaterial. The important thing is that the time when it would expire was definitely fixed. The House bill, the one passed July 21, 1921, and which is now here in this conference report, of course, need not provide that it should repeal the emergency act, because every Member of the House or of the Senate knew that the bill could not become law before the time first fixed for the expiration of that act in August, 1921. The emergency act was extended for three months, and in November, 1921, it was extended until "otherwise provided by law." These extensions of time were made with the distinct understanding by both Houses—there is no question about this—that the emergency act should cease absolutely upon the enactment of the permanent tariff law. [Applause.] That is as plain as day.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will answer the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] by saying that if what he says is true about every other article of the emergency tariff law it is not true of Title V, because Title V of itself was extended until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman from Ohio has stated that the emergency tariff law was extended on two different occasions by the practically unanimous vote of this House. I would like to ask the gentleman now if that action was not taken by the House upon the distinct understanding that when the permanent tariff law was enacted it would repeal every item in the emergency tariff bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why, no.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Was not that the distinct understanding?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Absolutely not. The law speaks for itself. I will read to the gentleman what the law says.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I would like to propound another question. The gentleman evidently believes it was the unanimous agreement in the House that the provisions of the emergency tariff bill should be extended indefinitely. If he believes that, I would like to ask him if he would object to a vote by the House upon this proposition?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why, that is absolutely impossible. It is impossible to have a separate vote by the House unless you want to defeat the tariff bill.

Mr. WOODRUFF. It is not impossible, and the gentleman knows very well how it can be done.

Mr. GARNER. This argument is, of course, addressed to the Speaker, and I will try to confine myself strictly to the parliamentary phases of the question. If I understand the contention of the gentleman from Ohio, it is that this amendment was in controversy by virtue of the fact that the Senate repealed Title V of the emergency tariff act. Now, it seems to me that in determining whether there was really any controversy between the two Houses on this point, the query comes whether Title V was not repealed by the House itself when it passed the House bill. Let us see. If Title V of the emergency tariff act was repealed by the House bill, then I think the gentleman's point of order is well taken. On page 486, section 644——

The SPEAKER. Which print of the bill?

Mr. GARNER. The last print; page 486, section 644, of this bill we find the following:

General repeal: All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Now, if the Speaker will turn back to the beginning of this bill and look at the chemical schedule, he will find that Title V of the emergency tariff act is repealed.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman cite the Chair to that?

Mr. GARNER. If some one will hand me a copy of the emergency tariff act I will show that the rates in the emergency tariff act contained in Title V are changed by the provisions of this House bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Surely.

Mr. GARNER. Now, the point which I wish to make to the Chair is this: If the chemical schedule in the House bill repeals the effect of Title V in the emergency tariff act, then the additional repealing of it in the Senate amendment does not make the repeal any more effectual. It only goes to show there is no controversy between the two Houses on the question of the repeal of the dye embargo and therefore the conferees are transgressing their authority when they go out and agree to an amendment which further extends the life of the dye embargo for another year.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am afraid this controversy arises largely because gentlemen have not read Title V of the emergency tariff law, which I shall now proceed to read to the Chair, and show that it is in no way affected by the rate or rates of duty, high or low, provided in the final bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman reads, will he yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman, does he rest his contention as to the conferees having authority wholly upon the proposition of the repeal?

Mr. LONGWORTH. In so far as this specific amendment is concerned.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I mean that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In so far as the point of order made by the gentleman from New York is concerned. But there are a number of other sections which were taken into consideration as affecting the dye schedule. For instance, there is the proposition giving the right to place an American valuation on coal-tar products. We have now extended that to all products, as a germane amendment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I call the attention of the Chair to the provisions of Title V of the emergency tariff act?

SEC. 501. (a) That on and after the day following the enactment of this act, for the period of three months, no sodium nitrite, no dyes or dyestuffs, including crudes and intermediates, no product or products derived directly or indirectly from coal tar (including crudes, intermediates, finished or partly finished products, and mixtures and compounds of such coal-tar products), and no synthetic organic drugs or synthetic organic chemicals, shall be admitted to entry or delivered from customs custody in the United States or in any of its posessions unless the Secretary determines that such article or a satisfactory substitute therefor is not obtainable in the United States or in any of its possessions in sufficient quantities and on reasonable terms as to quality, price and delivery, and that such article in the quantity to be admitted is required for consumption by an actual consumer in the United States or in any of its possessions within six months after receipt of the merchandise.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it makes absolutely no difference what rates may be imposed by Congress upon these products. They may be high or they may be low. The House provided a duty of 7 cents a pound and 45 per cent ad valorem. The Senate bill increased those duties, but whether they are high or low Title V affects them in no particular, and they affect Title V in no particular. When the Secretary of the Treasury under the powers given him in Title V releases these goods from the customs they pay the rate of duty under the law which may exist at that time. It in no way affects its administration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that there is no question of parliamentary law raised there and that it is a question of fact, as it seems to the Chair. The Chair will be glad to hear any answer to the statement just made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. If the Senate had not specifically repealed Title V, and this bill had become a law, would not the embargo of Title V in the emergency act have been repealed?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Absolutely not.

Mr. GARNER. I contend that it would.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It in no way affects the operation of that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear argument on that point.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the emergency tariff act was passed as an emergency measure. I think we will all admit that, and the application of it to the dye industry was due to the emergency then existing. The emergency having passed, Congress undertook to frame a general law applying to the subject matter contained in the emergency tariff. That was done in this House bill, and I undertake to suggest to the Speaker that it can be demonstrated, if we could get the experts who advised in the preparation of this bill, that every provision of Title V, every article prevented from coming into this country by the embargo of Title V has been dealt with in this bill. Now, if every article that was prohibited from coming through the customhouse by Title V of the emergency tariff bill has been dealt with in this bill and a duty fixed upon it, it would undoubtedly repeal the provisions of that bill. That seems to me to be an evident truth, because everything that can be conceived of is covered by the basket clause. The basket clause in any schedule covers everything.

The Chair well knows that in any tariff bill it enumerates everything that can then be thought of, and then to be sure that nothing is left out the framers of the bill put in a basket clause which includes everything. Section 5 of the emergency tariff act applies to the chemical dye industry. This bill deals with that schedule, and after it gets through enumerating the various rates it puts in a basket clause which includes everything the mind can conceive of.

The SPEAKER. Article 5 of the emergency tariff act did not fix the duties.

Mr. GARNER. It dealt with the subject matter of chemical dyestuffs, and the subject matter having been dealt with in this bill, and this bill having a general repealing clause, I think any court in the land would hold that it was repealed.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Would the gentleman hold that Titles IV and V of the emergency tariff act would have the same effect?

Mr. GARNER. I do not remember what Title IV is.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is the antidumping law.

Mr. GARNER. I do not know about that; I do not think it would, because we can have an antidumping law and still not affect the rate of duties, whereas this is an embargo. Now, an embargo having been established prohibiting the bringing through of certain things through the customhouse, this bill says that these articles can be brought through at a certain rate. It seems to me by implication you say that these things can be brought in—enumerated in Title V—at a certain rate. If the articles enumerated include the things covered in section 5 you have repealed the entire law.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the gentleman hold that when you have a law that forbids the importation of anything, and subsequently you fix the rate on those things if imported, that you have repealed the embargo?

Mr. GARNER. I think so.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is not the implication that when the embargo is raised the things imported shall bear the rates of duty prescribed?

Mr. GARNER. The bill does not say when the embargo is raised; it says when they come to the customhouse.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. When imported.

Mr. GARNER. When you bring them to the customhouse you can not bring them in—if the embargo act was not repealed, as you gentlemen contend—and yet you would have the House doing the unusual thing of levying duties on articles which could not be legally imported into the country. I say it would be the duty of the court to construe this law so as to harmonize with any law that is on the statute books, and if it can not be harmonized, then the prior law would be repealed. I suggest to the Chair that if he were the judge on the bench and the question was raised as to whether or not an importer had the right under this bill to bring in any dye product, or if the gentleman from Ohio was on the bench, he would construe this law as repealing Title V of the emergency act, especially as there is a provision repealing all laws in conflict.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Let me say to the gentleman that if I was on the bench I would construe it precisely as I construe it here.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the construction of the gentleman from Texas is correct, the whole provision goes out.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman saying that "bringing something to the customhouse" does not meet the language of the first section of the tariff bill. It describes it in this way, "the articles when imported from any foreign country into the United States"—it does not say brought to the customhouse—shall be admitted, and so forth. It says if they are brought through the customhouse into the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to make a suggestion. Suppose it to be true, as argued by the gentleman from Texas, the Senate thought it was necessary that there should be a repeal of the embargo, and therefore the Senate put in the repeal. And the question is whether any amendment which is germane to that repeal is in order.

Mr. GARNER. The question comes right back as to whether or not the question of an embargo was in controversy between the two Houses. I contend it was not. My contention is that both Houses repealed the dye embargo contained in the emergency tariff act, and therefore on this point there was nothing between the two Houses in controversy.

The SPEAKER. The Senate put the amendment on and the House disagreed to it.

Mr. GARNER. If the House in passing the original bill repealed Title V of the emergency tariff act, then this Senate amendment simply repeats what the House has already done, and hence the two Houses are in agreement on that point and there is no controversy for the conferees to settle.

The SPEAKER. The Senate put it in and the House disagreed to it, and why is it not in controversy?

Mr. GARNER. Because the House had already repealed it in the House bill by means of the general repealing section, and the Senate amendment simply makes more clear what the House has already done. I called attention to this for this reason; I think this is a very important matter. I always want to vote according to what I think is the parliamentary law, and if the question is going to be appealed from the ruling of the Chair I think we ought to have it discussed thoroughly, and I wanted the Chair to understand my point.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield? I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio if, as contended by the gentleman from Ohio, this bill passed by the House did not repeal the embargo, why he urged an embargo on the House when it was before the House? The gentleman's position is different now from what it was then.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the trouble is that Members are confusing arguments on the merits with the argument on the point of order. I am not discussing the merits, and I want to say in reply to the gentleman from Texas that it makes no difference what duties the House may put on, or what duties the Senate may put on, or what duties may be agreed upon in conference. Title V of the emergency tariff act is not inconsistent with any action of the House or any action that the conferees may take. It simply provides as to the administration of the law.

It gives to the Secretary of the Treasury certain discretion as to withdrawals from the customhouse which do not depend upon the question of duty, but merely the ascertainment of whether these imported dyes are directly competitive. When they are withdrawn from the customhouse they take the duties provided in the bill. It is in no degree inconsistent. This proposition is not the dye proposition referred to. It is entirely different.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to answer the question evidently in the Speaker's mind regarding the legislative status. The emergency law has been quoted several times, including the expression that the law shall remain on the statute books "until otherwise provided by law." But that phraseology was not the law at the time that the House passed the tariff bill. The tariff bill was passed by the House on July 21, 1921. The emergency tariff act passed Congress and became a law on May 21, 1921. Now the phraseology of the emergency tariff act as then enacted provided that the embargo therein provided should continue only for a period of three months. The three months would expire on August 21, 1921, so that on July 21, 1921, when the tariff bill passed this House all the House had before it was an embargo limited to continue only for a period of 30 days, an embargo act that would expire by its own terms within 30 days. In that legislative situation an attempt was made here in the House to have the embargo prolonged or made permanent, and the House voted down that proposition. The House when it passed the tariff act could not have included in the tariff act a provision to repeal the prolongation of the embargo because no prolonged embargo existed. It was not until November 21, 1921, four months after the tariff bill passed the House, that this provision "until otherwise provided by law" was placed upon the statute books. There could therefore be no disagreement between the House and the Senate on that question.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, the repealing clause in this bill is as follows: "All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed." The gentleman from Ohio has said this does not affect the embargo provision of the emergency tariff. Now in view of the fact that the House had that question squarely before it and voted down the embargo provision and enacted a tariff provision in lieu of the embargo, and in view of this repealing clause there can be no question that if this embargo act had never been touched by the conferees it would be repealed by the repealing clause of this bill, and if that be true the repeal of Title V by the Senate had no effect and made no controversy between the two Houses. It seems to me clear that the conferees exceeded their authority, and the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I just wish to refer briefly to a question raised by the Speaker. I appreciate the statement made by the Speaker. The question is one of fact, all being agreed on the parliamentary law which restricts the conferees to matters in disagreement between the two Houses. But in deciding that question we look to the substance and not the shadow—to real differences of the thing sought to be done, not to mere differences in phraseology.

The Speaker suggested that the Senate had adopted an amendment which repealed Section V, that the House disagreed to that amendment and sent the bill to conference, and thereby brought about a disagreement. I think that is the thought that was in the Speaker's mind. But the real facts were that the House repealed by implication and by a general repealing section while the Senate specifically repealed Section V, but the two actions were in harmony, not in conflict. Therefore the repeal of Section V by that action of both Houses did not divide the two Houses on the embargo, but only the method of immediately removing the embargo.

That disagreement was one of form and not of substance; and in order to catch that point I want to suggest to the Speaker that the Speaker and other gentlemen have overlooked the effect of the statute that we passed that made the emergency tariff law a permanent law until otherwise ordered. The fact that we said "until otherwise ordered" did not make it different from the usual general statute. What was the effect of that extension of the statute or Title V of the emergency tariff? Title V said that "on and after the date following the enactment of this act," for a specific time, "for a period of three months" or a specifically limited period, "no sodium nitrate," and so forth, going over the whole field of dyestuffs, "should be imported." Now, when we extended that and said that the emergency tariff law shall be permanent law—because that is the effect of it—we changed that provision in Title V. Any court would say that the reasonable effect of that extension of the statute was to change the language, "following the date of the enactment of this act and for three months." The effect was that "hereafter no sodium nitrate," and so forth, should be imported.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the Congress, by extending the emergency tariff law, did something more than extend it. It changed its character from that of an extension of the statute to that of a permanent law. Title V suspended what? The old recognized method of controlling importations of dyes to one of an embargo. Before that the friends of those who believed in the doctrine of protection had contended that you could protect domestic manufactures by rates. But the gentlemen who put on and extended this emergency tariff act said, "The unsettled conditions are such that you can not control them by rates but by an embargo," so you made it permanent law. And any court would have to hold that whenever you said that for an indefinite period of time, until Congress otherwise ordered by a repealing law or an amending law, no substance of the character mentioned should come in, it would be idle to say that there is still in force a statute providing for the rate of duty on their coming in.

What happened? When we took up this bill the emergency act was brushed away. The framers of the bill and the House, by its vote, decided that the emergency had so passed, that we might go back to the old method of protecting American industries, as the friends of protection claim, by levying such rates of duty as would protect American industries. So we have Title I of this bill, paragraph 1, and schedule 1, and so on, covering every conceivable dye substance embraced within Title I. If that is not true I challenge any gentleman to deny it. This is all in specific restoration of the old method of protecting American industries by using specific and ad valorem rates upon each and every dye substance. The gentleman who wanted to continue the embargo raised the question here in the House and said, "No; we will still use the embargo method." But that was voted down. Then what did we do? We took up the schedules, page after page, and covered all these subjects by taking that specific method; that is, by rates clearly, and also by implication, repealing the embargo law.

But the House was not satisfied with that. It put in the final and concluding clause here and said that "All acts or parts of act in conflict with the foregoing are hereby repealed." So we repealed section 5 in two ways. One is by plain, reasonable implication; the other is by the blanket provision, repealing all laws inconsistent therewith, and so forth; and, Mr. Speaker, an absolute embargo is inconsistent with the idea of articles coming in at a specific rate.

When the bill got to the Senate, what did they do? They still clung to the old method, to which the House had returned. They claimed that you can go back to the old method of protecting American industries, so that they took up the sections in Schedule I, item by item. They offered amendments affecting the rates, not the question of embargo. The question of embargo was raised in the Senate, and the vote in the Senate showed, as the House overwhelmingly showed, that the Senate believed we could abandon the embargo method and go back to the rate method; so that when the Senate came to fixing rates it adopted a different method of repealing section 5. It used a different form of legislative expression by specifically stating that section 5 was repealed.

Mr. Speaker, I can not understand how any lawyer could contend that if the Senate had not specifically included in its repeal section 5, but had been content to rest on the implied repeal, there could be any question about the repeal of section 5.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we did formally disagree to the amendment repealing section 5, but it was a disagreement as to the method of repealing and not to the repeal itself, not as to substance but the method of repeal. The minds of both Houses agreed that we repealed section 5, but the Senate said: "The House had not made that specifically clear, and we will make it specifically clear," so that when the conferees came to that they had a disagreement, not to the repeal, but to the method of the repeal; not to the substance of the repeal.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If I understand the gentleman correctly, he says that the emergency tariff was an embargo to prevent the admission of goods into this country.

Mr. WINGO. It was an emergency statute.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is not the gentleman aware that under section 5 a large amount of coal-tar products and dyes are coming into this country and are paying duties under existing law?

Mr. WINGO. That is under an absolute embargo, subject to the terms of the embargo, subject to certain things coming in under that embargo.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Evidently the gentleman has not read it.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, yes; I have read it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is not the gentleman now aware that under Title V a large number of dyes are in fact coming into this country and paying the rates?

Mr. WINGO. I want to meet the gentleman's point. I want to meet the point he makes. The gentleman overlooks this fact, that section 5 is amended by the extension of the statute. I do not think he will disagree with me that the effect of the extension here is to extend.

The gentleman has reference to that provision which reads "that unless the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine that such an article or a substantial substitute therefor is not obtainable in the United States"—that is what the gentleman has reference to, I suppose, and these dye articles come in under that provision. Is not that true?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Surely, they do come in under that provision and pay a rate of duty, and the only difference is that when this provision is passed they will pay a different rate of duty.

Mr. WINGO. I imagine the gentleman will find that there was some difficulty as to just what was the effect of that, but he can not deny that that was an absolute embargo with the right in certain instances to suspend it. But even if the gentleman's contention is correct, I still insist that there was an implied repeal by the House and a specific repeal by the Senate, and the only dispute between the two Houses was as to the form of the repeal and not the substance of it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, emphasizing the view stated by the gentleman on the question as to whether there was a repeal by implication so far as the House was concerned—and that, I understand, is the question——

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that is important, because it seems to the Chair that when the House acted it was going to expire in a month or two, and consequently the House had no occasion to repeal it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Nevertheless, whether the House had occasion to repeal it or not, if the House did repeal it, it was repealed, whether expressly or by implication. Meeting the suggestion that the Speaker made a while ago, the status created by the action of the House was not affected at all by the circumstance that the Senate may have expressly repealed Title V of the emergency tariff act. Now there is just one consideration I can present in a minute or two, with the indulgence of the Speaker, which I think tends to show the fallacy of the argument upon the other side.

This bill passed, I believe, on the 21st of July. It contains numbers of schedules which impose duties upon a great variety of articles, including chemicals. Those chemical products were under an embargo at that time and could not be admitted at all. But the action of the House was to permit their admission subject to certain duties. Suppose that on the 1st of January, 1921, there had been a law enacted forbidding the admission of any and all commodities from foreign countries, placing a general and sweeping embargo upon all commodities, and then in July following we had enacted another statute placing all such articles on the dutiable list or on the free list. If that were the situation, would anybody contend that that subsequent statute did not work a repeal of the embargo statute?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The illustration given by the gentleman was in my own mind. If, instead of putting a duty on all articles which heretofore had been embargoed, you had put a duty upon a number of those articles and then put a basket clause covering the rest of them, could there be any question about it?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Why, you would have a repeal by implication, and there is nothing more familiar to the bar of this country than the repeal by implication. It is the sort of repeal that we are constantly indulging in here, and I respectfully submit to the Speaker that, in my judgment at least, there is no escape from the proposition that there was a repeal by implication when the House passed this bill in July, 1921.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I think it is perfectly clear that Title V is drawn in conference and the report is not subject to a point of order if the Senate repealed that title and the House did not, and it seems to me it is apparent that the House did not repeal Title V. It is claimed that the language is an express repeal. Of course, in a specific express repeal legislative language always designates what is being repealed. The provision of the House bill which reads as follows—

> All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed—is not an express repeal of any specific statute, but is simply a general expression by the legislative body of the implied repeal. Any inconsistent law would have been repealed without this language. Now, there is not an implied repeal unless the provisions are inconsistent, and they must be so inconsistent that the one can not stand if the other stands. If the gentleman's contention were true that the provision of Title V was an absolute embargo, then it could well be said that legislation which fixed rates of duty on that schedule would be inconsistent with an absolute embargo. But Title V is not an absolute embargo. Title V can stand and still the schedule may stand. If the two can possibly stand together then there is no repeal by implication, and it is absurd to say that you can not have a provision of the law which provides for a qualified embargo by which, under certain circumstances, the articles may come in, and at the same time have a law providing for duties on those articles if they do come in. They are not at all inconsistent provisions. So, Mr. Speaker, aside from the point made by the gentleman from New York, which I think is conclusive, that the House could not have had in mind the repeal of the permanent provisions of Title V, because they were not in existence at that time, and hence the action by the Senate on a bill passed subsequent to the action of the House must bring it into conference. Aside from that point, I think it is perfectly clear that the provisions of the House bill did not repeal Title V.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In fact, if there was not a provision with reference to rates of duty to accompany Title V, all of those articles would come in absolutely free.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Which certainly neither the Senate nor the House ever intended.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Which shows that it was not an absolute embargo.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. How can the Speaker or any Member of the House ignore the action that the House took in voting down the recommendation of the Committee on Ways and Means against the continuation of an embargo? If the Speaker will permit me——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to state that he has no doubt about the fact. The question is as to the legal point involved.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The language of the act itself determines the fact.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair will permit me——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. In considering this question the Chair must take into consideration the action of the House in passing the emergency tariff act. So far as Title V is concerned, it was an embargo. The House extended it three months from May 22, 1921. Why did it extend it? Because the Ways and Means Committee had not as yet reported the permanent tariff act that was to take its place. Then it extended it another six months. Why did it extend it another six months? Because the Senate had not acted upon the permanent tariff act that was to take its place. Then it extended it indefinitely. Why? Because no one could tell at that time when the Senate was going to take action on the permanent tariff schedules which were to take the place of the embargo feature. Now, the House, without any question at all, asserted itself positively against the embargo policy and in favor of the tariff provision. The Senate did likewise. The House, in ample protection to itself, put in the basket clause eliminating the embargo feature. The mere fact that the Senate particularized by repealing Title V specifically did not place within the power of the conferees the authority over that which the House had positively by its action refused as the policy of the House. It is quibbling to say that the conferees have the right, after the House has taken a definite stand, to revise something which the House had positively rejected. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree with the argument made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS]. While the argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] was logical and conclusive, I think he went rather further than it was necessary to go. I think his argument proved conclusively that not only was there a difference between the two Houses which it was the duty of the conferees to adjust, but that if you consider the question of implied repeal, there was no implied repeal, and therefore even from that viewpoint the conferees were within their rights. The Speaker does not sit as a judge to determine as to the proper interpretation of the statute in the matter of implied repeal.

The Speaker must pass on the matter as presented to him clearly in the action of the two Houses and of the conferees. Now, what are these facts? The House took no definite action with regard to Title V of the emergency tariff act. The Senate specifically repealed Title V. Therefore it was the duty of the conferees to adjust that difference—clear, definite, and unquestioned. What was to be done? The conferees had full authority to adjust the difference thus presented, and they did it by amending the Senate provision of repeal through a modification of Title V. Clearly they had a right to do that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, going beyond that clear and definite question, which is the only question before the Speaker, if the Chair will allow me just a moment, may I take up the other question which is not directly involved, but has been referred to several times, to wit, the statement that the House had by vote definitely declined to agree to a provision similar to that now presented by the conferees, and that likewise the Senate had taken such action. That is not true, Mr. Speaker. The proposition presented here was quite different from Title V. We have no means of knowing, we could not judge by what was said or what was done when that amendment was before the House, what action the House might have taken if what is now proposed was before the House. And the same is true of the Senate. I do not recall the provision of the Senate proposal touching this matter which was voted down, but I do know that it is quite different from the proposition now presented by the conferees.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And quite different from the House provision?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; quite different from the House provision. Therefore, assuming for the sake of argument that that action of the two bodies was before the Chair for decision, which it is not—assuming that was true, the conferees would still have been well within their rights, for the House has not passed directly or even indirectly upon the matter now presented by the conferees. It is clearly an attempt on the part of the conferees to bridge the difference between the two Houses, to bring the two Houses together, one having repealed and the other having failed to repeal a certain provision of the statute.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. If I have the floor.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman point out the radical difference between the embargo that was voted down in the House and the Senate?

Mr. MONDELL. There has been a great deal said about an embargo; Title V is not an embargo. A great many people have one time and another been misled by catchwords. Title V is not an embargo. Title V is a provision of law under which importations can only be made under certain conditions, and when articles are imported—and they are imported in large amounts—they pay the rate of duty provided by the law.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. MONDELL. There is a radical difference. The amendment referred to provided for reference to one of the Federal boards of the question of dyestuffs and their cost; it involved much more than is involved in the proposition now before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The difference in question between the House and the Senate was that the Senate adopted an amendment explicitly repealing the so-called dye embargo law, and there was no such provision in the House bill. The conferees agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment limiting the repeal, so that the law should continue for one or for possibly two years. Now, on the surface no one would deny that was within the power of the conferees. The Senate having made an absolute repeal, the conferees limited that repeal and allowed the law to continue in effect for one or, with the consent of the President, for two years. So, technically and on the face of it, obviously it was in order.

Against that the argument has been made—and, by the way, the Chair would like to allude to the fact that it was urged on the Chair that he ought to protect the rights of the membership of the House. What protects the rights of Members is the law; the main purpose of parliamentary law is to protect the rights of the minority, and what Members look to the Speaker to do is to interpret the law according to precedent and logic. Of course, in this case or any other the majority does not need protection, because it is within the power of the House to vote this up or vote it down. The conference report is in the hands of the House. The House is not obliged to accept it if it does not approve of it. So obviously the Chair in his ruling does not limit the power of the House.

While recognizing that conferees must not exceed their authority, a Speaker would always wish that fact to appear very clearly before he so decided, and thereby sent the whole bill back to conference again, particularly an enormous bill like this, where the differences between the two Houses are so numerous. The Chair will endeavor in his ruling to be influenced only by the law and not by the results it will bring, and, of course, the same obligation is on every Member.

As the Chair has stated, it is clear that technically the conferees were within their rights. The agreement of the conferees was to delay the repeal for one year, a limit on the Senate amendment, which absolutely repealed; so the amendment was germane; it limited the Senate repeal instead of extending it, and on its face was clearly within the right of the conferees.

Against that the argument is made that the House in another section had accomplished the same result which the Senate did by their clause, when the House repealed all acts inconsistent therewith.

Now, it is not for the Chair to go into the intention of the House except as indicated by its action, although the Chair has a very definite opinion on that subject. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FAIRCHILD] suggested that when the House passed the section for general repeal it could not have referred to the embargo, so called, because at that time the embargo by law would automatically die of itself within a month or two. But, even if that were not true, the argument the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] so forcefully made, it seems to the Chair, is conclusive, that this embargo is only a conditional embargo, that goods can be brought in under it, have been brought in under it, and when brought in paid the duty which the law provides, and therefore, even if the embargo were to continue, the House might have wished to change the duty and probably would. A repeal by implication must be clear; when the House passed its general repealing clause no repeal of this embargo seemed necessary, and changes in the dye duties were not inconsistent necessarily with a continuance of the embargo. So it seems to the Chair that the Chair is sent back to the original proposition, Is this amendment which the conferees have agreed upon germane to the Senate amendment? In that it seems to the Chair there can be no difference of opinion, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman from New York desires to move to appeal, I will yield, but I have another point of order——

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair and ask for a roll call.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the gentleman from Wyoming moves to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. FISH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. On that the gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays. Obviously there is a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered. The question is on laying the appeal upon the table.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 147, not voting 130, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, we are all personally fond of the gentleman from Michigan. I think we all have a kind place in our hearts for him. I know that I have. He has his faults and I have mine; we all have them; but with it all JOE FORDNEY is a good, honest man with a big heart and a lovable disposition. [Applause.] But if this tariff bill is the result of his prayers, as he touchingly related in his speech [laughter], I fear the throne of grace has been bankrupted in answering them. [Laughter.] It would certainly take an inexhaustible supply of grace to condone all the evils of this bill.

What is the result of the action of the conferees in reference to the Senate amendments? The Senate receded from amendments 71 times. The House receded from its disagreement to amendments and agreed to the Senate amendments 2,061 times. The House receded from its disagreement to Senate amendments and agreed to the same with an amendment 304 times. The total receding on the part of the House is 2,365, as compared with 71 recessions on the part of the Senate! I want to call attention to the deductions to be drawn from this result. The Senate of the United States gave lengthy and extended consideration to this tariff legislation. For the first time probably in the history of the country the Senate went into the technical details of a tariff bill and undertook to master the various rates and the effect they would have. No such careful and deliberate consideration was given to the bill in the House. In the House, under your special rule, you took from the Members the opportunity to consider the bill in an intelligent way, only permitted a few amendments to be voted upon, and the result was that the Senate had to perfect the measure, and when you came to consider the Senate amendments the House conferees were convinced that their bill was imperfect, so imperfect that they had to yield to the United States Senate conferees on more than 2,300 amendments.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. In a moment. I want to say to Republicans who have some independent spirit left, will you continue to pass important bills like this tariff bill in the House under rules that prevent the House from considering it intelligently? If I ever have the honor of directing the making of a tariff bill from the standpoint of a Democrat I am going to bring it in here and pass it like it should be passed, with an opportunity for the House to vote upon each and every amendment. [Applause upon the Democratic side.] That is the way that a great representative body like the United States House of Representatives should legislate, not like a man gagged and with both his hands and feet tied.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I do.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is surely aware of the fact that the Senate had this bill last and after they passed it the House disagreed to all the Senate amendments and asked for a conference. Owing to the change in reference in the valuation basis, even where the Senate receded in fact, the rules required the statement that the House receded.

Mr. GARNER. Let me tell you what happened. I want somebody to deny it. This bill was considered in the Senate paragraph by paragraph and section by section. No such opportunity was given to the House to consider it in that way, and that is what I am complaining about. The Constitution of the United States says that all bills to raise revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives. And certainly the legislative body which originates a bill is one which should give it the most careful consideration. This was not done when the bill was before the House, and I vigorously protest against such strait-jacket methods. It is undemocratic, unjust, and unfair.

Now, such a conference report as we now have before us is what happens, gentlemen, whenever you turn over to six conferees, three on the part of the House and three on the part of the Senate, the task of framing and agreeing on a tariff bill from the partisan standpoint. We Democrats on this side of the House asked you, when the bill came back from the Senate, to give us an opportunity to consider some of these amendments, did we not? I stood upon this floor and pleaded with you to vote down the special rule and let us have a chance to consider these amendments, to agree to some of them, to give instructions as to others, and to disagree to still others, but you did not do it. The lash of the party whip was put upon our backs and you put your necks in the halter of six conferees when you knew that one of them would hold sugar in one hand and one dyestuffs in another and trade for the benefit of those questions the country's interests.

The regular rules of the House of Representatives, gentlemen, are good rules. They are rules that have grown up from a hundred years of parliamentary experience in this country. I have defended them; they are good rules. It is the violation of these rules, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], that puts the House in the position it found itself in to-day when it had to appeal from the decision of the Chair as a means of venting its indignation against the conferees for going out and agreeing to an extension of a dye embargo, when the House itself, by a record vote, had stricken out the embargo provisions when the bill was before the House several months ago.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman does not charge me or the Committee on Rules with violating the rules of the House? No rule has ever been——

Mr. GARNER. No. What I am charging the Republican members of the Rules Committee with is bringing in special rules which are arbitrary and restrictive. You do not violate the rules of the House in a technical sense. The rules of the House permit you to bring in a special rule. But in doing so you suspend the regular rules of the House, and I think in many instances in a very unwise manner. These House rules are good rules, but you go out after the steering committee has given you instructions and bring in a rule to suspend the regular rules of the House and put the House in a straitjacket. Let me say, to the gentleman's credit, that I do not think he moves until they tell him to move. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GARNER. I give the gentleman from Kansas credit for party regularity, to move only when his party requires him.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The party in control of the House during the time the Republicans have had control have adopted special rules, just as was done when the Democrats had control of the House, for the consideration of bills of every character.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Kansas makes a plea of confession and avoidance. We Democrats brought in special rules, but not special rules taking from the membership of the House the right to offer amendments to the Underwood tariff bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Let the RECORD show that. You Republicans would not let us consider the Fordney bill, and even went so far as to specifically provide what amendments we could vote upon, but we provided that you could consider in the House the provisions of the Underwood bill with the utmost liberality.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Underwood bill was considered under a caucus rule, whereas the Fordney bill was considered under a rule of the House of Representatives. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARNER. We Democrats go into caucus and decide our policy and make the issue and then give the House the utmost liberality to express its wishes. You go into conference and, cowardlike, say: "Let us not give them a chance to make an issue. We will bring in a special rule and cut them off." That is the difference between the way Democrats do things and the way Republicans do them.

Mr. Speaker, I wish we had time to discuss the effects of this bill, some of the results of the agreements made in conference. That is impossible in the limited time we have, so that we can only sketch here and there.

Outside of being the highest tariff bill ever passed by the American Congress, it has some legislative provisions that are the most far-reaching of any ever placed on the statute books of this country. There is a departure of governmental policy involved in this bill that ought to arrest the attention of every patriotic Republican in this House. I undertake to say that, as an original proposition, if you were to put it up to the Republican mind in this country—whether it be the mind of a layman or a politician or a statesman—if you put up to him the proposition, Are you willing to place in the hands of the President of the United States the power to levy taxes, the power to destroy, the power to build up, the power to change from American to the foreign valuation? you would get an emphatic negative answer. We have been complaining, and people throughout the country have been complaining, of bureaucratic government, and yet you create in this bill the most drastic and far-reaching and effective bureau in the history of the Government. And into whose hands are you going to place it? Of course, you gentlemen place it in the hands of the President of the United States; there is where the law says it will go. But as a matter of fact it will really rest in the hands of the Tariff Commission. The President must get information and advice upon which to act, and that means he must act on the advice of the Tariff Commission.

I believe that is correct, is it not? I will ask the gentleman from Ohio, Does not the Tariff Commission first have to act in the premises before the President can take action?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It does. And may I suggest to the gentleman that it will not necessarily raise the tariff, but that the President is given the right to lower the tariff.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, yes, he has the right to lower the tariff and destroy business, as you Republicans would say, because you say that if tariff rates are lowered it will destroy business. I can prove that by the gentleman from Michigan or any other high-tariff man in the country.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Texas does not object to that, does he? [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. I object to placing in the hands of one man the power to increase the taxes of 110,000,000 people. Does the gentleman favor that?

Mr. MADDEN. I am going to vote for this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman is evasive. He will not answer my question. He is like every other Republican. He knows when to get under cover. But you have got to have something in this bill so that you can go back home and tell your people that by this bill the tariff is going to be lowered, because the President is going to lower it. Ninety per cent of you Republicans are going back home and tell your constituency, "We have put this clause in here because as quick as Mr. Harding finds out that these rates are too high he is going to lower them." About 10 per cent of you, like my friend from New York [Mr. CROWTHER], will go back and say, "Boys, just as quick as we get this thing fixed up, Warren is going to raise the rates." That will be catching them "gwine and coming." That is, if it will work. But it will not work. The American people have not had their brains "blown away." They will know how to administer the proper chastisement to a party which will fasten upon them an iniquitous tariff bill like this. The November elections will disclose that.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Wait a minute. I did not intend to get a rise out of the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. CROWTHER. I should like to see the rates raised instead of lowered when it comes to protecting American industries.

Mr. GARNER. I just said that about 90 per cent of you Republicans are going to say that the President is going to lower the rates, but the other 10 per cent of you will say that he is going to raise them.

Mr. CROWTHER. I am a protectionist, and I want them raised. I do not want them lowered.

Mr. GARNER. I know that, but if you are through now——

Mr. CROWTHER. No; I am not through.

Mr. GARNER. I can not let you have the floor. You have got to get your time from Mr. FORDNEY. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that I understand his position. If there is a man in this House that can outrival Mr. FORDNEY in the way of putting the tariff wall too high, it is the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CROWTHER. I am very proud of that, too.

Mr. GARNER. Wait a minute.

Mr. CROWTHER. Nothing can be too high to protect American industry against foreign industry, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. GARNER. Let me suggest that the gentleman get five minutes from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. CROWTHER. It will take longer than that to answer the statement of the gentleman from Texas. Anybody who could correct the misstatements which the gentleman has made would be doing pretty well to do it in five minutes.

Mr. GARNER. I expect I would have to talk a good long while before I could convert the gentleman from New York, so I will abandon the attempt and further address myself to this presidential rate-making provision and the Tariff Commission. I do not know the Tariff Commission personnel very well, but I do know some of those gentlemen, and since they have been placed in a very responsible position by this bill I do not think it is out of place to digress for a few moments and discuss a circumstance which has come to my attention. I have received, as every other Member probably has received, a communication touching certain provisions of this bill relating to chinaware, in which one of the members of the Tariff Commission is mentioned.

If this statement made—mark the statement I make now, because I know this gentleman and I think he is an honest man. He is a high protectionist. He has represented many industries in this country in the Capitol in the matter of taxation before he went on the Tariff Commission.

If the statements contained in that communication are true—and I will put the communication in the RECORD—he is subject to severe censure.

Mr. KINDRED. Who ought to be?

Mr. GARNER. I will put the statement in the RECORD, and then you can see the statements which are made for yourself.

If they are not true, somebody on the floor of the House, one of the conferees, ought to show that this statement is not true.

Mr. MADDEN. Why does not the gentleman specify?

Mr. GARNER. All right; I will do it. I said I would put the statement in the RECORD. It is in reference to the pottery industry. The gentleman knows to whom I refer, does he not? I said "if it is true." I do not say it is true. If it is not true, Mr. GREEN, or Mr. LONGWORTH, or Mr. FORDNEY ought to tell us about it.

Mr. CROWTHER. Why does not the gentleman find out whether it is true or not before he puts it in?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, this is a communication sent to Members of Congress, and it says this:

A CONCRETE EXAMPLE OF HOW THE M'CUMBER-FORDNEY TARIFF, FRAMED AND FOSTERED BY MILLIONAIRE SENATORS, DISCRIMINATES AGAINST THE COMMON PEOPLE.
